UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1944

1944-45

SPECIAL ISSUE FOR OFFICIAL UNIVERSITY ANNOUNCEMENTS

A Message From The President

In a mood of fresh confidence and hope, we begin another academic year. Five years ago we had entered upon a second grim world war in defence of the old issues of freedom, justice, mercy and truth. The British Commonwealth and Empire had joined with France in preparing to withstand the monster which had leaped upon Poland. Four years ago, after the fall of France, the British Commonwealth and Empire stood alone against the would-be conquerors of the world. The hour of deadly peril passed; the United States of America and Russia came into the struggle; and at long last today the cordon about Germany becomes visible. The end of the beginning has become the beginning of the end. The Day of Judgment for the evil-doers and their barbaric pedagogy is at hand.

Naturally the more energy and resource we throw into our war effort, the speedier and more complete will be the victory. The war is not yet over. Still must we stand fast and strike hard. All our university arrangements must be made against the background of the war. Certain inconveniences inevitably persist; but how comparatively slight they are!

Most heartily I welcome those who enter for the first time our halls, our laboratories, our libraries. The first year is a time of readjustment to new conditions of study, and of forming new friendships. I welcome back those who have already begun their university courses. They can speedily settle down to regular work. On account of war conditions it is harder than usual to find sufficient and suitable living accommodation. Residences seem to be full. The Students' Administrative Council will help you to find good lodgings.

After consultation with the officials of the Toronto Transportation Commission we find it necessary to continue last year's hours, viz., from 8.30 to 4.30. We all hope that this will be the last year in which these hours must be observed.

As in past years, the academic work is combined with military training. In this number of The Varsity you will find the particulars for the Navy, the Army, the Air Force, and the Women's National Service Training, and you will register for that branch of the Services which you prefer. The general regulations are substantially the same as those of last year. The fundamental element in all this training is physical, mental and moral fitness. This is a contribution you can make to your country in peace as well as in war.

It is a privilege at any time and especially in these times, to attend a university; it is a great responsibility, too. Make the best use of this opportunity, physically, mentally, socially and spiritually. "Be prepared," as the Boy Scout motto puts it, for the world after the war by efficient doing of present duties. That "new world" will, we trust, be an organized world, a world at work, and a world built upon the best of the past. In any case you will be one of the "living stones" in the structure.

REGULATIONS OF THE BOARD OF GOVERNORS RESPECTING MILITARY TRAINING FOR THE SESSION 1944-45

1. As National Selective Service grants postponement of military service to students of the University only on condition that they undergo compulsory military training while at the University, of a standard recognized by the Department of National Defence, all male students, both undergraduate and graduate, except as noted in Section 2 below, whether or not they are British subjects, will be required to take training in the University Naval Training Division, in the Canadian Officers Training Corps, or in the University Air Squadron.
2. The undermentioned categories of students will not be required to take military training in the University.
 - (a) Students who are on active service, or who have been discharged from active service.
 - (b) Students who are receiving training outside the University as members of Reserve Units of the Canadian Navy, Army and Air Force.
 - (c) Students enrolled in the Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Years of the Faculty of Medicine.
 - (d) Students who are certified by the University Health Service to be physically unfit for military training.
3. All students who are required to take military training in the University will register not later than 12 noon on Saturday, September 30th, 1944, with the University Naval Training Division, with the First or Second Battalion, Canadian Officers Training Corps, or with the University Air Squadron, according to directions published elsewhere in this issue.
4. Students who claim exemption from military training under Section 2(b) or on any other ground will apply for this exemption at the office of the University Registrar not later than October 7th, 1944.
5. Any student who is required to take military training under Section 1 above, and who fails to comply fully with the regulations respecting such training, may be ordered, on the recommendation of the Court of Discipline, to withdraw from the University.

University of Toronto Health Service

PHYSICAL EXAMINATION

The Health Service conducts a medical examination of each student every year. Men are examined at 43 St. George Street. Women are examined at 44 Hoskin Avenue.

First Year Students must make immediate appointments for their examination.

Second and Higher Year Students must make their appointments before October 14th, 1944. No student can take part in University Athletics until he has been examined and declared physically eligible by the Health Service.

X-RAY EXAMINATION OF THE CHEST

All first and final year students in all faculties are required to have an X-ray of the chest as part of their medical examination. This examination will begin on October 10th, 1944 and appointments must be made immediately at the Health Service Office.

The X-ray will be taken in the X-ray department of the Ontario Department of Health, Basement, south-west corner, east block, Parliament Buildings. Enter the building by the south door, turn left to the end of the hall and go downstairs.

It is important that the student be on time for the appointment.

INFIRMARIES

The Health Service infirmaries are now open. The infirmary for women is in the Women's Union, University College. The infirmary for men is on the third floor, West Wing, Hart House.

These infirmaries are intended for students suffering from minor illnesses requiring bed care for a period of a few days to a week and are primarily for students in residence or lodgings for whom such care is not otherwise readily available.

Students will be admitted to the infirmaries on the authorization of the medical staff of the Health Service.

While in the infirmary a charge of $1.50 per day, payable to the Bursar of the University, will be made to cover the cost of meals, etc. No charge is made for medical and nursing care.

CONSULTATION FACILITIES

Consultation Facilities are available from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at 43 St. George Street for men and at 44 Hoskin Avenue for women. House calls to students sick in lodgings will be made on request. A nominal charge is made for these visits. First aid attendants are on daily duty at 43 St. George Street and from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. at Hart House for men. A nurse is in attendance at 44 Hoskin Avenue for women.

ATHLETIC INJURY CARE

The Health Service provides a measure of financial assistance toward the cost of the care of injuries sustained while engaged in athletic activities on the campus. Such assistance is provided only on the authority of the Director. This authorization MUST be obtained by the injured student at the earliest opportunity. Failure to obtain such authorization renders the student liable for any expense he may incur.

X-RAY EXAMINATIONS

All Faculties --- First and Final Year

X-ray examinations begin October 10th. Secure your appointment at once.

Women—44 Hoskin Avenue.
Men—43 St. George Street.

President's Opening Address

The opening address by President Cody to the students of all faculties will be given in Convocation Hall on Wednesday, September 27th, at 3.45 p.m.

NAVY

University Naval Training Division

Area Commanding Officer.....A/Commander J. J. Connolly, R.C.N.V.R.
 Commanding Officer.....Lieut. Cndr. (SB) D. A. F. Robinson, R.C.N.V.R.
 Divisional Officers.....Lieutenant C. C. McGibbon, R.C.N.V.R.
 Lieutenant L. Hynes, R.C.N.V.R.

REGISTRATION

All students, registered in the University of Toronto for the academic year 1944-45 (other than Medical and Dental students) may register for consideration as entrants into U.N.T.D. at Ship's Office, Hart House, between 0900 and 1700 25th September to 29th September, and 0900 and 1200 30th September. Students, now members of the C.O.T.C., wishing transfer to U.N.T.D. may register as above but will first register with the 1st Bn. C.O.T.C. Before final enrolment in U.N.T.D. they must secure their discharge from the C.O.T.C.

Students, registered in U.N.T.D., may be attested and, subject to naval medical examination, be taken on Divisional Strength of H.M.C.S. "YORK" as ratings of the University of Toronto, U.N.T.D.:

(i) With respect to students registered in Mechanical Engineering, Electrical Engineering, Engineering Physics, and Mathematics and Physics, as stokers second class.

(ii) With respect to all other students as Ordinary Seamen.

It should be understood that students, joining U.N.T.D. are definitely attested to the Navy. They are subject to active service call but this call will be delayed subject to the exigencies of the service, until the student graduates or leaves the University. All students, joining U.N.T.D. are attested subject to the provisions of P.C. 246 1943 which means that all science students are subject to the action of the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel for final disposition. Students going on Active Service at the end of the academic year may have the opportunity of appearing before a selection board for possible selection as officer candidates within the limit of the needs of the service at that time.

TRAINING

Training will be progressive in character from year to year. Training for the first year will cover the initial training of new entries into the Navy and will also include much additional background material such as Naval terms, traditions, and customs, parts of ships and organization of ships' companies, Naval strategy and tactics, Naval Law, and many others. In addition to training during the academic year, two weeks training under Active Service conditions will be given, it is expected, at an east coast Naval training establishment, and this will include sea time. This period follows closely the completion of the University's spring term examinations.

Members of the U.N.T.D. going on Active Service at the end of the academic year will receive credit for the initial training referred to above.

All ratings will attend all parades. Leave may be granted for medical or emergency reasons, but this time must be made up.

SHIP'S OFFICE

The Ship's Office of the U.N.T.D. is located in Room "A," Hart House, where complete information may be obtained.

BANDSMEN ATTENTION

The University of Toronto Contingent, COTC Band and the Pipe Band will be organized again for the coming year. All previous members of either Band who wish to continue with that Band, and any male undergraduate, including freshmen, who are interested in playing in either Band will complete their military registration under the rules governing all students. In addition, they will make application for membership in the Band of their choice.

COTC Band—1st Bn. H.Q., 119 St. George St.
 Pipe Band—2nd Bn. H.Q., Hart House.

Both Bands have room for new members and organization will begin immediately. Members of the COTC Band must be able to play some Band instrument. Members of the Pipe Band will be given instruction in the playing of the Pipes or Drums.

ARMY

Canadian Officers Training Corps

Staff of Contingent

Honorary Colonel.....Col. H. J. Cody, C.M.G., E.D.
 Commanding Officer.....Lt.-Col. H. H. Madill, V.D., m.s.c.
 Second in Command.....Lt.-Col. W. S. Wilson, E.D.
 Adjutant.....Major H. C. H. Miller
 Quartermaster.....Capt. C. A. Johnston
 Medical Officer.....Major J. L. McCollum, R.C.A.M.C.
 Chaplain.....Capt. W. C. Lockhart, C.C.S.

General Information

The role of the C.O.T.C. is to give military training to physically fit male students as required by the N.R.M.A. and the Board of Governors of the University.

Students who show that they have the qualities required of an Army Officer may be recommended to proceed to Advanced Training Centres as potential officer material for the Active Army. At Advanced Training Centres "due regard will be given to previous training and experience".

ORGANIZATION

For administrative and training purposes the Contingent is organized into two battalions.

All students who are taking military training in the C.O.T.C. for the first time, except those who have had at least one year's training in a Reserve Unit, are enrolled in the 2nd Battalion.

All other students, except some N.C.O.s in 2nd Battalion, are enrolled in the 1st Battalion.

ATTENDANCE AT PARADES

All members must attend all parades of their companies. Leave may be granted for medical or emergency reasons but time lost must be made up by attending special parades.

REGISTRATION

All members of the 1st or 2nd Battalions of the C.O.T.C. during the session 1943-44, will register at Cont. H.Q., 119 St. George St., between 25 and 30 Sep. 44, during the following hours:

Monday to Friday—9.30 a.m. to 12 noon.

1.30 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Saturday—9.30 a.m. to 12 noon.

All students who have not previously taken military training in the C.O.T.C., except those who have completed one year's training in a Reserve Army Unit, will register at 2nd Battalion HQ, Hart House.

Students must have their University and National Registration cards with them at the time of registration.

Registration for military training must be completed by 1200 hours 30 Sep. 44.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

All certificates of summer employment must be returned to 1st Battalion HQ not later than 26 Sep. 44.

UNIFORM AND EQUIPMENT

All members are financially responsible for all articles of army clothing and equipment issued to them.

REGIMENTAL ORDERS

Regimental Daily Orders appear in The Varsity from time to time. It is the responsibility of all members to be personally familiar with the contents of these orders.

PHYSICAL TRAINING

The Physical Training in the First and Second year syllabus is taken during the PT periods in the academic time-table under the direction of the Athletic Department in Hart House.

INSTRUCTION

The training for students enlisted in the U.A.S. is essentially that given to airmen of the R.C.A.F. at Initial Training Schools. The course at the University will extend over four years, camp instruction for two weeks being given at convenient times during the summer months in order to cover work not taken during the academic session.

SUBJECTS

The course which includes a certain amount of drill covers the following interesting subjects: Theory of Flight and Engines, Air Navigation, Signals, Meteorology, Aircraft Recognition, Administration, Mathematics, Armament, etc. The time-table for instructional periods will be drawn up to fit the allotted hours for all military training.

TRAINING CREDITS

Airmen of the U.A.S. who obtain an overall average of 60 per cent on examinations with not less than 50 per cent on any one paper, will receive special recognition on transfer to aircrew in the Special Reserve, R.C.A.F. At present time enlistment in the R.C.A.F. is restricted to a small quota from U.A.S.

ENLISTMENT REQUIREMENTS

All male students of the required physical standards are eligible to enlist in the U.A.S. with the exception of those registered for either Medicine or Dentistry.

Engineering and Science students may enlist with the U.A.S. but are subject to Selective Service regulations.

COMMISSIONS

It is emphasized that in common with all branches of Military Service, no promise of commissions can be given; but character, energy and ability to accept responsibility invariably bring this reward.

REGISTRATION

Detailed information can be obtained at the Orderly Room, Second Floor, Hart House. Registration will take place up to 1200 hours, Sept. 30, 1944.

ROOMS SERVICE

For information about living accommodation inquire at the Students' Administrative Council office in Hart House, and discuss your problems with one of the Rooms Inspectors, Mr. R. J. Murray, V Dentistry, or Mr. G. Day, II Trinity.

GENERAL INFORMATION

Training in 1st Bn. in general will be as follows:

2nd year students

Completion of basic and introduction to special-to-arm training.

3rd and subsequent year students

All other ranks will be tested in basic training at the beginning of the session.

Those who have NOT satisfactorily completed basic training will continue to receive such training until they have reached the required standard.

Those who have completed basic training will be eligible to take special-to-arm training as follows:

Arm	For students in
Armoured Corps
Artillery	all faculties except Medicine and Dentistry.
Army Service Corps
Infantry	all faculties except Medicine.
Engineers	Civil, Mining and Chemical Engineering, Architecture, Forestry, and a few in Mechanical and Electrical Engineering.
Elect. and Mech. Engineers	Mechanical, Metallurgical and Electrical Engineering ONLY.
Signals	Electrical Engineering and a limited number from other Depts. in Fac. App. Sc., Physics and Chemistry, and Mathematics and Physics.

REGISTRATION

Registration will be conducted at 119 St. George St. from 25 to 30 Sep. between the following hours:

Monday to Friday—0930 to 1200 hours

1330 to 1700 hours

Saturday—0930 to 1200 hours

Registration must be completed by 1200 hours Saturday, 30 Sep. 44.

ORGANIZATION PARADE

Organization parade will be on North Campus on Thursday, 5 Oct. 44, at 1630 hours.

Dress: Battle dress, anklets, web belt.

ORDERLY ROOM

HQ of 1st Bn. is at 119 St. George St.

SELECTING AN ARM

As a guide to selection, the following notes on each arm of the service are included.

Armoured Corps

The Canadian Armoured Corps trains the personnel for all Tank, Armoured Car and Reconnaissance units in the Canadian Army.

Although a high standard of mechanical engineering skill is not necessary, candidates should have an aptitude for mechanical work, for gunnery and the operation of radio sets. Service in armoured units also calls for a high standard of physical fitness and leadership.

Artillery

The Artillery arm includes Field, Anti-Tank, Anti-Aircraft, and Artillery survey.

Applicants should be interested in mechanical equipment and working on simple surveying problems. It is preferable that applicants be mathematically inclined and have a knowledge of elementary trigonometry and the use of logarithms.

Engineers

The work of engineer field units of the Corps of Royal Canadian Engineers consists of a great variety of engineering duties, such as:

- The construction and maintenance of bridges, roads, tracks, airdromes, fortifications, buildings, railways, etc.
- The use of explosives in the field.
- The placement, location, removal of mines and booby traps.
- Tunnelling, water supply and surveying.

It is apparent from the foregoing that the vacancies which exist for reinforcement officers, RCE, are for men with training and experience in construction work, that is, generally speaking, graduates in Civil and Mining Engineering. However, a limited number of graduates in Architecture, Mechanical and other branches of Engineering will be required. There is little or no demand for Chemical Engineers.

Signals

Signals are responsible for intercommunication within the Army by such means as Radio, Telephone, Telegraph, etc.

While officer appointments in the Active Army Signals are given preferably to graduates in Electrical Engineering, this might be subject to some change if the supply of Electrical Engineers is inadequate.

Infantry

The Infantry Corps comprises approximately one half of the personnel of an Army Division and for this reason the number of commissions in Infantry is greater than in any other arm.

Infantry is the arm which in the end wins battles by seizing and holding enemy ground. The other arms assist the Infantry in fulfilling this role. Training in Infantry is sufficiently fundamental to be readily applicable to the other arms.

Infantry Training covers a broad and interesting syllabus. It is free from monotony with instruction in LMGs, 6 Pd. A Tk Gun, Mortars, Revolver, Shot Gun, Sub-machine Guns and mechanical transport.

Army Service Corps

Army Service Corps personnel are responsible for transportation and supply.

Applicants should have an aptitude for driving and maintenance of all types of wheeled vehicles.

Vacancies for commissions are at present very few in this arm, but there might be a slight increase in the number of vacancies in the future.

Electrical and Mechanical Engineers

This Branch of the Service is responsible for the inspection, maintenance, recovery, and repair of all artillery equipment, armoured fighting vehicles, motor transport vehicles (except ASC), instruments, and radio and other technical equipment of the Army.

This arm is restricted to Mechanical, Metallurgical and Electrical Engineering students, preferably in the 3rd and 4th years.

POTENTIAL OFFICERS

In the Spring of 1944, potential officers were selected for the technical branches. Also, a special course was conducted at Sussex, N.B., for members of the C.O.T.C. who were recommended as potential officers, Canadian Infantry Corps.

It is anticipated that a similar procedure will be followed in the present academic year.

2nd Battalion

Officer Commanding.....Lt.-Col. W. S. Wilson, E.D.
Second-in-Command.....Major F. R. Crocombe
Chief Instructor.....Major G. R. Lane
Adjutant.....Capt. J. C. Evans
Medical Officer.....Capt. D. L. Selby
Company Commanders—Major R. M. Barbour, M.C., Major C. R. Sanderson, Major M. Crabtree, M.C., Major J. H. Horning, E.D., Major W. V. Tovell, Capt. M. St. A. Woodside.

MEMBERSHIP

The 2nd Battalion will consist of students who have not completed one year's training in the 2nd Battalion or one year's training (including camp) in a Reserve Unit.

Membership is conditional on the compulsory medical examination provided by University Health Services for all students.

INSTRUCTION IN THE 2ND BATTALION

The syllabus of instruction will cover a basic training course for students who were not enrolled in the 2nd Bn. last session or who did not complete the prescribed 30-day training.

REGISTRATION

Students who intend to take training with this Battalion must register at the Orderly Room in Hart House during the following hours:

Monday, 25 Sep. 44 to Friday 29 Sep. 44—

9:30 a.m. to 12:00 noon.

1:30 p.m. to 5:00 p.m.

Saturday, 30 Sep. 44—

9:30 a.m. to 12:00 noon.

All registration must be completed by 12:00 noon Saturday, 30 Sep. 44. Students must have their University and National Registration cards with them at the time of registration.

ORGANIZATION PARADE

The organization parade of the 2nd Bn. will be held on Thursday, 5 Oct. 44, at 4:30 p.m. on the Front Campus of the University. All men who have registered with the 2nd Bn. will attend this parade. This does NOT include students who have registered with the 1st Bn. or those who registered with either the Naval or Air Force University Units.

ATTENDANCE AT PARADES

The number of parades to be held has been reduced to the required minimum, therefore all members must attend all parades of their companies. Leave may be granted for medical or emergency reasons but time lost must be made up by attending special parades.

UNIFORMS AND EQUIPMENT

After medical examination and attestation, members of this Battalion will be given a form which will be used as authority to draw equipment at Quartermaster Stores, 119 St. George St.

ORDERLY ROOM

The Headquarters and Orderly Room of the 2nd Bn. are located on the ground floor of Hart House, where complete information on military training may be obtained.

There will be no occasion for members of the 2nd Bn. to use the Headquarters of the 1st Bn., 119 St. George St.

PRE-PAYMENT OF UNIVERSITY FEES

The attention of students registering in all Faculties is drawn to the fact that necessary forms are required to be filled out in duplicate by each student, and both copies are to be sent by mail or delivered to the University Bursar's Office on or before the opening day of the Session, together with at least the first instalment of University fees and such other fees as may be necessary. One copy, after it has been stamped by the University Bursar to indicate the receipt of the fees, will be returned to the student and must be presented by him to his College Registrar, or to the Secretary of his Faculty or School, before he can receive his card of admission to lectures. College tuition fees should be sent to the College Bursar concerned. University fees and the fees of students enrolled in University College are payable at the office of the University Bursar, Simcoe

MEN

By order of the Board of Governors each man proceeding to a Bachelor's Degree must take Physical Training during the first and second years of his attendance at the University.

First and second year students taking Military Training with the U.N.T.D., the C.O.T.C. and the U.A.S. are required to take Physical Training at regular Physical Training classes in the Gymnasium. These classes are held from 16th October to the 30th April according to the subjoined time-table. A minimum of 20 attendances is required. No more than one P.T. credit per week will be granted.

Physical Training credits not to exceed 5 in the term in which the sport operates may be obtained by participation in the following intramural team sports:

Football	Hockey
Soccer	Basketball
Lacrosse	Water Polo
Swimming League

Men exempt from Military Training and who are placed by the Health Service in University categories A, B, or D, must secure a minimum attendance of 36 Physical Training periods or 2 per week.

SWIM TEST

The Physical Training requirements include a swimming test which must be taken by all first year men, by men admitted to the second year from other universities, and by those repeating first year. If unable to swim at least 50 yards satisfactorily the student must enrol in a learn-to-swim class. Failure to observe this regulation shall prevent a student from securing standing in Physical Training.

Fall Term—P.T. classes start Oct. 16, end Dec. 16.

Spring Term—P.T. classes start Jan. 4, end Apr. 30.

Forestry students enrol in Arts classes.

NOTE.—To avoid duplication of the physical training requirements, the Athletic Association acts as the co-ordinating agency and provides facilities, equipment and a trained physical education staff to instruct and supervise the war-time physical training programme. The number of physical training credits outlined in the regulations are the minimum requirements and all men are encouraged to take daily advantage of the instructional and recreational opportunities offered in the athletic and physical training programmes.

WOMEN

By order of the Board of Governors each woman proceeding to a Bachelor's degree must take Physical Training during the first year of her attendance at the University. Two periods a week are required with satisfactory attendance at a minimum of 80 per cent of the classes. Instruction in the following subjects is offered: archery, badminton, dancing, fencing, golf strokes, gymnastics, skating, swimming, and tennis. Credit may be obtained by participation in the following team games: basketball, ice hockey, softball or volleyball.

All students are required to take a swimming test immediately and to enrol in a beginner's class if they do not pass the test satisfactorily.

Students will enrol in classes and make appointments for a swimming test before Thursday, September 28th, at 44 Hoskin Avenue with the Department of Physical Education for Women.

Hall, which will be open for the receipt of fees from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily from September 18th to September 27th (Saturday, September 23rd, 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.), and from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. daily except Saturday during the remainder of the session. Cheques in payment of these fees should be made payable to the University of Toronto.

Instead of lining up in the Bursar's Office to pay fees during the term, students would save a considerable amount of time by mailing cheques to:

"The Bursar,

University of Toronto."

Women's National Service Training

The 1944-45 Programme for Women's National Service in the Faculty of Arts is as follows:

- I Year—no requirement
- II Year—60 hours compulsory training
- III Year—60 hours compulsory service
- IV Year—voluntary service

Courses available for II Year are:

- Canadian Red Cross Aids—See separate announcement.
- Hospital Nursing Aids—Instruction by School of Nursing and practical work in hospitals.
- Civic Day Nursery Assistants—Training by Institute of Child Study followed by practical work.
- Community Needs and Resources—Lectures and observations arranged by School of Social Work.

The 60 hours service for III Year students may be done in the fields for which they were trained last year, viz., Red Cross Corps, Red Cross Sewing Room, Hospitals, Civic Day Nurseries, Settlements and similar agencies. Students who were not enrolled in one of these training courses last year may apply for permission to do their work in these or other organizations engaged in some form of national or community service.

IV Year students, desirous of giving service, may select their own field and register in the usual way.

Training courses will, for the most part, be given on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 4 to 6 p.m. Practical service may be arranged in accordance with individual time-tables. Students who have time-table difficulties in arranging for training or service are invited to consult with their respective Deans of Women.

Students will register with their Deans of Women on Thursday and Friday, September 28 and 29, on the official forms provided. Training classes will begin on Tuesday, October 10.

Students taking training will list the courses offered in order of preference but, as only a limited number can be accommodated in each course, adjustments will have to be made at the discretion of the Committee. Students enrolling for service will give several choices of agencies or types of work in which they are interested.

Part-Time Employment

Men or women students who ride bicycles and are interested in earning good wages during morning spare periods, please call at the Students' Administrative Council office, Hart House.

Women's Basketball

Medical Examinations

Women students will not be permitted to play basketball without having an examination by the Health Office before practices start.

The five days October 10-14 are reserved for basketball examinations and no further time will be available for a number of weeks.

Women students who have any intention of playing basketball must therefore make medical appointments at once.

YOUR BLOOD CAN SAVE HIM

Thousands of blood donors are needed each week to supply life-saving serum for the Armed Forces. Give a pint of blood to save a life. For appointment call Red Cross Blood Donor Service.

Be sure to fill out a Blood Donor Information Card in your college registrar's office. Staff members are invited to fill out these cards if they wish.

A Few Questions and Answers About Military Training

1. If I have been turned down for active service must I register for military training? Ans.—Yes.
2. If I have been discharged from active service must I register for military training? Ans.—No.
3. My physical category as determined by University Health Services did not allow me to take military training last year. Must I register again this year? Ans.—Not unless or until this year's physical examination raises your category.

University of Toronto Detachment Canadian Red Cross Corps

Commandant—Miss A. E. M. Parkes, B.A.

Assistant Commandant—Miss J. M. Forster, B.A.

ORGANIZATION

The Canadian Red Cross Corps is a recognized part of the Canadian Red Cross Society and is a voluntary national organization, the purpose of which is to provide in Canada a trained and disciplined body of Red Cross workers, wearing distinctive uniforms, who will be available for Red Cross and other forms of national service, both in war and peace.

The Corps operates through five sections: Transport; Nursing Auxiliary; Office Administration; Food Administration; and University Training.

MEMBERSHIP

Members of a University Detachment are not full members of the Corps, in that their time available for service and training is relatively limited. Three extra-curricular hours a week during term, amounting to approximately 60 hours, is the time prescribed at the University of Toronto. Each student recruit must be passed by the University Medical Adviser. Students of all years are eligible for membership, first year students being admitted at the discretion of the Commandant.

TRAINING COURSES

Members of a University Training Detachment are required to take the basic courses common to all sections of the Corps, viz., Red Cross History and Organization, First Aid, Elementary Military Law, and a minimum of military drill. Advanced training required for admission to other Corps Sections is provided where local conditions permit. A Corps member who has completed Basic Training may take Sectional Training or may give specified Red Cross service.

UNIVERSITY REQUIREMENT

Membership in the Canadian Red Cross Corps fulfils all requirements of the University of Toronto National Service Training programme.

UNIFORM

Members must provide their own uniforms except that in the University of Toronto the cost of accessories is borne by the Women's Athletic Association as is the cost of maintenance of the Detachment. Used uniforms may be purchased from graduate members at a reduced figure. The charge for new uniforms is $7.65.

ENROLMENT

Old members will register with the Commandant in the Students' Administrative Council Office, Hart House, at any time from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Tuesday or Wednesday, September 26 and 27.

New applicants will apply from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Wednesday or Thursday, September 27 and 28.

TRAINING PROGRAMME 1944-45

New Members

1st TERM—

Basic Training; Red Cross History and Organization; First Aid; Drill.

2nd TERM—

Military Law, Home Nursing or Red Cross service; Drill.

Old Members

Old members will be assigned to Sectional Training or Red Cross service after consultation with the Commandant.

The Toronto Transport and Nursing Auxiliary Sections need members who are properly qualified and can give some free time during the day. Office Administration and Food Administration can use skilled and unskilled office and food workers, the former at the Blood Donor Clinic or in Headquarters offices, the latter to assist at Baker Hall (for blind soldiers), in the Red Cross tea-room at 50 Bloor St. E., or in preparing lunch boxes for Red Cross workers. Members, preferably those with some laboratory experience, are needed as assistants in the Laboratory of the Mobile Blood Donor Service.

LECTURE HOURS

After a recent conference with the representatives of the Toronto Transportation Commission the President of the University reports that, owing to increasing difficulties of transportation, it will be necessary to continue until further notice the practice commenced in the session of 1942-43 of holding University and College classes from 8.30 a.m. until 4.30 p.m.

Thus, classes which began on the hour in the session 1941-42 will begin on the half-hour preceding; and classes which began ten minutes after the hour will begin at twenty minutes to the hour.

Hart House Officials Announce Theatre Reprive For Campus Productions

Board of Syndics Grant Approval of Request of Student Committee to Reopen Hart House Theatre

NOVEMBER 6

Hart House Theatre will reopen for student productions for five weeks beginning Monday, Nov. 6, after being closed for more than a year and a half. Professor Gilbert Norwood, Chairman of the Board of Syndics, announced yesterday. At the same time Prof. Norwood announced that W. R. Dymond, Instructor in the Department of Political Economy, had been engaged by the Syndics as manager of the theatre for the five-week period. Mr. Dymond is now engaged in completing bookings of campus shows.

Prof. Norwood pointed out that the theatre is still closed to outside groups and will again be closed completely after the campus theatrical season is over. Mr. Dymond was engaged at the instance of a Theatre Committee of the Students' Administrative Council which had organized the five-week season and found the part-time manager.

On behalf of his colleagues, Prof. Norwood said, "The Syndics are delighted and relieved to find that the difficulties which had kept the theatre closed have at length been overcome completely, if temporarily, by the energy and resourcefulness of the students themselves, after the best efforts of the Syndics had proved fruitless."

Hart House Theatre was closed temporarily in January, 1943, when Norm Nichol, the manager, resigned his post to join the R.C.A.F. Failing to find a successor for Br. Nichol in the following six months the Syndics decided to close the theatre for the duration. A committee of students representing the various producing groups on the campus approached the Syndics in the spring of 1943 in an attempt to have the theatre reopened, but since they were unable to find a manager in the limited free time available before examinations overtook them their efforts failed.

Sidney Smith Is U.C. Head

TO LECTURE IN LAW

Dr. Sidney E. Smith, the new Principal of University College and President-elect of the University of Toronto, when questioned yesterday regarding any plans or changes at U.C., said that he thought it would not be advisable for him to consider any such changes until he became more settled in his new position.

Dr. Smith stated that he was now making it his business to get acquainted with U.C. and to learn of its history and traditions. He will lecture this year at the University of Toronto School of Law.

Born in Port Hood, Nova Scotia, and educated at Kings College, Dalhousie University, Harvard University, Queen's and Acadia, Principal Smith was called to the Bar of Nova Scotia in 1921. He was a lecturer and assistant Professor at Dalhousie from 1921 to 1925, when he became a lecturer at Toronto's Osgoode Hall Law School.

From 1929 to 1934, Dr. Smith was Dean of the Faculty of Law at Dalhousie University. During this time he was also Vice-Chancellor of the University of Manitoba and for three years was president of the Halifax Y.M.C.A.

Among his numerous activities, he was the assistant editor of the Canadian Bar Review and has written three law books, including "Cases on Trust" and "Cases on Equity."

In the first World War Dr. Smith was with the Ninth Siege Battery in France from 1916 to 1918, and was with the Royal Flying Corps in 1918 and 1919.

At the 1942 convention of the National Conservative Party, held in Winnipeg, when the formal name of the Party was changed to the Progressive Conservative Party, Dr. Smith was a proposed

Prof. Thomson Dies Suddenly

Professor J. Ellis Thomson, Ph.D., F.R.C.S., 62, head of the department of mineralogy here, died last Tuesday evening following a seizure.

Connected with the University for 32 years, Prof. Thomson was appointed head of the Department of Mineralogy last January by the Board of Governors. He wrote numerous articles and books on mineralogy.

Born in Toronto, the professor attended Toronto Model School and Woodstock College. He studied min-eralogy in Germany for two years prior to his entering the University of Toronto as a student. Following his graduation in 1907 he was a demonstrator in mineralogy here until 1912. He obtained his Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1929.

A former president of the Royal Canadian Institute, Prof. Thomson served on the council for 15 years. He resigned his office as president of the English Speaking Union last summer. He was a fellow and past president of the Mineralogical Society of America, a councillor of the Mineralogical Society of London, a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada, a member of the Royal Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, the Society of Economic Geology, the British Association for the Advancement of Science and Hart House. He attended Park Road Baptist Church.

His widow, Edith Marian Dalton Thomson of 123 Weland Ave., and two sisters, Mrs. E. G. Long and Miss Winifred Thomson, both of Toronto, survive him.

President Cody Emphasizes Necessity Of Developing Self-Reliance In First Year And Discusses Post-War Program

Dean Bennett Gives Talk

New Dean Pays Tribute to the Armed Services Record of Victoria; Discusses Post-War Reconstruction

OFFICIALS PRESENT

The discovery of truth is the proper aim in all study, according to Dr. H. Bennett, new Dean of Victoria College, and as such, is cumulative and comprises all the wisdom of the ages. The liberal arts, he continued in his address to the Arts Convocation at Victoria Tuesday afternoon, are "its trustees and interpreters as they pass the heritage from the past to each new generation for still further sorting and sifting."

Dr. Bennett pointed out that Victoria was by tradition a liberal and fighting as well as religious college. Founded in protest against the pretensions that higher education should be reserved for a privileged class, Victoria has from the beginning kept an open door, and over that portal has inscribed the words "the truth shall make you free."

Warning the students against unquestioning acceptance of all they are told as well as against insufficient toleration for the beliefs of others, the new dean stressed the importance in the practical world of affairs of the clear insight which is the product of a liberal learning. He pointed out that the world needs leaders for the next advance in human welfare and its thinkers must meet the challenge of the time. The ideal form of government has not yet been evolved; the social order has not yet been perfected.

Changes must be made and greater opportunities provided, Dr. Bennett continued; but for any sort of reconstruction there will be needed in all political parties men and women trained in the liberal arts, humanists whose knowledge of the past will enable them to see these problems in true perspective.

Paying tribute to Victoria's record of more than 1100 members of the college on active service and the sound religious life of the college, Dr. Bennett closed his address.

Professor M. St. A. Woodside, new Registrar of the College, announced the scholarship awards of the past year. The senior sticks went to Helen Patrick of Modern Languages and John Speers of the English Language and Literature course.

Principal Sidney Smith of U.C., representing President Cody, Dr. J. B. Tyrrell, and Rt. Rev. Jesse Arup, new Moderator of the United Churches of Canada, also officiated.

University's Youthful Spirit. Gained from Teacher and Student. Is Evidenced in the Foundation of New Departments and in the Expansion of Those Already Established; Students Urged to Devote Time to Their Studies

RESEARCH AND RELIGION TO MAKE BETTER WORLD

"We have now gone over many years of this struggle and the end of the long weary journey seems to approach," said President H. J. Cody in his annual address to the undergraduates of the University in Convocation Hall yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Cody warned, however, that "the mood of hopefulness should be chastened by the knowledge that we are at grips with an enemy skilled, still numerous, and desperate." He told the students that of the 9,200 students and graduates of the University now on active service, 320 had made the supreme sacrifice, and 60 more have been reported missing.

Speaking primarily for the freshman classes, Dr. Cody emphasized the necessity of developing self-reliance and readjusting themselves to their new environment. He advised them to learn to "stand on their own intellectual feet" rather than to rely on the constant supervision of the high school system.

The President advised the incoming students especially to regard the professors on the staff as their friends, counsellors and guides, for it is the combination of their maturity with the enthusiasm of youth which "sharpens intellect and balances judgment in a university. One of Canada's foremost poets, a well-known authority on Canadian humour, two outstanding students of Milton and his age, as well as the inventor of the electron microscope, are all included on the staff of the University, Dr. Cody said.

Although the University is entering on its one hundred and first year of teaching it is still young. A living university is constantly renewing its youth since successive generations of students who embody hope and the spirit of adventure keep it young. Its teachers renew themselves year by year keeping in touch with the spirit of the age. The university maintains its youth in yet another way by meeting new needs, the needs of the age as well as the old needs of the ages.

In all schemes of reconstruction, Dr. Cody said, education is counted on to play a foremost part. Research and religion must join together in creating, preserving, and reviving a better world.

The University is constantly expanding, with plans being formulated now for the foundation in the near future of Departments of Social Welfare, and Diplomatic Representation as well as new branches for research in Political Science and Economics. The Faculty of Applied Science is to be enlarged by the addition of a course in Aeronautical Engineering.

In conclusion the President advised the student body to settle down to work immediately, to make friends with their books, so that they would be able to face examinations free of worry and to regard them as a stimulus and a revelation of attainment.

UNNRA Representative Joins University Staff

Dr. H. M. Cassidy, director of training for U.N.R.R.A. in Washington, is returning to Toronto to become the director of the School of Social Work in January. Formerly the dean of the department of Social Welfare at the University of California, Dr. Cassidy in five years developed one of the largest graduate schools of social work on the continent.

Dr. Cassidy went to British Columbia from the University of Toronto where he had been assistant professor in the School of Social Work.

Bewildered By Initiation And House Party Weary Frosh Display Odd Garbs And Signs

Once again the campus is echoing to the hoarse yells and high squeals of outraged first year students whose dignity is in the process of being sadly ruffled, and this is one of the sure signs that college life is here again.

Initiations, however, do not end with merely wearing caps back-to-front as the St. Mike's Freshies found out last night. In the dead of night they were awakened by Sophs and put through a routine of eating cold wet oatmeal, macaroni worms, and other gruesome delicacies. A formal initiation will be held later at St. Joseph's, followed by a formal welcome.

Victoria men and women had their traditional "Freshman and Freshie Weekend" where they became familiar with some aspects of college life. The men will have a formal initiation later also, perhaps in the Bloor Street horse-trough as in previous years, but until that time they have been given a gold tie and Vic's blessing, and have been let loose among hordes of hungry Schoolmen.

To the Vic Freshies the whole time was wonderful and thrilling. Joan Mallett of Addison House, looking over her "weekend" program crammed full of events, said that it had been exciting from the time that she met her Senior. "There were so many people, and I didn't know quite what was happening. The Seniors took us through Hart House, and all over the University, and finally through the mill on Monday."

Victoria Sophs are even now thinking up new and drastic treatment for the incoming Freshies, and in a few days the Red and Gold will be very evident.

Trinity women are being subjected to wearing little golden halos, vital statistics placards and red and black streamers, while black-tied Trinity freshmen are muttering dire threats about kicking the Sophs around "when the time comes."

As far as outraged feelings go, however, the Occupational Therapy girls and the prospective Dental Nurses are having the worst time. O.T. girls are struggling to look glamorous in nurses' veils of pillow slips, and faces made up only on one side with a dividing line down the middle. Glamor is losing out.

The Dental Nurses have a completely morale shattering garb. Black stockings caps braided hang down their backs, their skirts are pulled up above the knee, they wear super vital statistics placards bearing telephone number, height and weight in addition to the information usually required, and in addition to having one leg encased in a black stocking and the other in a white one, they have been made to wear a grey galosh on the white foot and a huaracha on the black foot. As one victim mourned, "Life is so cruel."

Falling Leaves

In the course of the past few weeks, the campus has changed from a serene and lovely island in the midst of a bustling wartime city to an equally bustling component of that city, as its students have returned from all parts of the world to their beloved books. The campus is still as lovely, perhaps even more so, now that the autumn haze has settled on the ancient banks of the Taddle and the ivy on the walls of Knox College has changed from its summer green to its majestic fall ensemble.

To the returning students, and to the students just embarking on their college education, The Varsity extends a heartfelt welcome. This is the season of handshaking, new faces, gaudy ties, freshmen forays, initiations, and football games. The popular concept of college spirit is much more in evidence this year, perhaps due to the heartening aspect of the war. The students are returning with a more vigorous outlook, both socially and intellectually. This will no doubt become more obvious as the Michaelmas Term wears on in the increased influence and activity of the campus organizations, an aroused and eager rivalry in interfaculty athletics, and, God grant, a revival of the intercollegiate spirit which has been on the decline since the beginning of hostilities.

To the students who are entering the strange, fascinating life of the university for the first time, we offer a word of advice. This is primarily an educational institution; the correct time to start working and study is September 27. However it is very important to obtain the proper blend between academic and extra-curricular work; without this admixture the manifold opportunities which the university offers for the development of character and personality cannot be put to the best use.

Warrior's Return

This year, as the student body returns to the libraries, lecture rooms, and laboratories of the university, heroes are included in its numbers. Among the first of a legion of men and women who, having sacrificed many valuable years of their youth and having risked their lives, will resume their education, these men are symbolic both of the tragedy of war and of the promising future.

Modest and taciturn as is the manner of heroes, these students will be neither imposing nor prepossessing; if they chose to, they would be able to relate unbelievable stories of adventure and courage surpassing the wildest and most imaginative romance conceivable. Their fellow students will perhaps find them a little strange, lacking in the generous carefree humour which is so characteristic of college students; the difference in age between the returning soldiers, sailors, and airmen and their new fellow students will make their readjustment difficult. They have faced the fundamentals of life, the realities of life and death. How little they will have in common with the ordinary university student who has led a life sheltered from these basic elements. The students at this university should welcome these men with the utmost enthusiasm and understanding. They are old friends come home; we sincerely wish them every success in their readjustment to university life.

Dr. Sidney Smith

The appointment of Dr. Sidney Smith as principal of University College and president-elect of the University brings to this campus a figure of collegiate as well as national interest. With a versatile career behind him, Dr. Smith assumes his position at a time when the combination of a business and academic background is essential. His achievements in the past testify to the appropriateness of his appointment. He has been President of the University of Manitoba, assistant editor of the Canadian Bar Review, President of the National Film Society, King's Council for Manitoba, President of Adult Education, and has been actively interested in the Y.M.C.A. and the Canadian Institute of International Affairs. He received an honorary doctorate in law from Queen's University and was professor of Law at Dalhousie University and Osgoode Hall.

Such an experienced career speaks well for the future of, not only University College, but the University itself. The introduction of a person heretofore unconnected with this campus will undoubtedly inject new ideas and policies which can be gained only from impartial ground. President Cody very aptly summed up the character of Dr. Smith:

"He is a man of fine character and experience with students of various ages and kinds, a good administrator and able to win the loyalty and respect of those with whom he works. He is a man interested in public affairs and problems of Canada. He has had opportunity to study these problems in Eastern, Central and Western Canada. He is a good lawyer with a good mind and clear perceptions and by his own character, achievements and wide experience should make a notable contribution to the University."

Thus, as the representative of the student body, we welcome Dr. Smith to our campus and express the hope that success may attend his administration.

The President's Address

Those who attended President Cody's address yesterday heard the salutation to the commencement of a new era at this University. The President spoke of the inauguration of a course, next year, for those desiring a diplomatic career. He told of the new lectures leading to a degree in aeronautical engineering; of progress in the electron microscope; of other enterprises in research at the School of Science, and of the numerous changes in the staff.

It is manifest that the University is not tardy in providing for students of the post-war period. Inevitable changes and readjustments must be made and it is no reflection on past administration to applaud the survivals and new arrivals. The new arrivals, in which are included first year students and recently appointed staff members, provide the blend of vigour and wisdom which constitutes the drive of any university.

Such a drive can be maintained only by the synchronous actions of staff and student. The student should contribute to such a harmony by combining initiative with maturity. In so doing he will not only augment the influence of the University abroad but will also achieve a personal responsibility committant with his duties as a citizen.

Even In War

Are not Art, Music and Drama superfluous in wartime? Why must we create and appreciate culture when the whole world is burning itself out in war? War is destructive to the free-thinking mind as well as the body. If the cultural side of man's life were to be neglected he would be reduced to the rank of the animal.

And so it is necessary, at this time more than ever, that we be conscious of the pulsing creative life around us; that we come to know and understand the world.

Art is international. True art knows no

"Quick, Alphonse, the Ashcan," screamed Etacoin Shrdlu, Varsity compositor, perceiving a mangled paw protruding from the bowers and gutters of his clanking machine. "This animal," he continued, "is indubitably dead."

"This animal" proved to be a dismembered cat (Felis Champi). It was pronounced by Dr. Ratzen Katz, campus veterinarian, to have been dead since March and long past stinking.

"Poor old Champus," sobbed Shrdlu, shaking his head, "I knew he'd come to a cruel end some day. Alphonse poking his head into that machine, he was, where he'd got no business to be. Alas, of Champus," he blubbered into his suds; then, brightening, "But I won't have any more of that crazy stuff he wrote to set up any more . . . Whoopet!"

"We gotta have a Cat," raved Hephzibah Morthalls, Varsity Editor, biting off a fresh length of typewriter ribbon. "It's the first issue and we couldn't have a first issue without a Cat, now could we?"

"Dammit, NO," she answered herself. "We must have a Cat. We shall have a Cat. Even if I have to contact the spirit world, we shall have a Cat."

So Hephzibah applied a new coating of rust-proof paint to her iron jaw and set off to where people have dealings concerning spirits.

"Well?" asked the man at the wicket. "Medium," explained Hepsy. She is a woman of few words.

"No medium," snarled the man, glancing at her permit, "nor small nor large neither. Yer spirit ration's exhausted for the month."

After that Hepsy resorted to subtler means to lure the spirit of Champus.

"He was always a sucker for cream," mused she, dipping into her war-chest. So she set out a saucer of cold cream and as an afterthought garnished it with typewriter ribbons. "Because it would be a nuisance if just any old cat came—an Alley Cat for instance. But Champus is the only Cat who knows about typewriters." Then to make quite sure she laid out a few cigars. Champus (bless his memory) was the only Cat who was fond of cigars.

After that she started her incantations. She danced around the saucer of cream until the breeze of her passing curdled it. She let down her hair and whooped. She turned the lights down low. She turned the furniture around. She turned the rugs over. She turned cartwheels.

Presently she grew aware of a Presence at her elbow. "Something for Champus?" intoned the Presence. "Food, maybe?"

Hepsy wheeled. It was the shade of Dr. Aloysius P. Q. R. McGeech, formerly Terror of the Underworld and now Butler to the Cats of the Nether World.

As he picked up the offerings, "But maybe you'd like to see Champus," he said. "He is expecting you. He is in Feline Hades. He is undergoing the vilest tortments of the Arch-Fiend."

boundaries. If we are ever to dream of an international brotherhood, that understanding must begin with the study and appreciation of culture. The critic of today holds a tremendous responsibility, not only to himself but to his readers. He must, above all, be unprejudiced in this world full of prejudices.

WARDEN RESUMES FORMER POSITION

George Elliott Leaves The Varsity Now Editor Strathroy Weekly

George M. Elliott, appointed editor-in-chief of The Varsity for 1944-45, has resigned his post but is now continuing his journalistic career as editor of The Age-Dispatch in Strathroy, Ontario.

Elliott successfully completed his second year in the Pass Course but due to Selective Service regulations concerning the standard required for Arts students, he was not allowed to continue at the University. Rejected by the Army, he began work in August on the eight-page weekly newspaper in Strathroy and has also taken corresponding positions on other southern Ontario newspapers including The London Free Press.

Some of Elliott's editorials have been reprinted in The London Echoes and The Free Press and still another was read over the C.B.C. farm broadcast. He is now preparing for the next Victory Loan when he plans to produce a special issue.

Elliott began his career on The Varsity as a cub reporter in 1942 when he was named the best staff newsman of the year. In 1943 he became assistant News Editor and was later promoted to the position of Feature Editor. In May 1944 he was appointed editor-in-chief by the Students' Administrative Council.

Not only was Elliott on the masthead of The Varsity but he was also Undergraduate Editor of the University of Toronto Monthly and worked for The Undergraduate, University College's magazine. Previous to his college career he worked for the Associated Screen News in Montreal for 14 months, where he made rapid progress.

Shattering a 64-year tradition, Betsy Moslaugh, 21-year-old Philosophy and English Senior at University College, has been appointed first woman Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity prior to his present position as Editor of the Strathroy Age-Dispatch.

The Varsity Reviews

The Trinity Review

Turning out a summer issue of a college publication is in itself a kind of tour-de-force, so that the reviewer feels like Dr. Johnson confronted by a woman preaching; though it is done badly, yet he is impressed to find it done at all.

Actually, the Trinity Review in question is not done at all badly; only, as one might expect, literary copy runs a bit thin. There are no fewer than eight specimens of that rarest of undergraduate commodities, half-decent verse; three badish bits of fiction; and a sober appraisal of the late Provost Macklem's career. The inclusion of a full list of examination results, an 18-page catalogue of Active Service Alumni, scraps of letters from the front, and Trinity's personal section of births, marriages, and deaths sounds almost as desolate as reproducing the telephone-book in facsimile, until one remembers that this constitutes the pedestrian Summer Issue's staple fare. One is less inclined to mock the sanctity of literary matter than to wonder how the editors scrounged so much.

Rose Marie Moore's The Lapidary's Rainy Day and Catherine Bliss' Escape from Night split honours as the best serious poetry of the issue. The first conceals rather forced imagery behind astonishing metrical skill, while the really fine atmospheric writing of the second is paralysed by a woefully flat conclusion that was meant for a climax.

Phyllis Langstaff's The Liar is a venomous morose as far as it goes, which is not far enough; and Graham Cotter's Sonnet—April 21 is not a sonnet, bears no recognizable relation to the date in question, and amounts to little more than a release of gas.

Introversion, by Alexander G. McKay, calls impressive language to the service of a nightmare melange of concepts. If it had meaning it would be magnificent.

"So victory brought home celestial thorns, and the rosy grail; and the long totems lay down," is a drug but not an idea. Misery characterized as "the cat that gnaws the faces of the dead" is a harrowing idea without a connection.

The light verse aims at less, but achieves more surely. H. G. Wakely's intriguing "Ulysses" easily bears off honours for sheer zest and deftness. Lynn Howard achieves an intriguing title in her usual vein: Just Mark It C.A.O. and Let the Postmen Fight Over It; but the content of the appended verse is too slim to rank with the best work of a once infallibly amusing versifier.

None of the fiction is very sure where it is going. Of The Quest of the Lady Elaine and The Head of William Wells (by Elizabeth English and Margaret Moss respectively), one can only say with justice that the former was intended to be gay (or possibly cynical) and is not, while the latter was meant to be creepy (or perhaps pleasantly fantastic) and is not. D. Bower's Northland Night is a disappointing watercolor of what must have been a thrilling emotional experience. Atmosphere is never born of cliché; and one does not impart the majesty of the heavens by saying that they were majestic.

Liberal Study Course Aided Rehabilitation To Post-War Civilian Life

Wide Variety of Subjects Open For Discussion in Four-Hour Weekly Course Given the Armed Forces

EDUCATION FOR PEACE

The man who has directed one of the most revolutionary experiments in the history of warfare, and who has been responsible for guiding the immediate and long-range thinking of millions of fighting men, Mr. J. B. Bickersteth, returned to his desk at the Hart House Warden's Office early this summer.

Mr. Bickersteth left Hart House, of which he has been Warden since 1921, in May 1940, and during the four darkest months of the war served with the Home Guard between Canterbury and Dover awaiting the threatened Nazi invasion of England.

In September, 1940, he became Personal Advisor. (Education) to General McNaughton, then in command of the Canadian forces in England; and shortly afterwards was asked by the Secretary of State for War to take over the direction of all military education throughout the British Isles.

Up to that time the British Army had devoted much attention to lectures, music and art appreciation, technical courses, reading, etc., as recreation for the troops; but the program which Mr. Bickersteth directed was actually incorporated into the weekly syllabus.

"One of the greatest experiments in the history of warfare," Mr. Bickersteth told The Varsity, "was the decision of the Army Council to devote four hours weekly to liberal education during the military training hours."

"These four hours were generally used for talks and discussions on international affairs, the institutions and government of England, and the nature of the Empire and her Allies."

Breaking open a packet of pamphlets from among the heaps of War Office material on his office table, Mr. Bickersteth displayed a series of booklets written by experts to guide the discussion leaders. Subjects as diverse as War Aims, Post-War Housing, and European politics were dealt with.

"It was realized," the Warden continued, "that a soldier is a human being possessing body, mind, and spirit, and that only by developing all three could the most effective fighting man be produced. Far from being a cipher in an army, the soldier was encouraged to think of himself as an individual moving among world events which had a meaning for him."

"Incidentally, he was helped to become a better citizen, and to fit readily into post-war civilian life."

In his capacity as Director of Army Education, Mr. Bickersteth had a staff of about 50 in the War Office, 450 officers in the field ranking from brigadier downwards, and about 1,650 Warrant Officers and Sergeant Instructors.

As the scheme expanded, educational work of this nature spread to North Africa, the Near East, Palestine, East and West Africa, Malia, Gibraltar, and elsewhere.

In the weeks before D-Day, Mr. Bickersteth had about 150 officers and other ranks placed in the marshalling camps. An Education Officer went across the Channel with every division, and with corps, army, and army group headquarters. Their primary function during the Battle of France was to produce news sheets giving the men information regarding the battle in which they were engaged, the war in general, and the home front.

"These news sheets were in the hands of front line troops by 9 a.m. every day," said Mr. Bickersteth, "and were their chief source of information. The daily papers from England didn't arrive until at least 24 hours later."

"There is enough material on those tables," he concluded, "to fill ten Varsitys. It was fascinating work. The scheme was gigantic. We arranged one-week leave courses at Oxford and Cambridge; we had experts drawing up courses on every conceivable subject; our work became involved with every government department."

"When the official White Paper on Demobilization appeared, we prepared a popular summary. Our work was intimately concerned with the demobilization problem, with getting the men re-oriented to an intelligent civilian life. The men with whom we worked are the people of post-war Britain. The work we started, the thinking we stimulated, will help determine Britain's post-war history."

hither and yon

with dorothy harley

So the weary old feature ed. raised tear-stained eyes from the battered black keyboard before him, and in voice worn rusty with a multitude of cares, "Harley," he moans, "Harley, ol' puss, I am pooled. Write me the first hither, Harley."

Which, being not yet hardened, Harley did.

A bump of location or a compass comes in handy during the first few days around college. Sad things do happen without them, we've heard. For instance there was the airman who, having been stationed on the campus for only a few hours and not having any handy handbook with a map in the back, lost all his bearings and became completely befuddled. Finally a group of coeds came upon him wandering about the corridors of an up-campus women's residence. As he was escorted to the door he was heard to mutter something about being in the wrong BARRACKS.

Something that all first year students have to get used to seeing are those long black things that flap about around Trinity and St. Mike's. These are GOWNS. They do not kick or bite and in fact are relatively harmless. Actually the only time they get dangerous is when the occupant of one takes a swing at you for asking if he's wearing a horse - blanket. However, harmless though gowns are, they have been known to scare the timid freshman; we saw one turn pale before our eyes the other day when confronted with the sight of several gowns and their inmates sitting on Trinity steps.

"My gosh," he gasped out, "what are they, Bunthees?"

Freshies are often subjected to terrible things. The other day, so we were told, a young coed went to one of those beginning-of-the-term affairs and was asked for a dance by a great big third-year man. With all the soirée foir connected with third year men he began conversation with line No. 1a—"Where have YOU been all my life?"—and then, proving that a University education sharpens the wits, he followed it up swiftly with an addition of his own. "Because," he said, "you poor child, it must have been HORRIBLE."

It's important to get all the books and things that you're going to need right at the beginning of the year, 'cause, gosh, you don't want to get behind in your studies or anything. That's why, we presume, a first year student walked into the S.A.C. office and asked, (a) for a set of etchings of the University, and (b), for "one of those little books you keep addresses in!"

But what we can't figure out is what course he's taking!

Exercise is important and in these gasless days everybody is likely to get all they need. Running for the bus is one of the most frequent and painful methods of taking large doses. The other day Lucy, the U.C. coed, ran from practically Baldwin House right up through the memorial arch to catch a Hoskin Avenue bus. Finally, panting and puffing, Lucy touched the finish line, crawled up the steps and handed her ticket to the conductor.

"Well," said he cheerfully, "do that every day and you'll make the FOOT-BALL TEAM!"

And in this day and age, who knows?

There are a few of this year's freshies who do not seem to have the studious and thoughtful attitude towards work and higher learning that is so generally characteristic of their group. Lucy, for instance, went to register in Economics and with what appeared to be true scholastic zeal asked the professor just exactly what the course was about.

"Economics," said he learnedly, "is the study of money and men."

"Ah," said Lucy, "that is for me!"

Collich is a broadening experience.

The S.A.C. passed his motion and a new committee of Inter-Art Gorman, S.P.S. 4T4, who organized and conducted research into a theoretical budget for the theatre which served as a basis for the negotiations which have just been brought to a successful conclusion.

Students interested in journalism, or those with a yen to do writing of any sort, can find on The Varsity the type of activity to satisfy their aspirations. Staff members of The Varsity are free to decide for themselves how much time they wish to spend on the paper, ranging from one afternoon a week to the limits that can be reached without endangering their studies.

For those who wish to take seriously their connection with The Varsity, it can be pointed out that this is the only training in journalism offered by the University of Toronto, or by any other Canadian University, and the numbers of former Varsity staff members who have made names for themselves in the newspaper and publishing world are evidence of its success.

Students interested in news and sports reporting, feature writing, and criticism, are invited to come to the News office, Room 42A, University College (in the cloisters), to leave their names or discuss their writing ambitions with staff members of The Varsity.

The Black 'Othello'

Royal Alexandra

The Margaret Webster production of Othello appearing this week at the Royal Alexandra is the finest and most moving Shakespearean drama seen in this city since Maurice Evans brought his Hamlet here several seasons ago. The staging, lighting, and accompanying music are almost flawless, and the truly remarkable cast and casting make this particular Othello a milestone in the annals of the stage.

Mr. Paul Robeson in the role of the unhappy Moor shows his theatrical versatility by his singularly convincing interpretation of this sincere and deluded character. More widely celebrated for splendid singing voice, Mr. Robeson here shows his outstanding ability as a Shakespearean actor. Not only by his magnificent presence on the stage and his deep, sonorous voice does he bring out the pathos of the role and the tragedy of the man, but also by his boundless dramatic instinct, his control, and his obvious feeling for the part.

Jose Ferrer, as the dastardly Iago, gave Mr. Robeson excellent support and won the audience by transforming this unbelievable villain into a perfectly natural and understandable man, in spite of a slight tendency to overact in the more emotional situations. The beautiful Uta Hagen portrayed Desdemona with just enough sophistication to make this innocent, naive heroine live. With-out the dominating influence of Paul Robeson, Edith King's lovable Emilia might have easily stolen the show.

In comparison with Mr. Robeson's deep baritone the rest of the voices in the cast sounded rather thin and reedy. Our only criticism is that in some scenes the words of the actors performing in front of the inner curtain were almost drowned out by the undue noise of the stagehands changing scenery in the rear. However, this production of Othello remains an unforgettable experience and we hope that it returns to Toronto for the benefit of the many disappointed theatregoers unable to purchase tickets for this engagement.

"NEVER BE WITHOUT IT!" So say the wise ones regarding Mecca Ointment. "Mecca" has been a household name since before you and I were bumping our heads on the handle-bars of a scooter car. It's been disinfecting and healing barked shins and skinned elbows since rugby was a new fangled game, and it's still right on the job when a blistered heel or a skid-burn slow down your performance when you're trying out for the first team. It's smart to keep a tin of Mecca handy where you can reach it in emergencies, right up there in front on the locker shelf.

SHOPPING around Northway's new "FASHIONLAND" is one of our favourite downtown activities. . . . "Fashionland" comprises Northway's entire Third Floor, is devoted to the type of thing designed to warm your heart if you're anywhere from a clothes-wise sixteen-year-old onward and upward. Coats are the news at Fashionland this particular week, and for your education coat-wise, look over the new "shorties" fur-lined, becoming as a glamour-photo and highlighting colour. Vander Voort's at 91-93 Yonge Street (upstairs, take elevator), can't be blamed for being a little jubilant at their Autumn collection because what with scarcity of materials and labour it takes a bit of blarney and a thorough knowledge of the market to gather in the right sort of wearables these war days. Vander Voorts specialize in the kind of thing a lady prof looks best in and a girl with a flair for correctness dotes upon. Vander Voorts provide one of the most personalized ready-to-wear dress services in Canada, with individual attention to each customer's particular requirements. A school-teacher friend of ours from London tells us she has learned the habit of letting Vander Voorts choose for her, by remote control, and it's saved her weary shopping hours.

The Lure of Coveted Trophy
Inaugurates Variety of Sports on Campus; Competitions to Start Next Week

OPEN TO ALL MEN

The annual race for the Reed Trophy, emblematic of intramural athletic supremacy, will be officially launched come next Wednesday, October 4, when the tennis enthusiasts start their annual competition for the court honors. The famed courts of St. Hilda's, the scene of many an interfaculty competition, will again be the home of the racket-wielders. An entry fee of 50 cents will be charged for each person.

Two days later, on Friday, the golfers will swing out on the greens of St. Andrews Club. The interfaculty tournament will be run off over the 18-hole course on the best score basis with no handicaps. The entry fee, the same as in tennis, will be 50 cents.

The major sports emerge on the 11th when football and soccer teams are fielded by the first of the various faculties and colleges.

Track stars in the making will have their go on the following day when the junior meet is held. This meet is held for all freshmen as well as any who have failed to win in any previous events.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasius

HI FROSH . . .

Welcome back, sport fans, and welcome, frosh. As the starting gates clang open for the Athletic Office's program for another year, the slowly aging and rapidly thinning clientele of this University of some four years ago can reminisce. Those who have weathered the elements for four years have seen just that number of years slip by without intercollegiate competition. These same hardy individuals can now celebrate the fourth birthday of the finest university athletic program found anywhere on the continent. And that is no idle boast.

To the freshman who has an unproved amount of love and loyalty for his alma mater, intramural competition may not seem to be enough to quench that much-found desire to cheer the blue and white on to victory. To the seasoned members who have done that cheering, it must be far harder. However, the C.I.A.U. ruling of 1940 still stands.

But, frosh, there is a brighter side to this picture—a much brighter one. The same skilled brains that handled the Blues turned their undivided attention upon athletics within the University. These officials began a physical fitness program which is now regarded as tops by all other universities, both in Canada and across the line.

The fundamental idea of the intramural system is that it affords the solitary male an opportunity to participate in organized athletics, to play on organized teams in organized leagues, with adequate coaching, adequate arbitration and a trophy and records to shoot for.

Entering another wartime season brings into the limelight the need for physical fitness. True, certain mentally fit and anxious students overlook the physical aspect. Also true is the fact that there is a compulsory physical training program. However, that does not excuse an individual's conscience from bettering his muscular development under expert instruction at on cost save his time.

To further prove our point, we have before us a letter from a former student now overseas in the airforce. Here is an excerpt:

"It was during our initial invasion of France. Five Junkers and their escort of three Messerschmitt fighters were coming over. Two of us were up alone and drove straight for the bombers. Two went down in flames as the M.E.'s came on.

"Danny, heading for another bomber, evidently had not sighted the diving fighters. Even though it was my first combat, I realized that if I could get on his tail I could bring him down before he took Danny.

"I feinted at a bomber and as the M.E. swooped by I cut in and gave him all. You've heard the rest. To me it's very ironic that a holder of an iron cross should be shot down by a green pilot—a green pilot lucky enough to have had athletic training. The co-ordination, co-operation and quick thinking learned on the gridiron proved equal to the occasion in a fighter—nothing more."

By the "rest" the writer meant a decoration. The same is repeated every day by all men returning from the battlefronts.

With this thought in mind, we urge every freshman as well as every man in upper years who can possibly turn out to "make the most of it." All you need is your medical. Team managers are eagerly waiting—so watch your bulletin boards. Now let's go, fellas.

found Champus in agony. He sat on a soap-box at a rickety table before a balky, stumbling typewriter. An enormous roll of paper coiled endlessly through the machine, and it was his doom to fill it all with choice humour. He had tapped only a few inches of foolery and was sitting picking his teeth with a typewriter key, racking his brains and dimly contemplating the miles of virgin paper still to be typed on.

"O Cat," breathed Hepsy in rapture, "do you gush guff still? Even here?" "Unhappily," sighed Champus, "yes. And it is my doom to gush it for aces yet. Look at all the paper I've got to fill before they'll let me out of this hell-hole."

"Have you done enough for one issue yet?" asked Hepsy.

"Just about," nodded Champus, and tearing off what he had written he handed it to her.

Then, overwhelmed with joy, Hepsy turned to go. The issue was saved! As she slipped out of the infernal gates she turned back to wave farewell to suffering, toiling Champus. As she did so, she noticed a sign over the ponderous iron portal:

"VARSITY OFFICE."

Smith on Sport
Discusses West

When asked yesterday about his views on intercollegiate sport in the East, Dr. Sidney Smith, new Principal of University College and former President of the University of Manitoba, declined to make comment until he was more familiar with the situation.

He supplemented eagerly with some information regarding the sport's set-up in the West. Dr. Smith was present during the discussions at the University of Manitoba when sports for the coming year was the subject in question.

The year 1944-45 will see intercollegiate sport return to the West in a modified form. The Universities of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba will field teams in track, basketball and swimming this year. Football, having never been a well-organized intercollegiate sport in the West, is not included in the list of revived activities.

The war has made one welcome change in the student life on the Manitoba campus, said Dr. Smith. With the intensified schedule of intramural sports, it was found that of the total enrolment of 2300 undergraduates, 1700 were active in some sport.

By Janice Murray

GREETINGS . . .

Hello again, which is about as peppy a greeting as a new and fearful and very worried sportswoman can manage. So maybe we should introduce ourselves and our new assistant, eh? Our new assistant is one who should be an authority on all things connected with sport, a Bachelor of Physical and Health Education no less, and now at U.C. adding a B.A. to the imposing list of initials. Her name is Peggy Wallace and she will relieve us of some of the burden of our task. . . . And herself? Well we are at St. Hilda's, taking English and not a bit of sports, officially that is. It can be done extracurricularly however, and we feel it should be.

NOTE TO FRESHIES . . .

As each new, hopeful and idealistic sportswoman always hopes, we are hoping that each and every Freshie will participate in women's athletics. It makes a great difference in the amount you get out of college, and you only get as much out of college as you put in. For non-resident girls this is even more true than for residents. You can sit and vegetate at home and the world will roll by, but in residence this is possible but not so probable. Perhaps it is because this is true and some girls realize it, that our experience has shown us that there are more non-residents than residents playing on college teams. However, there is a place for every girl on her college team in all sports, and if you volunteer your name to the fearful, pleading, overworked and generally unhappy Head of Sports of your college, you will be her friend for life, and will make the team into the bargain. It's practically a promise!

NOTES . . .

Peggy tells us that there is a howling need for ushers at the Saturday football games this year. Please, you senior girls, volunteer at once. There are at least four needed. You see the game, and there is a "slight gratuity" in connection—and not so slight either. For details call Peggy Wallace, Mi. 5611.

Also, please be ready for the baseball season when it opens, and that will be any day now, again we promise!

the famous goldrush the population of the Klondike was about 20,000. Now that there is no gold mining except for three dredges the population has decreased to 150.

Professor Taylor obtained permission to return on the Alcan Highway (the highway is not open to civilians). Buses travel every other day between White Horse and Dawson Creek, a distance of 920 miles, carrying maintenance men and soldiers. The middle section of the highway, around Muncho Lake where there are high mountains, is very scenic. The rest of the way is continuous spruce forest. The country is uninhabited and local needs are served by the small river steamers supplemented by air service, so that except for the needs of war, there is not much scope for "a big road."

The practical advantages of his trip, Professor Taylor explained, aside from the material collected for a book on Canada which he is now writing, were to help to determine the future settlement possibilities of the Northwest and to enable him to explain Canada better and more accurately to his students.

Thousands Taught By Mail

At the present time there are approximately four thousand men and women in the armed services who are being prepared by means of correspondence courses for admission to the various courses in Canadian universities. According to Dr. W. J. Dunlop of the Department of University Extension, most of them are preparing for courses in Engineering, Commerce, Medicine, Dentistry, Arts, and Forestry.

With the co-operation of the Canadian Legion Educational Services, the Department of University Extension is providing courses for the armed forces in grade thirteen subjects without cost, except that students purchase their own text-books and supplies.

When the soldier has completed his correspondence work in a subject, he is given a final test in his own camp under the supervision of a senior officer. If he obtains a standing of more than 66 per cent in the test the Department of Education will issue him a certificate in that subject.

This department also is supplying correspondence courses to 117 prisoners of war.

Discharged men and women of this war are also given an opportunity to get their Upper School certificates by the Department of Education. Classes in these subjects are being held in the old Normal School which is now called the Toronto Rehabilitation Centre.

Noted Theolog, Author Guest at SCM Service

The Reverend Dr. John A. MacKay, President of Princeton Theological Seminary, will preach at the Student Christian Movement Service in Convocation Hall this Sunday evening at 7:30 p.m. President Cody will participate in this service, which is the first one arranged by the S.C.M. this year.

Dr. MacKay, known as a scholar and as the author of numerous books, has spent several years in educational work in Peru, where he founded the Anglo-Peruvian College. Previous to assuming his present post Dr. MacKay was in charge of the overseas mission work of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.

BUGLER INTERVIEW, TENT-BROKEN PUPPIE, ALL IS GRIST FOR C.O.T.C. BULLETIN

Though not intended as a rival to The Varsity, a breezy three-page tabloid appeared at Camp Niagara this June, the first newspaper to be published there for a reading audience of student trainees.

Called the Niagara Trumpet, the mimeographed journal was a one-man job. It was put out by Frank Rasky, The Varsity's Assistant News Editor. According to Frank, the paper almost didn't see the light of day. It was only on the second day before camp closed that he discovered that the men in the orderly tent had a duplicating machine. On learning this startling fact, he obtained permission from Lieut. Col. H. B. Madill, Commanding Officer of the battalion, to go ahead with the project.

But editor-in-chief, it seemed, was a cryptic term. Because time was short, he became the chief reporter, which meant ferreting news from each camp tent; then he became copy desk editor, which meant mooning a typewriter from Chaplain W. C. Lockhart and pounding out copy; and then chief managing editor, which meant submitting the stories to Press Despatch Censor Office (otherwise known as the orderly room officer); then becoming chief linotypist, he rewrote the stuff on stencils; and wound up by becoming

Editor Plans Full Coverage In Year-Book

Assistants Wanted to Work on More Picturesque Layout and Better Photographic Representation of Campus Events

NEED CO-OPERATION

Photographers, copy-writers, and editorial assistants are wanted right away to help with the production of the University's mammoth yearbook Torontensis, editor Hugh Kenner told The Varsity yesterday.

"No journalistic or yearbook experience is necessary," he continued, "although some background on a high-school publication would help a good deal. The prime essential is simply willingness to help. And up to a point, the bigger the staff, the better our book will be."

Editorial plans are being made for the inclusion between the 1945 edition's blue and white covers of a complete and interesting account of the season's campus events. "We want to get away as much as possible from the simple record-book idea," continued Kenner. "Bright, picturesque write-ups and more dramatic page layout should make every page interesting to the veriest outsider."

"And that includes photographic coverage," he added. "We made a big start last year towards representing every faculty's events with the biggest picture-gallery in the history of Torontensis. Now that the precedent is established we hope to do better. This year we hope not to miss a single colorful campus event."

The editor went on to point out that such an objective would prove impossible without active co-operation from college and faculty student executives. Since it is impossible for one person to keep track of all that is going on about campus, secretaries and publicity men should make a point of informing Torontensis of all interesting coming events, to make sure that they are covered.

The first meeting date for representatives is to be announced shortly; meanwhile, all colleges and faculties whose representatives are not yet appointed should attend to the matter without delay, he concluded.

pressroom foreman, which encompassed the job of stapling the final product. Topped by a sketch of an army trumpet, the tabloid included a message from the chaplain, news stories, features, and under a column headed "Trumpet Blasts" one-line sports and personal items.

A sample of army life was provided in one news story headed, "Mudpuck Lifts Face and Name of P.B.I." with the rather too cutely worded subhead, "Puddles, Oil and Rain, by heck, give infantry pain in neck." There was even an interview with the camp bugler who sounded reveille every morning at what army terminology would call 0600 hours.

Typical of the paper's style was a piece on the camp mascot which is

Women Haters Wail

Men Invade Women's Study as Roof Collapse Feared; Roof-Beams Probed For Termites

Well, men, if you're women-haters you'd better sign up as Varsity reporters, because you won't be doing much studying in the library for a while. If you go there, you'll have to use the women's reading room.

The familiar circular men's study-room is filled with scaffolding and its doors are barricaded with canvas. This state of affairs will persist until the University Superintendent is quite sure that the roof will not fall in.

The first inkling of trouble came late this summer with the discovery that the persistent dripping of rain-water into the reading-room was coming through skylights that had cracked under the strain of a settling roof.

While University engineers devised trusses to fend off total collapse, carpenters investigating aloft found that the main beams were giving way to dry rot, and that the disease seemed to be spreading into the soot timbers.

Whether it is safe to remedy the immediate damage and leave it at that, depends on the decision of the Department of Botany, who are carrying out tests to determine whether the rotting is due to organic matter.

Meanwhile the men's reading-room remains closed; and in a reversal of traditional sites, campus wolves are sharpening their fangs for the library while the misogynists seek out quiet benches in Queen's Park.

Camp Counsellors Train with P & H E

"The Physical and Health Education camp which is held annually during the first three weeks of September is not only to students in P.&H.E., but to anyone interested in training as camp counsellors," said Miss D. N. R. Jackson, of the Department of Athletics and Physical Training for Women. Miss Jackson, camp director, was commenting upon this last fall session.

The P.&H.E. camp is held at Camp Tanamakoon in Algonquin Park, owned by Miss Mary G. Hamilton. Attendance at the camp has increased greatly during the past three years and this year the enrolment was over 40. The majority of those who attend are undergraduates, although the camp course is open to anyone with High School Matriculation.

The course covers all phases of camp activity, including instruction in campcraft, music, handicraft, waterfront sports, camp organization and a series of lectures and discussions on counselling were held. This year the camp had its own impromptu choir of 15 voices.

Students Flock To Residences As G.I.'s Vacate

With the departure of all service personnel from the University campus and the ever increasing proportion of women students, widespread changes have occurred this year in all University residences.

The most sweeping rearrangements are those which have taken place in Victoria College. After one year's occupation by personnel of the R.C.A.F., and two years by Canadian Army Course students, Burwash Hall is again being occupied by Vic men. North, Middle, and Gate houses are being used by Vic undergraduates and a few undergraduates from other faculties, while South House is devoted to Emmanuel College students and to graduates.

The five Emmanuel College houses, which last year housed Vic men, have now been turned over to women students, swelling the total of Vic women's residences to 11, an all-time high.

Mr. W. J. Little, Bursar of Victoria College, explained the novel system now in effect whereby the co-eds from the various new houses rotate weekly, dining in turn at Annesley, Burwash, and Wymulwood.

North, South and East houses on Devonshire Place, vacated last spring by pre-air crew trainees of the R.C.A.F., are again being operated by the University as men's residences. Although there is a sprinkling of artsmen in these houses, meads and engineers predominate.

"73" remains the only official house for U.C. men and last term's oft-discussed plans for the acquisition of new buildings are still in a nebulous state. To Whitney Hall, U.C. Women's Residence, have been added two completely

Release Figures On Drafted Men

Either failing in their examinations or standing in the lower half of their classes in non-essential arts courses, 417 male students at the University were notified that they were liable for army draft this summer.

A. B. Fennel, University Registrar, said letters were sent to 307 men who failed in examinations and also to 160 in the lower 50 per cent advising them of regulations.

Of the 160 in the lower half, 81 were in first year, 68 in second and 11 in third.

The percentage of males who failed was higher than that for women, being 9.21 per cent compared with 6.65.

Applied Science and Engineering appeared to be the hardest hit. It had 116 failures in 1,121.

In Arts, 259 failed out of 3,126; in Medicine, 40 out of 697 did not pass; and in Dentistry, 30 out of 306 were below regular standards.

Frosh Enrolment Shows Increase

A slight increase in freshman enrolment over last year is indicated by a preliminary survey of student distribution made by The Varsity.

Of the 22 colleges and faculties questioned eight showed a higher first year enrolment, five had fewer students, four had the same number as last year, five had no statistics available. Those showing an increase were: Victoria, S.P.S., Forestry, Dentistry, Pharmacy, School of Nursing, P.&H.E., and Household Science. The greatest increase was at S.P.S. where the number jumped from 325 last year to 404 this year. It was suggested that this may be due in part to the returned men who are resuming interrupted educations in Engineering.

The five colleges that showed a decrease in first year enrolment, St. Michael's, Social Work, O.C.E., Music and Chinese Studies, had, with the exception of St. Michael's, small enrolments at any time and the fluctuations are considered less significant.

In some faculties the freshman class has had to be restricted in numbers and this accounts for Medicine whose enrolment number didn't change. The others who remained at the same number are Library, Law, and the Institute of Child Study.

U.C., Trinity, Emmanuel, Knox, and Wycliffe, either have not yet started registration or have not completed it and figures are not available from these colleges.

The complete summary of enrolment in all years by colleges and faculties will be published in the University Directory in approximately two months.

Colorful History of Royal College Revealed in Jottings From Its Past

Sometimes described as "a crumbling medieval mass of picturesque buildings," the University College building is more than picturesque.

The grace and beauty of the old building is a mute testimony to the creative genius of F. W. Cumberland, the architect who designed it, and the main entrance surmounted by the richly carved tower is a monument to the workmanship of Newman Steiner, a Bohemian who did most of the ornate design work.

When U.C. was opened in 1859, it was completely equipped for instruction in all courses. The Croft Chapter House was then a chemistry lab, but later, when the chemistry and physics buildings were erected, the labs were moved out and U.C. was devoted exclusively to Arts learning.

Originally the enrolment was all-male, those being the dark ages before co-education. There were rooms for about 250 resident students in the buildings, which are now used for professor's offices and small classrooms.

There used to be a high board fence closing off the quad, which had a small door in it. This door was locked after curfew time and tardy students had either to rouse the porter or attempt to climb over and find an open window before being discovered and reported. Heat in the rooms was supplied by fires, the students buying their coal from the porter.

Clues to the living dramas of bygone schooldays are in the walls, pillars, the Norman windows and desks of the old building for all to see. These classic windows and pillars won't divulge any

Traditional Freshman Reception Expanded to Convocation in Honour of New Principal; Many Graduates Attend

DEBT TO SOCIETY URGED

"University College can be a bastion of defense in the battle of ideas," declared Dr. Sidney E. Smith, new principal of University College, at a Convocation last night in Convocation Hall.

It has been a tradition at University College for the Principal to welcome the freshman class with an opening address and reception at U.C. This meeting was expanded this year to include all undergraduates, graduates, and staff of the College in order to welcome Dr. Smith to his new position.

Principal Smith stressed the fact that society was making a great investment in the college students of today.

"You have the heritage of the ages," he said. "Society expects dividends in terms of careers of service to mankind, and those who do not enter wholeheartedly into the task of drawing the most from their course and from their college or faculty are simply not patriotic." College entails a two-fold responsibility for students, namely to strengthen character and develop intellect, Dr. Smith said, and more than ever in this sixth year of the war, this responsibility should be realized.

The battle of ideas, continued Dr. Smith, will go on long after the clash of arms ceases. With special emphasis to the task ahead for University College in the organization of thought and ideals in the free world to come, he stated, "U.C. needs our best. U.C. deserves our best."

Principal Smith thanked the staff, the stories, but there are a few old-timers around the campus who can tell yarn after yarn about the "good old days" at U.C.

Sir William Mulock inscribed his name with a diamond on the centre window of Room 40 in his undergraduate days some 70 years ago in case his name should be lost among those of the thousands of students passing through U.C. It wasn't, and his signature is still scrawled on the window.

The Curtain Rises

Once more will Hart House Theatre throng with potential actors and nagging directors as it sheds its former morgue-like aspect in order to garb itself in the brilliance of resurrection. Once more will it become, after almost two years of death, a beehive of activity. University life is about to enter upon a season of productions designed to last five weeks.

The reopening of the theatre is not to be regarded in the light of a concession. When it was closed in 1943 the student body ventured little comment. Some months later when the difficulty of staging off-campus plays became apparent, Rex Wilson, former Varsity editor, and Ted Thompson, a Vic graduate, headed a committee to negotiate with the Board of Syndics. This Board of Syndics which is in charge of the theatre has received undue criticism. At the outset it had no personal desire to close the theatre. Lack of a manager forced their decision. It was quite satisfied to effect a compromise suggested by the student committee when the part-time manager was actually produced. It acknowledged the credit due to Messrs. Wilson and Thompson for their efforts.

Of course the paradox will always remain as to why such an agreement could not have been reached earlier, thus obviating the appearance of student activities outside the campus at a time when economy was the watchword.

The theatre, however, has just seen the completion of the second last scene in its own drama. It is to be hoped that the final scene will provide year-around curtain calls.

Home Again

As the captains and the A.C.'s depart, residence accommodation, whose absence had created a minor boom among boarding-houses, is again being turned back to student use. Medsmen and Engineers, long without a place to rest their heads, are again flooding the red buildings on Devonshire place; while with the Vic men home once more in Burwash Hall, the five Emmanuel College residences have been turned over to women students.

More than mere re-conversion is in evidence at University College, with two more annexes added to the existing three outcroppings of Whitney Hall.

All this is evidence of sound policy. Gone are the shameful days when the campus Governors freed themselves of the troubles of residence administration by closing down U.C.'s historic houses in the cloisters and encouraging fraternities and boarding-houses to mushroom around the campus. Increasingly in recent years the University authorities have recognized that a university owes to its students more than professors, lecture-rooms, and a library; it owes them opportunities for the communal life which thousands of students have found to be the most valuable factor in their four years of college development.

No doubt the mounting proportion of women students encourages thinking of this kind; for there exists an understandable inclination to feel more responsibility for the supervised welfare of co-eds than of men. But statements from various official sources leave even less doubt that the men will come in for their fair share of attention as soon as building materials and funds again become available.

The announcement last year that the Flavell Residence on Queen's Park Crescent is to be used as a University College Men's Residence was an encouraging sign that the Provincial College will not be allowed to lag behind the endowed federated colleges indefinitely.

If, as we have suggested, the wartime presence of more and more women students has stimulated such thinking, then one more small blessing can be chalked up to the credit of the war; at any rate, it is food for optimism that after years of ebb the Residence tide has turned.

May We Introduce

Today inaugurates the custom of introducing to our readers the members of the masthead of The Varsity. The assistant-editor this year is a Schoolman by name of Bob Grosskurth. He is responsible for your Tuesday and Thursday editorials and eagerly looks for letters-to-the-editor. Bob is in his fourth year of Electrical Engineering and has, since his freshman days, been a member of the staff.

He came down to Varsity with the Carter scholarship but lost it in some mysterious way. He has had honours each year but prefers to discuss his prowess at ping pong. Bob has the rare distinction for a Schoolman of having been a member of the U.C. Players' Guild in his first year. Apparently he is a restless individual who takes delight in changing his course as often as possible.

At School he was on the staff of Toike Oike, the School publication, and is now serving on the board of stewards in Hart House as well as the Library Committee. We have seen him wandering around in a navy uniform during term and we strongly suspect that you will probably be reading a hither and you containing an account of his summer down east on special convoy duty.

Sincere And Capable

At the Prom

Singing to a capacity audience at Varsity Stadium last night, Portia White, negro contralto, gave a capable and sincere performance. Miss White's flexible style and rich intonation were particularly noticeable in her rendition of the aria O Mio Fernando from "La Favorita" by Donizetti. Of the group of songs with piano, Grieg's I Love Thee showed the artist's musical interpretive ability. A Dream, also by Grieg, although sung faster than usual, displayed clear enunciation and sincerity of presentation.

In Miss White's second appearance, the dramatic element of Divinites du Styx from "Alceste" by Gluck was ably brought out. The orchestral accompaniment in this number was especially effective. Although Gluck's Amor Viens Aider from "Sampson and Delilah" was sweet and emotional, the background supplied by the orchestra was at times a little heavy.

Her encore, Swing Low Sweet Chariot, sung in deep vibrant tones, drew enthusiastic response from the audience.

Andre Kostelanetz ably led the orchestra in the first Toronto performance of Kabalevsky's Symphony No. 2, an interesting and wholehearted effort. The first movement, a study in moods, contrasted with the second which was more even and lyrical, brightened by a staccato passage. The beginning of the last movement seemed to show disunity among the members of the orchestra. But they rallied through a tussle with alternating rhythms to end triumphantly.

The familiar Glinka overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla" was played with gusto and finesse.

"Porgy and Bess" introduced a rather modern trend which, although brilliantly interpreted, was not altogether congruous with the remainder of the program.

The familiar Blue Danube was played in the flawless perfection so characteristic of the waltz style made famous by Kostelanetz.

Back to the Old Grind . . .

So here we are back on the campus, and very pretty it is we must say, in an attempt to fill all this space, even if the grass is being trampled by a lot of ill-bred froth and others after a summer vegetating. And so we come to college again for everything you go to college for, which at the moment is mostly the cutting of ties, which makes this campus the biggest academic clip-joint in the British Empire, if not in the world. It is well to bring to the attention of the young fry who are indulging in this sport that this is not the only thing they are here for, but is merely a part of . . .

The Old Fight . . .

We don't like to seem to carp, but there's something you gals and you fellas too (gee, fellas, we get to write for too!) ought to smarten up about, especially you Frosh. There's a big intramural league on this campus that requires your attention, and that is the daily tussle between members of the staff of this institution and a pile of verbiage from which the former attempt to extract Information and Erudition.

This fine old game is called Lectures and is distinguished by an unpredictable element called Spectator Participation. That is, from time to time the rhetorical ball gets bounced into the stands and the onlookers are expected to do their part in demonstrating to what extent the Profs' team has scored in the struggle. So it behooves youse guys and youse gals to get in there and root for the home team, since, it is rumored, certain substantial academic door prizes will be given away next spring to spectators at these affairs who are able to meet certain qualifications.

Three Cheers for Smitty!?!?

Going in for Wallace, veteran captain of the U.C. Profs' team, is a likely and amiable lad named Sidney Smith who has been on a farm team out West. Smitty, as he is known to the water boy, comes here with lots of new ideas and we may expect to see many a new play designed to baffle that old devil Ingornance who, we regret so say, received much support from youngsters around and about this campus, and many a classy scheme for team management. Incidentally our new friend Smitty has been designated to take over general management of the league eventually from that grand out promoter Smilin' Hank Cody of Simcoe Hall.

Words from the Old Master . . .

Which brings us to the genial remarks of that gentleman the other day in Convocation Hall. At that time Cody gave the old low-down on new things coming up in the league. With the war shaping up the way it is and a rise in college spirit showing itself and new blood coming to the campus (doesn't it look pretty on green ties?) you may be sure that this year will show a rip-snootin' series, the beginning of many a super-do to come.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Frank Rasky

It's still too early in the semester to ponder deeply on University sports—so the class today will pay attention while the professor will lecture on that noble calling, the art of being a sports editor.

Placed under the microscope today will be that irascible old cynic, Andy (The Ol' Thunderer) Lytle, who rules the sports gallery at the Toronto Star with an iron hand—a practice, it seems, which would make it rather difficult for haberdashers to fit him with pairs of iron gloves.

We came to know Mons. Lytle this summer while we were a hireling on the Star's reportorial staff, a department which is entirely divorced from the sports arena.

Our attention was drawn to Mons. Lytle because of a series of rather strange occurrences. These rather strange occurrences were glimpses of a series of rather strange characters who met our eye on the corridor of the fourth floor in the Star building while we tried to wander nonchalantly into the editorial room a half hour late each morning.

These characters, whom we saw troop along the hall and into a small office on the third floor, were of a bizarre, mysterious genre, most of them looking like fugitives from a Dick Tracy cartoon. There were burly, bearded gents. There were gents whose faces were pounded on a pillow pulp. There were gents whose arms sagged down to the floor like anthropoids. There were gents whose suit shoulders seemed to hide a double-size mattress, with a dining room suite thrown in for good measure. And they were all chaperoned by a burly, ham-fisted gent, who, whenever we saw him, was puffing at a big cigar.

At first we assumed that they were newshawks—a breed which everybody knows is peculiar—and then we supposed that they were circus freaks going to have their pictures taken. Our curiosity was satisfied one day, however, when an unusually observant copy girl who saw us squinting at them, finally informed us that they were wrestlers, that the cigar-puffing gent beside them was a wrestling promoter, and that they were all making a safari to the cubicle where all rare fauna of the human species are welcomed—the sports office.

Sensing that there would be much amusement in such a Bohemian spot, we one day ventured into the sports office—one day when we were early at work for a change—and we boldly strode into Mons. Lytle's private sanctum.

There were none of Tunney's grunt-and-groan boys in evidence at the time, but we did find Mons. Lytle. He looked exactly like those publicity photos pasted on the side of Star delivery trucks—except that he bore a cigar in his lips, a copy of The Daily Racing Form in his hand, and a scowl on his face.

"Who're you?" he barked.

We told him that we were a reporter from the news room who had come to make him a neighbourly call. His cigar dropped a few inches and the scowl melted somewhat.

"That so?" he said with a curious expression, surprised that we were not from some promoter's managerie.

We spoke of this and that to try and draw him out, but to no avail. The Ol' Thunderer had withdrawn to his cloud and continued to chew at his cheroot.

We mentioned finally with some casualness that we had had some fun last year doing work for The Varsity, and what, incidentally, did he think of The Varsity?

The Ol' Thunderer emerged from his cloud, and he rumbled with some of the most vehement rumbling that we have ever heard since Grandpaw fell from the barn roof and snapped himself with his galluses.

Briefly, Mons. Lytle declared that worse second-hand rags had been despatched to the pulp mills, but he did not recall such occasions. It's sports column was lower than a mudturtle's stomach, and it's style was so atrocious that on the infrequent occasions when he read the column, his squeals of mocking laughter were so loud that the pressmen in the basement four floors below came up to complain of the noise. In short, said Mons. Lytle, if some buffoon came cap in hand to his office and asked for a sports position, stating that he had worked on The Varsity, that scoundrel would get the heave-ho with a snap of Mons. Lytle's thumb.

As we left Mons. Lytle, he was waving his cigar, scattering ashes about, and thundering aloud, and so great was our celerity that while charging through the door we bumped into a bearded, burly character.

To this day we are unable to tell whether he was a pressman who came from the basement below to complain of the noise, or one of the characters who had slipped the leash from Frank Tunney's chaperonage.

The reason we don't know is that we have never since seen Mons. Lytle.

Into The Night

Journalism gets in your blood, and cub reporters who make the grade and graduate to the fascinating intricacies of night-editing look back with pleasure at the sleepless nights, the noise of the linotypes, the struggle with heads that won't fit, and the hammering-out of a stone-proof in the lengthening hours of early morning daylight.

At few universities do students enter so fully into the technical end of producing the daily paper, night-editing rounds out the intensive course in practical journalism provided by The Varsity for all comers.

Right now The Varsity needs reporters badly. Whether you want to devote a few hours a week to occasional write-ups and interviews, or whether you want to plunge feet first into journalism and puzzle out heads in the wee sma' hours like the night editors in the picture above, you are invited to drop in at The Varsity office in Room 42A, University College and sign the lists.

"The Sportswoman"

By Janice Murray

TENNIS

Margaret Alexander, head of University tennis, has come with an urgent and special message for the tennis fiends among the so-called weaker sex. It seems that she held a meeting with all the college heads and the outcome was that the college tournaments start on Monday, October 2. All girls interested should sign their college bulletin board lists this week. But, girls, this week ends today, so sign the list today, PLEASE.

The University tournament starts on October 16, with teams participating from all colleges. Marg also tells me that there was no Meds rep at her meeting so will Meds have their rep call her at Ly. 1818 soon. Other faculties, such as S.P.S., who have no reps in the University club and who would like to play in the tourney are asked to call her too. And please, you S.P.S. or Forestry femmes, do enter all the sports, including baseball. Which brings us to

BASEBALL

We intended to call all the heads of baseball last night but if we have missed any of you in the general shuffle will you call us at Ho. 9458, and if you can't get us please, oh please, leave your name and phone number so you can be called back. We intend to hold a meeting and arrange for games and practices as soon as possible. But we can't call you if your presence is not made known to us somehow. The schedule should start Monday, October 9 if all goes well, but more of this later.

MISCELLANEOUS . . .

So far there have been few answers about the plea for upper year students to usher at the rugby games Saturday afternoons. We spent a vigorous quarter of an hour pleading and cajoling with two of our fellows, who finally came to the conclusion that it would be so much fun, but they really couldn't—which is what they started out by thinking. All that energy wasted. At a dollar a game, we thought that there would be a line of senior girls leading up St. George St. and along Bloor, and that Peggy would be asked to instal a private line, when so many people called Mt. 5611. We are deeply grieved.

There are some things that the first year girls should know. After our spirited plea to you to play games, and our attempt to point out the gains that will be made by you in friends and in college spirit, a thing too often made fun of or abused, we have decided to point out some of the very practical and tangible advantages that playing on a college hockey or basketball team can give you. We had hoped that this incentive need not be pressed but it may sway a few of the doubtful souls. Under the scheme in operation all freshmen are required to put in ten hours of organized Physical Training and another ten hours of some sport which they may choose themselves from a list including swimming, archery, dancing, et al. But this list did not include the team sports, which will give the necessary credits as well as the classes quoted. So freshmen, if you play tennis ten times in a tournament, or if, as is more likely, you get basketball games and practices to total ten hours, you get your credits painlessly. If this is the way you prefer to look at it then at least it will give more players, and we are sure that the proper spirit of the thing can come later. If not, and you enter things for the love of it, you are the winner in character and in physical fitness.

"Militarily speaking, though, Kim has one bad flaw in his mental makeup. He can't distinguish between uniforms—which, as everybody knows, is an awful breach of discipline. And so, scot free, he continues to lick the fingers of an officer with the same gay abandon as he does those of a buck private."

Frank says that the tradition of publishing a camp newspaper will be continued next summer. The reporter admits he had a swell time putting out the first issue, particularly since camp officials permitted him two days freedom from K.P. duty. Freedom of the press, as you can plainly see, is a wonderful thing.

refurnished and redecorated annexes, bringing the number of outside houses to five, three of which are owned by the University. The Women's Union, haunt of non-resident undergrads, is being renovated and its kitchen facilities improved. Miss M. B. Ferguson, Dean of U.C. Women, told The Varsity yesterday.

Due to the steady wartime decline in the male enrolment at St. Michael's College one of its residences has been partially converted to a psychology laboratory and staff offices. Father T. P. McLaughlin, Superior of the College, told The Varsity that the other houses, while filled to capacity, are largely peopled by members of the professional faculties and by graduate students.

Loretto College now includes a building adjacent to its main one on St. George Street.

Trinity College residences have undergone no important changes, Provost Cosgrave revealed, although like all residences on this year's campus they are filled to capacity.

Prof. Gordon Is Chem. Head

Professor Andrew K. Gordon has been appointed head of the Department of Chemistry, succeeding Dr. F. B. Kendrick, it has been announced by President H. J. Cody.

Born in 1896, Prof. Gordon was educated at U.T.S. Graduating from the University here in 1922, he won his Ph.D. degree in 1925 and in the same year was appointed lecturer in chemistry here.

In 1934 he became assistant professor and four years later professor in the Department.

He has a distinguished record in physical chemistry research. He is author of 50 papers on this subject which have appeared in scientific journals; a member of the Chemical Warfare Laboratory Advisory Committee; and a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada and the Canadian Institute of Chemistry.

Somewhere on page one, if we don't change our make-up at the last minute, is a story on the disintegrating library roof. At an earlier stage of this trouble, way back when the steady drip of water was being caught in galvanized buckets, a veteran staffer of our composed a heart-rending feature on the subject for the downtown press.

And ever since the piece appeared with its heading, "Drip, Drip," that grizzled ol' staffer has been going around stopping his ears against the comment that it's the first time anybody ever got two by-lines for the same story.

Chivalry Is Dead Dept. Long before most of you innocent people arrived, the Military Issue of The Varsity was pouring off the presses. And with no delivery boys on tap as yet, a fragile miss from the S.A.C. office had to distribute the tons and tons of copies all around the campus by her lonesome.

So a hot September morning finds her trudging up the walk to Victoria College with one ponderous bundle under each arm.

Then from 'round a corner appeared three hefty males.

"Ahhhhh," thinks our heroine, appearing at her most demure and fragile.

"Hey, c'n we have Varsities, huh?" cry the men.

"Certainly," she coos, proffering the ponderous packages.

"Okay," chorus the males, "we'll come with you."

So up the dusty walk she trudges on, trailed by three muscular camp-followers in procession . . . fadeout.

Like we always said—DIRTY VIC!

Frash are still Dumb Dept. Comes an opening History lecture, and the prof hands out easy pieces of research for next class; and to Useless Eustace he assigns the rise of the Chartist Movement and the culmination thereof.

Next day Eustace stands up and speaks a neat little piece about the Chartist Movement; then blushing, stammering, "But gee, sir, I looked up every book I could find and I even tried the Encyclopedia, but I couldn't seem to find anything called The Culmination."

DIDJA TRY THE DICTIONARY?

And Freshies are still innocent too. Out of 'em at U.C. cuddled up to the Senior in charge of her doings and proceeded to simper off reel after reel of What She Was Going To Do Now That She Was At University.

"And right away I'm going to join the Lit."

"Well, babe," sighed the Senior, "Things must be looking up. Some of us have been wishing we could do that for years."

Bulldozers, steam-shovels, cement-mixers, and pneumatic drills have been making general mayhem with the pavement at St. George and Harbord for several weeks, as any Schoolman can plainly see.

Two graduate south-campusers were philosophically regarding the debris 'tother morning, and as the big scoop started taking particularly massive bites of earth, one muttered to his mate,

"You know, I thought we should have dug a tunnel into Whitney Hall years ago."

AH, WASTED YOUTH!

As of yore, scraps of floating conversation continue to intrigue our flapping ears as we whiffle past. Up the Museum the other afternoon (strange how the darndest things always get talked about near the museum), one gossip co-ed was chattering away at another, and all we heard was:

"It would have been so much more chic, but as she said herself, you can't wear car-muffs in July!"

WE WOULD, ON A DARE.

Announce Many Staff Changes In U.C., Victoria and Trinity

The following list of changes in staff has been announced by the University and by Victoria and Trinity Colleges. Those promoted to the position of full Professors are: Prof. W. H. Clawson, Among those who have been promoted from Assistant to Associate Professors are: Prof. C. W. N. Hart, Associate Professor and Supervisor of Studies in Sociology in the Department of Political Economy; Prof. N. J. Endicott, English; Prof. J. R. MacGillivray, English; Prof. W. L. Sagar, Civil Engineering; Municipal and Structural (on war service); Prof. G. R. Lord, Mechanical Engineering; Prof. R. C. Wren, Mechanical Engineering; Miss D. Bassan, Library Science; Prof. E. L. Danhier, History; Prof. Adrian Macdonald, Elementary Subjects; Dr. F. O. Wishart, Hygiene and Preventive Medicine; Prof. F. V. Winnett, Semitics; Prof. W. S. McCullough, Semitics; Dr. A. M. Fallis, Parasitology; and Prof. C. D. Ronilard, French.

At Victoria College, Prof. H. Bennett has become Dean of Victoria College; Prof. M. St. A. Woodside is the Registrar; Mr. W. F. Little is the Bursar and Superintendent. Prof. R. G. Riddell, on leave of absence, is Librarian and Senior Tutor; Dr. F. L. Barber is acting Librarian; Dr. A. S. Orton is Professor of Old Testament Literature and Exegesis in Emmanuel. Prof. K. H. Coburn is Assistant Professor of English.

At Trinity College, Rev. Dr. W. P. Hatch, of Boston, has joined the divinity staff for the Michaelmas term.

SIDNEY SMITH . . .

undergraduates and graduates of the College and the Chairman of the University of Toronto Board of Governors, Dr. B. MacDonald, for their gracious welcome. He expressed his deep admiration and respect for his predecessor and friend, Dr. Malcolm W. Wallace.

Dr. Smith praised the staff of his new college and said that the academic standards of U.C. were recognized by most universities as very high. The record of the sons and daughters of University College made him accept with pleasure the position of principal. They have brought distinction to themselves and to the college.

"U.C. is greatly respected in Canada and favorably known abroad," he stated.

In his address, Dr. Smith spoke of the many graduates who have paid the highest price in defense of a world of decency and honor: life itself. He confessed that he was deeply touched by the enthusiasm and spirit of the men and women of University College.

In directly addressing the undergraduates, Dr. Smith said, "I hesitate to speak to upper classmen because I realize I am a first year man myself." In regard to his "comrades of first year," he proclaimed them a very responsible group, a powerful link in the chain of progress. But, though he spoke of them as a group, he said it was important that they should not be greeted as a mass but that every student should be afforded individual treatment and consideration. It was the pleasant duty of the university educationalist, he said, to discover individual talents and to help education to build strong intellects.

"Your teachers cannot educate you," he said. "It is a bilateral process, you get out of a college course what you put in. No three, four or five-year course at any institution will give a complete education. The object of the course should be to make the students realize, at graduation, that they know very little and to give them eagerness for more learning."

The classroom, laboratory and library are not, he said, the exclusive providers of education. Extra-curricular activities play an important part in college life and tolerance and good judgment, as well as technical skill and learning are necessary if an education is to be well-balanced.

Dr. Smith pointed out that the standards of University College had direct bearing on the whole University and the welfare of higher education from Antigonish to Vancouver. A weak faculty of arts makes a weak educational foundation for an entire university.

Dr. H. J. Cody, President of the University, introduced Dr. Smith and the representatives of the men and women graduates of U.C. who were present to greet the new principal. Mr. Arthur Fleming, President of the Alumni Federation, spoke briefly, as did Dr. B. MacDonald, Chairman of the Board of Governors.

S.P.S. Awards Bursaries, Pres. Cody Announces

The Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering of the University of Toronto has awarded six bursaries in first year, President Cody announced yesterday.

The bursaries, each of the value of $150, have been awarded to the following students: B. T. Wallace, Riverdale C. I.; J. Bird, East York C. I.; W. Emon, Almoate High School; A. F. Gregory, Lindsay C. I.; D. C. Hubble, Belleville C.I.; and J. W. Rutter, Bowmanville High School.

One bursary to the value of $100 was awarded to H. Bernick, a second year student.

This is the third year in which bursaries of this kind have been awarded.

through the East Wing of the College and completely gutted that part of the building. The fire raged up into the tower and the heat melted the huge bell that used to ring the nine o'clock curfew for the resident students of the time. Some of the metal from the bell was saved and part later went to England to be included in the metal used in casting the bells for the carillon in the Hart House Memorial Tower. So now the old bell tolls on in a different form, though the setting is almost the same.

Another fragment of the bell was made into the sundial now standing in the centre of the Hart House quadrangle. The sundial rests on a pedestal made of a pillar from the original building. On the stone is inscribed "Ece sonans olim mutum nunc aurum horras" which, when rendered into English, means "Formerly noisily, now silently I tell the hours."

The current U.C. initiation brings to mind the popular story of a pillar inscribed with the Latin phrase, "Here lies the body of a freshman," which was one part of the hazing that was done many years ago. Freshmen were led to the stone and with their own eyes saw what happened to one fresh Freshman who ignored some grim Sophomore threat equivalent to "brush cut or else . . ."

Seek Lens Fans For Camera Club

The Camera Club of Hart House is situated in the lower corridor of the House opposite the pool room. The rooms and equipment will be open for inspection by any interested member of Hart House during the noon hour for the remainder of this week and part of next.

The equipment available for members' use consists of three enlargers (Leica, Autofocus, and Horizontal), a Pako printer, Graflex camera, and copying camera. In addition, the club supplies all photographic chemicals, excluding developing agents, and has an excellent photographic library. There are two developing rooms, print dryer, and a stainless steel chemical bench.

Any member of Hart House may join the club, and freshmen are particularly invited to drop around any noon hour and inspect the club's facilities.

University Mourns Chancellor

Princeton Seminary Head Outlines Spiritual Happiness

President Mackay Lays Down Four Basic Elements to Help One Achieve Spiritual Peace of Mind

"BELIEVE IN GOD"

President John A. Mackay of Princeton Theological Seminary, gave the sermon for the opening service arranged by the S.C.M. at Convocation Hall. Before President Mackay began his sermon there was a one-minute silence in remembrance of the worthy achievements of Sir William Mulock.

President Mackay gave the following as the four basic elements that would help one achieve spiritual happiness: Firstly—"Abandon all bypaths and believe adventurously in God." He stated that, too often, easy going is the only test of right direction. As a result we travel in circles and find nothing but insecurity.

The second element, said President Mackay, is "to make a place for God in your life." And he quoted, "Fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." He went on to say that religious faith gives insight into every situation and provides the strength to solve every human problem.

"Accustoming yourself to listen to God and reserving a place for God in your life," said President Mackay, "is the third element. Life is not a cycle but a straight line leading to God. Victory over evil is the birthright of every person."

The fourth element is: "To become a militant member in a Christian community." President Mackay urged the young people starting out on their cultural careers to join the Church, saying, "Do not be afraid to link yourself up with Fellow-Christians. There is no greater fellowship than that of the Church." He concluded by repeating the first basic element: "Abandon all bypaths. Believe adventurously in God."

Sir Bernard Pares To Lecture Here

Sir Bernard Pares, British authority on the history, literature and language of Russia, will arrive at the University this week to lecture at the newly-organized School of Russian Studies. For the past three sessions evening classes in the Russian language have been in operation under the Department of University Extension.

Invited to the University last year, Sir Bernard gave a public lecture and consulted with members of the University staff. This year he will remain for the whole session and will deliver weekly lectures on Thursdays at 4.30 p.m. in Room 8, University College, commencing October 12. His first lecture will be on the history of Russia. These lectures will be open to the students, staff and public.

Sir Bernard Pares was educated at Harrow, Trinity College and Cambridge University in England. From 1906 to 1917 he lectured on the history, language and literature of Russia at the University of Liverpool. He was attached to the Russian Army from 1914 to 1917. Sir Bernard was on the staff of the University of London and was sent to North America by the British Government on a special mission.

Since 1911 he has written 11 publications, the most recent of these being, "Russia," Penguin Series 1940.

Most Outstanding Political And Educational Career Ends With The Passing Of Sir William Mulock

SIR WILLIAM MULOCK

Sir William Saw Birth of U.C.; Observed 85 Years of Growth

Increasingly for 20 years the popular embodiment of the University as well as its Chancellor, Sir William Mulock in his last days could look back over an association with the University of Toronto that exactly matched its own phenomenal growth.

He entered University College with its first freshman class 85 years ago when carpenter's hammers were still sounding on the floors, and lived to admit his own great-grandson to his Bachelor's degree.

In 1859, when the old Residence in the cloisters of the newly-completed building was first opened up, beardless Will Mulock was one of the first boarders, and his signature may still be found scrawled with a diamond on the windowpane of nearby Room 40.

He often recalled writing his Matriculation examinations in the dissecting room of the old Medical School of the University. His first paper was English, and the following question put him completely at ease: "Write a short essay on the statement that examinations are more of a bugbear in anticipation than in reality."

Despite having to work nights for money to pay his fees, he graduated with a Gold Medal in Modern Languages at the age of 20. Yet he mentioned to an interviewer recently, "I was a little older than the other students—rather more advanced."

On the eve of his hundredth birthday he told a Varsity representative that recreation 80 years ago was neither as plentiful nor as varied as it is now. "Association football was the chief source of relaxation in my undergraduate days," he said. "Many's the game of football I've played in the park where the Parliament Buildings are now." Modern rugby he called "a brutal game." "The old game was much more difficult," he laughed. "I developed quite a perspiration at times."

On being elected Vice-Chancellor of the University in 1881, he stated that his policy was "to bring this University into direct touch and sympathy with the University Grad Awarded Prize

John Macdonald, a graduate of this University, has been awarded a cash prize of $1,000 for his novel "Dartly the River Flows," which was entered in the Longman Greene Coward-McMann competition open to Canadian authors. The book, a psychological study, was written just prior to the war.

Born in Toronto, Macdonald's early years were spent at Upper Canada College. In 1931 he came to U. of T. in a Commerce course.

Through his undergraduate years he took an active interest in sports, particularly in rowing and swimming. In his third year he was on the Inter-collegiate Crew Team.

At Christmas, in his second year, he won first prize in the prose contest for The Varsity "Green Issue."

At the beginning of the war Macdonald enlisted in the R.C.N.V.R. In November, 1943, he was promoted to the rank of pay Lieutenant-Commander. He was the first lower deck writer in this war to receive such a promotion.

Aged Chancellor Passes Away at His Residence in His 101st Year: Was Once Cabinet Minister and Postmaster-General For the Laurier Regime: Was Knighted For Service to the Empire

FUNERAL TO BE HELD ON WEDNESDAY

The Right Honourable Sir William Mulock, K.C.M.G., Chancellor of the University, died at his Jarvis St. home at 7:30 yesterday morning after a short illness. The former Dominion Cabinet Minister passed away in his sleep in his hundred and first year.

The son of Doctor Thomas Mulock, a native of King's County, Ireland, and Mary, daughter of John Cawthra, M.L.A., William Mulock was born in the village of Bond Head, Simcoe County, Ontario. He spent his youth on a farm in Simcoe, and received his early education at the Newmarket, Ontario, grammar school.

Campus Issues Continue Policies

The various campus publications are going ahead with all their former vigor and enthusiasm, despite raised printing costs.

R. V. McCormack, editor of the Trinity Review, said that the magazine would carry on as before, with the aim of a high literary standard, the same format as formerly, and the ideal of being "the best magazine on the campus." A. E. Barker, former chairman of the Review, has received a fellowship at Harvard University, and his successor will be chosen at the next meeting of the Review board.

Dr. W. P. M. Kennedy, Dean of the School of Law, said that another editor had not yet been chosen to replace his son, Frere Kennedy, now in the Canadian Army, who was to have been editor of the School of Law Review. He thought, however, that the same policy of a few issues of the Review containing articles of interest to the legal profession would be followed.

Fred Kahn, IV Civil Engineering, editor of the second publication of Tolke Oike in magazine form, said that the issue would represent the "voice of S.P.S." on the campus, expressing the thoughts, interests, ideas, and enthusiasms of the Schoolmen. The first issue, last spring, was largely an experiment, and no advertising was sold. Tolke Oike is to be put on a paying basis this year if possible, through the medium of advertising. A new idea which he hopes will take form is the exchange of articles from the other college and Following his graduation from the University of Toronto in 1863 as a gold medalist in modern languages, he entered Osgoode Hall and was called to the Bar in 1863. Three years later, having obtained his M.A., he accepted a position as examiner and later received a lectureship in Law. Meanwhile, he practised his profession and entered the legal firm of Ross, Lauder, and Mulock, which now bears the name of Mulock, Milliken, Clark, and Redman.

He went to Ottawa as Liberal member for North York in 1882, and was re-elected in 1887, 1891, 1896, 1900, and 1905. In 1896 he became Postmaster General in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Cabinet. It was on his motion two years later that the Inter-Imperial Postage Conference in London adopted penny postage throughout the British Empire.

Sir William organized the Canadian Department of Labour in 1900, and became its head while retaining the position of Postmaster-General.

He was knighted in 1906 for his services to the Empire and attended the coronation of Edward VII the same year.

Following his retirement from politics in 1905, he was appointed to the Ontario High Court of Justice as Chief Justice of the Exchequer Division. In 1923 he succeeded the late Sir William Meredith as Chief Justice of Ontario, a post which he held until his retirement in 1936 at the age of 92.

A member of the Senate of the University since 1873, Sir William was elected Vice-Chancellor in 1881 and re-elected continuously until the pressure

The Fire Of Life

Canada's grand old man is dead. The University's most colorful figure has passed away. A symbol of national, as well as of local achievement, Sir William carries to the grave a spirit and character now extinct in Canadian activities. Such a spirit was one which carried him from the level of a country boy to the heights of political and educational fame. His were the days when the pioneering instinct was in its full blaze of glory, with Sir John A. MacDonald and The Fathers of Confederation lighting the flame of Canada's destiny.

The most manifest aspect of Sir William and the times for which he stood was that he never hesitated to proclaim an unpopular opinion if he thought it important. His circumstances and talents were exceptional enough to warrant him independence of thought. A glance at his career will bear witness to the struggle through which he went to provide himself with the special competence resulting in his strength of character. It is regrettable that a singular spirit no longer prevails. Where today can be found a figure with the potentialities of a Sir William Van Horne, a Sir Edward Blake or any other of the rugged individualists of the time of Sir William Mulock?

He has had a most versatile life which has culminated in his close identification with the whole of Canadian history. At one time a farmer, road worker, a hired boy, Sir William became a scholar, lawyer, educationalist and cabinet minister. He maintained, however, a keen interest in any youthful aspirants with whom he came in contact. Hector Charlesworth recalls him as an affable man, friendly to newspapermen but never making partisan contacts. His whole life was one of consistent action based on fearlessness. He set out to conquer Canadian statesmanship and let nothing bar his way. Canada has been sustained and created by just such fearless men.

Thus as the University flag wafts at half-mast, the campus and the country over which his shadow fell, will be reminded of a man who crammed into one lengthy life activities sufficient to have filled double his number of years. They will recall a man who adjusted himself philosophically to his declining years... a man who fully realized that he would "pass through this world but once."

Several years ago, when Sir William was celebrating his birthday, he meditated upon his life:

"I am still at work with my hands on the plough and my face to the future. The shadows of evening lengthen about me but morning is in my heart. I have lived from the forties of one century to the thirties of another. I have had varied fields of labour and full contacts with men and things. I have warmed both my hands before the fire of life."

The End Of An Era

Sir William Mulock's death marks the termination of a period in the evolution of the University, for Sir William was a member of the first class to take lectures in the building that has been for 85 years the home of University College, the first of the federated colleges to be located on our campus. Moreover he was born within a year of the inauguration of the first lectures in King's College, as the University was called at the time. Between the time that teaching began in 1843 and the time that Sir William enrolled in 1889 as a freshman in the newly completed building that proudly housed University College, the University underwent one of the most troubled periods in its history, often compelled to fight for its very existence to avoid being engulfed by the stormy tide of sectarian disputes or killed by the lethargy of an apathetic government.

When Sir William graduated in the class of 6T3, however, the troubled waters had grown comparatively calm, and the University was free to grow to maturity, for even then there were plans for affiliation with the denominational arts colleges in the Province. It was then that some of the greatest men in the history of the University set about building the foundations of the mighty structure that exists today. As the years passed these men, the true founders of our present institution, were called by death; and another generation, consisting in large part of the graduates of the earliest classes, carried on the work of the first builders. Sir William was one of these, continuing in his capacity of Vice-Chancellor and later as Chancellor the progress towards an educational institution of national and international renown.

Now, the last connection with that first generation of founders and students has been severed, and the University itself has evolved over the years a character of its own. In the first years the University reflected strongly the forceful characters of the men who founded it, but as it grew to maturity it took on distinctive characteristics, until at present has been built a long and proud tradition of its own.

With the realization of this character of the University, quite distinct from the personality of the personalities of the men who serve it, the University embarks upon a new phase of its existence. The men who strove for its foundation have inexorably been called from the scene of their labours, and Sir William was the last of the originals to go. Nor can we look to the buildings to preserve the connection with the early days, for the people of the western world, with their irreverence for the past, seldom plan or expect an edifice to endure longer than the span of human life.

It is to the University's spirit and tradition, which are timeless, that we must look for that continuity and experience that make an institution great. Neither to the men who build it, nor to the buildings which give it material form, but to the traditions of the University itself, will future generations pay homage. For the men are mortal, and the buildings perish, while the traditions that form the lasting part of the University grow ever stronger, and are timeless.

Hart House Art Gallery

An exhibition of pictures that is well worth seeing, particularly for Torontonians, is now on display in the Art Gallery of Hart House. Apart from the fact that the artist himself, Mr. R. York Wilson, lives and works in this city, the themes of his paintings are to a very wide extent taken from scenes and impressions of the city herself or her outskirts. Although this exhibition cannot do full justice to the bulk of Mr. Wilson's work, most of his major works being on exhibition elsewhere, an insight can be gained into the nature of his way of presentation.

By far the most striking work is entitled Street in a Dim-Out. This painting has yet to be acknowledged as being one of the finest works in the whole of Canadian art. The green mysterious darkness of the sky, only broken by the faint glimmer of the moon, pervades the whole picture and casts a dark greenish shadow on the silence of the houses. With comparatively few but admirably used colours the artist manages to convey the whole complexity of impressions with which this scene struck him.

Another of the large paintings was conceived by a colourful scene of Queen Street. Zoot-Suits and Gypsies shows two zoot-suiters talking in a business-like manner and two gypsy-girls. The picture is very successful in the use of colours and the contrast between the matter-of-fact attitude of the zoot-suiters and the easy-going venality of the girls. Generally speaking, Mr. Wilson is less interested in the psychology of faces than in the posture of people as a medium of expressing his attitude towards his object; facial expression serves to stress posture and movement.

However, in Public Library Mr. Wilson manages

GILHOOLEY GONE for good

Submarines, secret diplomacy and stirring personal courage are all included in the true story behind the expulsion of the corrupt Gilhooley machine from power in Hart House and the return of the rightful Warden, J. Burblin Lickerbreth, long exiled by the machine's machinations. Mr. Lickerbreth returned suddenly by submarine just before college opened and dispossessed the usurpers just as they were completing plans to clip each male undergraduate for $12 "membership fees" in Hart House.

The return of Mr. Lickerbreth was the first direct result of the free elections forced upon Hart House last year. The new committees, after taking brush cuts at the Hart House barber shop, decided to make a clean sweep of the situation and dispatched Hank Razby of the Library Committee to find the Warden. Equipped with waterwings, an inexhaustible supply of one truckshop doughnut, and a copious supply of knick-knacks for trading with the natives, Razby stepped into a shiny new Sogto Eight, designed for traveling unrecognized in, and disappeared down a ventilating shaft.

Razby's report, consisting of the cryptic statement that he had found the Warden imprisoned in the depths of the University Library, set the committee-men to work constructing a submarine in the University College tinshop, and O/S G. Ross Bobkurth, U.N.T.D. and member of the Hart House Board of Stewards, set about secretly training a crew. When the ship was completed the skipper and his crew set off down the subterranean Taddle to the stacks, where it was found that the leakage of water through the Library skylight had raised the water level to a point where they could sail their craft right up to Mr. Lickerbreth's prison in the pump room where he had been guarded for four years by a fiendish truckshop attendant who, by threats of death by salmon sandwiches, had forced him to sign letters purporting to have been written from England.

The guard was overpowered with a ten-dollar bill and would have escaped unharmed had he not, unfortunately, reached for a hidden cache of chocolate bars, a conditioned reflex which sets in whenever he sees large bills, and got himself slugged by a jittery committee-man.

During the return trip a second force of committee-men made sure that escape for the usurpers was impossible, and as soon as Mr. Lickerbreth landed at the edge of Hart House Pool Gilhooley and his cohorts were seized and banished to the theatre to tend mushrooms. From this position they have been elevated through the magnanimity of the restored Warden, to the positions they held before he was banished. After thanking Razby, Bobkurth and the committee-men said, "These unfortunate men have learned their lesson. It is my wish that they continue in their former jobs. 'Acting Warden' Gilhooley will be Comptroller and 'Acting Comptroller' Cowcatcher will become Assistant Comptroller. In short, everyone will now stop acting and perhaps we shall get some work done."

As a reward for his services in leading the expedition, and as a service to the campus which has so warmly welcomed him back, Warden Lickerbreth has offered to translate Bobkurth's Varsity editorials into English.

NO REGULAR MEETING

The Varsity Christian Fellowship held its fall reunion meeting on Saturday evening, Sept. 30. The group met at the corner of Bayview and Moore at 7:45 p.m. for a welter roast.

In addition to the 80 members who attended, some of the nurses from Sick Children's, General, and Western Hospitals were guests.

There was no regular meeting, but the evening was given to entertainment. Community singing of camp-fire songs opened the program and games were played.

of other public duties forced his retirement in 1900.

An ardent sportsman, Sir William fifty years ago donated the Mulock Cup to promote intramural sports on the campus.

Lady Mulock, the former Sarah Crowther, died in 1912, and their sons William and Crawthra died some years later. Other children are Mrs. Henry H. O'Flynn and Mrs. A. E. Kirkpatrick. W. P. Mulock, Member of Parliament for North York and Postmaster-General of Canada, is a grandson.

The funeral will be held on Wednesday at 2:30 p.m. from St. Paul's Church, Bloor St. East. President Cody and Canon F. H. Wilkinson, rector of St. Paul's, will officiate.

THE ROUND-UP . . .

For further assurance that the sports season is just around that proverbial corner, the rabid fan need only look over today's Athletic Office bulletin which emphatically states that all tennis entries shall be filed by this evening. These entries, accompanied by the 50 cent fee, can be placed in the Athletic Office up until five o'clock and only until that time. Wednesday, of course, will usher in the opening set.

New champions in all classes are almost certain to be crowned after the final game has been played. Trinity's Mel Jones, who had dominated the tennis picture with some regularity, graduated, leaving the field wide open. Thus the McEachern Cup, symbol of the singles championship, will find a new shelf to rest on for the next twelve months.

University College racquetters, holders of the team championship as well as the Victoria Tennis Trophy, will have a battle on their hands to retain the honors. Not only has the College suffered due to premature graduation, but rival faculties have considerably strengthened their membership of competent racquet wielders.

The exponents of this game must certainly be praying for a spell of kindness on the part of the weatherman as the 20-day tournament of last year can almost be filed amongst the nightmares.

Later on in the week, Friday to be more exact, the annual golf tourney will take place over the St. Andrews course. Here the situation is the reverse of that found in tennis, as golfers from School have dominated the complete field in recent years.

Gord Bell walked off the greens last year with the individual honors, and his running mates were well up to help cop the team championship. There seems little reason why this cannot be repeated this year.

And let it be said and understood now that the entry fee in each tourney is necessary to cover the cost of balls as well as the greens fees at St. Andrews.

The opening kick-off in rugby and soccer are less than two weeks away with the opener on the eleventh. On looking over the records of the past few seasons, one finds that the practice season becomes shorter year by year. The merits of this are questionable, but more on that at a later date. For the present it may well be noted that unless great care is taken in grouping the teams, the Arts colleges may become the weak-sisters. Both Victoria and Trinity suffered that fate a year ago, and now U.C. may be relegated to suffer with them. St. Mike's alone are exempt as they will field a team as strong, if not stronger, than that of last year which fought into the semi-finals. More interest could be maintained by grouping the weak teams rather than spreading them out as doormats for the others.

Every day shortly after four, finds Hec Phillips, veteran coach of Varsity teams and himself a one-time British Empire champion, tutoring runners at the Stadium. Freshmen are more than welcome. The junior track meet will be held on the twelfth of the month with the senior meet once week later.

AMEN . . . That grand old man has passed on. Sir William Mulock, who played on one of the first University College football teams, who donated what is now known as the Mulock Cup, who followed University sports with a keen eye, is with us no more. The loss is a great one.

Early last year in an interview with The Varsity, Sir William expressed the opinion that football today is a more streamlined and a softer game than it was in his day. This vital link with the past has been severed. He is gone, but everything he stood for is carried on. The Mulock Cup is more than a mere piece of silverware. It represents Sir William's best.

SOCCER

Will the soccer players from last year's University College team please turn out along with any new freshmen enthusiasts? First organization and practice meeting is tonight at 4:30 in Men's Common Room, U.C. If you can't be present, contact Sid Jourard at Ju. 1913, after 7:30.

old-fashioned dress, trying to break strict morality by keeping the finger-nails of her heavy hand long and painted. The humorous effect, obviously intended, is rather weakened by the background.

Mr. Wilson knows how to use colouring for a great variety of effects. He uses different shadings of the sky, and cloud formation, to emphasize his theme, movement and general sentiment of the picture. A very successful illustration of this is a painting showing men burning twitches on the rich dark-brown soil on the furrowed slope of a hill.

Taken as a whole, this exhibition is a very successful show which everyone interested in Canadian art should see. Mr. Wilson has kindly consented to give a talk on his paintings in Hart House Art Gallery on Wednesday, October 11, at 1 p.m.

faculty publications, which would constitute an interchange of ideas and opinions, with the aim of knitting the University more closely into a unit.

It is hoped that a high literary standard will be maintained, and the old Toke Oike, which appears intermittently throughout the year, will not be changed, and will continue to be published as before.

A major change in Acta Victoriana was predicted by its editor, Bill McMaster, IV English Language and Literature. Acta has narrowed its scope in the past, he said, until it has often become of interest only to a few courses.

Its field is to be broadened to take in the interests of those whose classes keep them away from the College. Club and society activities are to be given more attention than formerly and representative activities are to be chosen from each course in an endeavour to include the interests of the whole College. The proposed six issues will be representative of the activities of the College rather than strictly literary.

The many duties of Betsy Mosbaugh, Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity, and co-editor of The Undergraduate, University College's magazine, have prevented her from having time to give much thought as yet to the form or number of issues of the magazine.

The Sportswoman

By Peggy Wallace

RETURN TO NORMAL . . .

Now that the hurly-burly of registration week with its exciting round of teas, fresher parties, sight-seeing tours and enrolment duties has become one of our cherished memories, we can begin to adjust ourselves to the daily rounds of college life. For us of the genus Sportswoman this means a goodly proportion of study tempered with extra-curricular activities—not the least of which is SPORTS. This opinion, we believe, is shared by most of our fellow students and it is not for them that we write, but rather for those who have not yet discovered the gay camaraderie, the sturdy friendships, the all-round good fun that awaits the girl who participates in a University sport. What is more wonderful still, skill and perfection are relatively unimportant! As far as enjoyment is concerned, the veriest novice will get as much thrill out of her contribution to her team's success as will the most seasoned veteran. Try it, gals, and see if we're not right! Here is your opportunity.

BASEBALL MEETING . . .

Jan Murray, our efficient and amiable boss, is also in charge of the Interfaculty Baseball tournament. All faculties are asked to send their baseball representatives to meet with her in St. Hilda's common room at 4:45 p.m. today to discuss the fall play-offs. Jan is especially interested in seeing the smaller faculties represented. Baseball only needs nine girls who are enthusiastic and there are few, if any, faculties that don't host at least nine women. We hear that Meds have a large number of freshies this year and School is not far behind. Come along you gals in Dental Nursing, Meds, School—don't leave all the fun to U.C., Vic and St. Hilda's. Send a rep to this baseball meeting and see that your faculty fields a team.

ATTENTION, GALS . . .

You've probably been so busy with the social whirl attendant on starting back to school that you've given little time to a consideration of your Physical Education classes. Miss Forster, with the end in view of bringing order to such chaos, has asked us to give you this message—

Tomorrow, or as soon after as possible, there will be an announcement on this page from the Physical Education department regarding their courses. It will contain information for freshies as to enrolment, choice of classes, time-tables, etc., in fact everything you're been wondering about. And for your girls in the upper years there will be something about the new classes and the choices open to you. Miss Forster has, in going to all this extra trouble, probably saved us much headache and indecision in settling into our proper niche. Such thoughtfulness deserves a large vote of thanks from such harried students as we. Leave us watch for that notice and get the latest information on Phys. Ed. classes.

U.C. Women's Tennis Begins

Today marks the beginning of the University College Women's Interfaculty Tennis Tournament. The games are to be played on Vic courts and participants must supply their own balls. Results of the matches will be posted either in the Women's Union or the Rotunda.

The following games are scheduled for tomorrow:

Mary Ferguson vs. Anne Levine, 9:00 a.m.

Mary Reid vs. Mona Eisler, 10:00 a.m.

Sabine Joffe vs. Barbara Brook, 1:30 p.m.

Clare Carew vs. Rae Snowbell, 2:00 p.m.

Milene Matuska vs. Jean Wolfraim, 3:00 p.m.

Kay Williams vs. Anne Sheperd, 3:30 p.m.

Games must be played at the times listed and failure to appear will constitute a default.

M. and P. SOCIETY

The M. and P. Society will conduct a book exchange for those interested in buying and selling text-books used in the course in Room 20 in the Physics Building today at 1:30 p.m. Bring the books you want to sell.

Morgan Heads Division On Wartime Information

Professor Morgan to Provide Public-at-Large with Information Dealing with Post-War Reconstruction

ON LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Professor Lorne T. Morgan, associate professor of Political Economy at the University and author of the recent widely publicized satire, "Homo the Sap," will be on temporary leave of absence from Toronto during the present academic year. Since mid-September he has been at Ottawa as head of the Reconstruction Information Division of the Canadian government's Wartime Information Board.

The post is a recently established one, created in March this year, according to C. Brough Macpherson, lecturer in political science here, who returned this semester to the University after having been on leave of absence at Ottawa for one and a half years.

In an interview yesterday, Mr. Macpherson explained that Dr. Morgan's work was to provide the public at large with information dealing with post-war reconstruction.

"The Wartime Information Board," Mr. Macpherson said, "has its counterpart in the United States, where it is called the Office of Wartime Information (O.W.I.), headed by the former newspaperman, Elmer Davis. The Canadian W.I.B., though, with its staff of 150, is much smaller.

"Part of Dr. Morgan's duties will be to organize the information included in releases which are sent out fortnightly to editorial offices of all Canadian newspapers. They are also mailed to departments of the army, navy and air force, citizens' rehabilitation committees, libraries, trade unions, church groups—and, in short, to all those taking an interest in what will be after the war."

Mr. Macpherson said he was sure Prof. Morgan would find Ottawa, apart from its housing shortage, a pleasant city in which to work. "It was not what you would call a professors' convention," Mr. Macpherson said, "but while I was there I was amazed to see the number of university instructors from all over Canada present. They ranged from the University of Toronto to the University of British Columbia to Dalhousie University—all doing work for the government bureaus."

Prof. Morgan has a distinguished career in economics behind him. Born in Manchester, Mass., he obtained his B.A. degree from the University of British Columbia in 1924, and the following year won his M.A. standing at the University of California, where he was also an instructor.

Prof. Morgan has been at the University here since 1930, when he became assistant professor in economics. He was in the merchant marine during the last war.

Military Training

Regulations of the Board of Governors respecting Military Training for the session 1944-45 are as follows.

1. As National Selective Service grants postponement of military service to students of the University only on condition that they undergo compulsory military training while at the University, of a standard recognized by the Department of National Defence, all male students, both undergraduate and graduate, except as noted in Section 2 below, whether or not they are British subjects, will be required to take training in the University Naval Training Division, in the Canadian Officers Training Corps, or in the University Air Squadron.

2. The undermentioned categories of students will not be required to take military training in the University:

- Students who are on active service, or who have been discharged from active service.
- Students who are receiving training outside the University as members of Reserve Units of the Canadian Navy, Army and Air Force.
- Students enrolled in the Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Years of the Faculty of Medicine.
- Students who are certified by the University Health Service to be physically unfit for military training.

3. All students who are required to take military training in the University will register immediately with the University Naval Training Division, with the First or Second Battalion, Canadian Officers Training Corps, or with the University Air Squadron.

4. Students who claim exemption from military training under Section 2(b) or on any other ground will apply for this exemption at the office of the University Registrar not later than October 7, 1944.

5. Any student who is required to take military training under Section 1 above, and who fails to comply fully with the regulations respecting such training, may be ordered, on the recommendation of the Court of Discipline, to withdraw from the University.

people whose institution she is." Pursuing this plan, he became chiefly responsible for the Federation Act that brought Victoria, Wyndham, Knox, and St. Michael's into the University. Although his name first appears on the minute-books as author of a motion of censure against the precursors of Federation 81 years ago, more mature consideration showed him that before the University could play her proper part, the hostility between the state-supported and denominational colleges must cease.

During his tenure of office and at his instigation the faculty of law was established, the Ontario Agricultural College was affiliated, the medical faculty re-established, and equipment provided for the prevention as well as the cure of disease.

Pursuing such expansion, he bitterly attacked the prejudice of those who feared the introduction of science, medical and physical, into the halls of classical learning.

"A University's work," he once stated, "is not confined to the lecture room. Her every action should be an object-lesson that is honourable and true."

"I sympathize with all those who attach special importance to the practical branch of University work which most concerns them, but in the interest of the University as a whole I venture to suggest that such zeal should not exceed the bounds of friendly rivalry."

"It has been my aim to unite these forces for one common purpose—the extension and advancement of higher learning."

As Chancellor, his stamina on the warm June days when he officiated at commencement exercises used to cause awe among the younger participants, who found the length of the ceremonies (such as his last convocation, when he admitted no fewer than 800 students to the B.A. degree) scarcely bearable.

"I always try to put a little extra warmth into each handshake," he would say of these occasions.

Ever since the opening of Mulock House, Whitney Hall, 13 years ago, Sir William made an annual visit to his name-sake residence, usually to the Christmas dinner and the carol-singing party afterwards.

In 1943 he came to a tea held in his honour at Mulock House, attended by girls from all the University College residences. When refreshments had been served and "his girls" were grouped around him, the Chancellor reminisced about the history of the University while his chauffeur waited patiently at the door.

Every girl who has attended one of these parties has a favorite anecdote to tell, often something he said to her personally. Two years ago, at a special visit to Hutton House, he thrilled everyone by reciting from memory the whole of Lincoln's Gettysburg speech.

That year he presented all the girls in residence with small nickel-plated plaques bearing the quotation that was his motto:

"I shall pass through this world but once; any good thing therefore that I can do or any kindness that I can show to any human being, let me do it now. Let me not defer it or neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again."

Urgent Appeal For Blood Is Launched By Red Cross

Riddell Heads New Department

A new department tentatively called the Institute of Diplomacy, will be created at the University of the beginning of next September, headed by Walter Alexander Riddell, Canadian High Commissioner to New Zealand, it was announced Saturday by President H. J. Cody.

Plans on organization of the department are still "inchoate," said Dr. Cody, pointing out that Mr. Riddell had accepted the appointment and would arrive at the University next fall as full professor related to the Department of Political Economy.

The Institute would not be a separate division, the President said, but would probably be co-ordinated with other existing courses, particularly history, political science, economics and various foreign languages.

"It will, tentatively speaking, provide for those undergraduates from Toronto and from other Canadian universities who wish to prepare themselves for employment on foreign embassies and diplomatic bodies," Dr. Cody said.

As example, the President explained that if a student wished to become attached to the diplomatic office in China, as background the student would study the University's course in the Chinese language and would learn, in particular, Chinese history, economics and political development.

"I first met Mr. Riddell at a conference at the League of Nations at Geneva in 1926 and found him to be a most competent gentleman," said President Cody. "He had a wide background in welfare legislation, international relations and diplomatic training, all of which should be of supreme value to the Institute. It is not every day that you can obtain a man like him, and he is a great prize for the University."

Mr. Riddell's record affirms the President's statement. Now 63, the commissioner has been called "the greatest authority on League of Nations affairs the North American continent has produced."

Born in Stratford, Ont., he won his B.A. degree at the University of Manitoba in 1907, became a Bachelor of Divinity at Union Theological Seminary in 1912 and received his M.A. at Columbia University in 1916.

He did post-graduate research in the archives of Ottawa, Paris and London. In 1913 he was director of social surveys for the Presbyterian and Methodist churches. He was appointed Superintendent of Trades and Labor for the Ontario government in 1916, and three years later became Ontario's Deputy Minister of Labor.

He outlined and urged upon the Dominion Government a scheme resulting in the 1918 Employment and Coordination Act. As a commissioner for the Ontario government, he drafted the Mothers' Allowance Act of 1920 and was also an author of the Minimum Wage Act.

From 1925 to 1937, he was Canadian Advisor Officer at the League of Nations in Geneva, and since 1932 has been Dean of the Diplomatic Corps of Permanent Representatives accredited to the League of Nations. At Geneva, he was member of the Canadian delegation to the Disarmament Conference, delegate plenipotentiary at the Conference for Limitation of Naval Armament and at the Conference on Limitations of the Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs. From 1920 to 1925 he was with the National Labor Office at Geneva.

Great Need Has Arisen For More Blood: University Students Asked to Support New Campaign to the Utmost

SECURE A DONOR'S CARD

The Red Cross has made an urgent appeal to the whole of Canada, asking for more blood from more people. In view of the fact that the need has never before been so great, the Red Cross requests University students to do their best to support this campaign to the utmost.

From three to five donations are needed to make one bottle of plasma for overseas shipment, and a wounded soldier may require anywhere from five to twenty-five bottles of plasma for one transfusion. This shows how important it is that everyone who is capable of doing so, should give his or her blood as often as possible. A man may donate about every nine to ten weeks, and a woman approximately every three months.

In order to make arrangements for times in which students may donate their blood, a University committee has been formed. To assist them with their work, the committee is asking each individual student to fill out a Blood Donor's Card, which may be obtained from their Faculty Office. They are asking you to do this regardless of whether or not you may be contributing already, or even in cases where it is not possible for you to do so.

The sooner these cards are returned, the sooner plans can be made to carry this campaign through.

McGill to Celebrate Anniversary of Founder

Montreal—(CUP)—The 200th anniversary of the birth of James McGill, founder of McGill University, will be celebrated on the McGill campus next Friday. The university was established in 1821, eight years after James McGill's death in 1813, when he left his country estate and 10,000 pounds sterling to The Royal Institute for the Advancement of Learning for the purpose of founding a university.

Since McGill's foundation more than 20,000 students have received graduation diplomas at McGill convocations and the university, which once consisted of only one building, is now the second largest university in Canada.

Campus Religion Too Staid Says Dr. John A. Mackay

"Religious Messages Need More Emotional Appeal" says President of Princeton Theological Seminary

ADDRESSED S. C. M.

Religious leaders while speaking at University campuses are "too staid, too backward and too dignified," President John A. Mackay of Princeton Theological Seminary, said yesterday at a meeting of the Students' Christian Movement in the debates room, Hart House.

"Religious messages for students and professors must have a more emotional appeal," Dr. Mackay told more than 30 theological students and ministers. "A religious movement is never born in a refrigerator. Staid services are suitable, perhaps, for a Sunday morning gathering in church, but what we require are pioneers who are prepared to speak in terms of campus daily life. Often the impression is made that the Lord is a snob."

Dr. Mackay said it was his impression, while he was travelling about the United States, that there seemed to be a revival of interest in religion among universities, and that there were many students and faculty members "who crave religious messages they can understand," but who had nobody suitably prepared to provide them with such spiritual messages.

"Religious leaders on campuses are scared to death of stirring up religious arguments," he said. "What is required are men who are not afraid to become evangelists, men who are not too rigid."

Dr. Mackay pointed out that there were many laymen who should be stimulated to spread the Gospel as well as men of the cloth.

The desire of professors of arts, philosophy and sciences in United States universities recently to spread Christian principles among the academic circles, with whom they are more intimately acquainted than ministers, was entirely to be condoned, the president said.

"Just as the Communist and Socialists preach their gospel to large groups, so the church, in voicing its tenets, ought not to limit itself to minority groups," he said.

It was his impression, said Dr. Mackay, that a revival of interest in religion was clearly manifested in the United States by labor circles, rural people, academicians, "and to certain extent by literary circles."

In introducing Dr. Mackay, President H. J. Cody said that the speaker was a Scotsman by birth, who had spent many years in South America and the United States, and he was recognized as a great religious leader.

"After the war," said President Cody, "we expect a tremendous increase in the number of students at the University. I am sure the church will be prepared to help those amongst these many who will require spiritual aid."

Hazing is Fun Retort Frosh

Toronto students disagree sharply with the view of Dr. R. C. Wallace, Principal of Queen's University, that hazings are "puerile, foolish, and sadistic," according to The Varsity's most recent campus poll.

Bernard Zarnett, an S.P.S. Soph, said "Initiations are good things to have because they bring out the spirit of brotherhood in students, and anyway they are a lot of fun."

"Seriously," he continued, "I think the frosh enjoy hazing more than the sophs do. Most of them come here looking forward to it."

According to G. Johns, I Chemical Engineering, hazing gives a freshman a chance to meet other students of his class in a jovial and friendly manner. "Moreover," he said, "hazings should be more on the intellectual than the bodily side. Sometimes they do go too far and should be toned down."

Margot Inglis, Trinity Household Economics freshe, said "Hazings are lots of fun and not as bad as many people think. I wouldn't abolish them because they help the freshmen get together with their classmates. Besides, much as I enjoy being hazed, I think I shall derive more pleasure next year in hazing and meeting the new freshmen."

Gerald Berman, II M. & P., said, "Carried to extremes, hazings do become very puerile, but I am all for them in a milder form. They add zest to college life, and start the term off with a bang for both freshman and sophomores."

According to Charlotte Samuels, II Pass, hazings teach the new students that they are actually in a place of higher learning and that academic work is not sufficient to make a good scholar. "No broken bones, mind you," she added. "Just the odd black and blue mark is plenty, don't you think?"

"It is part of the fun of University life," said Jean Morrison, I C. & F. "I see nothing wrong with hazing when said."

U.C. Players' Guild Want Male Actors

The Player's Guild held its initial meeting yesterday afternoon in the Women's Union Theatre. Freshies were rounded up to participate in this year's dramatic productions and refreshments were served.

President Mal Green and Ken Peck, director and production manager, outlined their prospective plans for the year. Mal Green gave a short history of the Guild and stated that there was a great deal of scope in every branch of dramatic activity for those interested in drama. Ken Peck voiced everyone's enthusiasm over the re-opening of Hart House.

The Guild's main problem is the lack of male actors. The Guild will welcome any men with dramatic ambitions. "Why don't Schoolmen or Meds ever make a showing?" asked Joyce Sanderson.

There will be casting for a number of male roles tonight in the Committee Room of the Women's Union at 8:30 p.m. sharp.

S.A.C. MEMBERS

Members of the Students' Administrative Council are asked to meet in the Council Office, Hart House, promptly at 1:45 p.m. on Wednesday and to attend in a body the funeral service for Sir William Mulock.

The Council meeting called for Wednesday at 4:30 p.m. will be postponed until Friday at 4:30 p.m. in Room 82, University College.

Sir William's Last Rites In St. Paul's Wednesday

The funeral of the late Right Honourable Sir William Mulock, P.C., K.C.M.G., will be held in St. Paul's Church, Bloor Street East, Toronto, at 2:30 p.m. on Wednesday, October 4.

A section of the Church will be reserved for members of the Board of Governors and the Senate, other senior members of the University, and the Students' Administrative Council. On request, the ushers will show them to this section.

Lectures and laboratory classes will be withdrawn, and the University, library and administrative offices closed after 12:30 p.m.

Registrar.

Are Men Smarter Than Women? Varsity Statistics Give the Answer

Whenever the annual Arts class list appears some time in July, its pages are perused by students eager to find out where they stood. As there has always been much debate on the question of whether or not men are cleverer than women, The Varsity's statisticians have studied the class list with a view to drawing conclusions in this argument.

According to the class list of the Faculty of Arts published last summer, a greater percentage of men succeeded in attaining Grade A or First Class Honours. However, the names of a greater percentage of men failed to appear on the class list in any capacity. The percentage of First Class Honours in Honour Courses rose from 14.2 per cent of those obtaining standing in First Year, to 20.1 per cent of those obtaining standing in the Fourth Year. In the Pass Course the percentage dropped from 7.4 in First Year to 2.8 in the Third Year.

Due to the fact that there are more women than men in the Faculty of Arts, the statisticians reduced the totals to percentages and their conclusions are reached by comparison of these percentages rather than by actual numbers. In the First Year of Honours Courses, twice as many men as women obtained First Class Honours; however, seven times as many men as women were transferred to the Second Year of the Pass Course. The same percent of both sexes obtained Below the Line Standing, while the women led in classes II and III, which comprised one-third and one-

University Regulations Concerning Military Training

ROUTINE TO BE FOLLOWED IN DEALING WITH

- (1) AN ORDER—MEDICAL EXAMINATION
- (2) AN ORDER—MILITARY TRAINING
- (3) AN ORDER OF POSTPONEMENT OF MILITARY TRAINING

I

1. Each student who receives an Order—Medical Examination from the Divisional Registrar "B" will take this order to the Orderly Room of the unit in which he is enrolled for military training and obtain a certificate showing that he is taking this training satisfactorily.

2. He will then present both order and certificate at the Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall. A record will be made of the order, which will be returned to him, and the certificate will be retained in the Registrar's Office.

3. As the Mobilization Section "B" has declined to accept the categories assigned to students by physicians or medical boards other than those named by the Section, the student must comply with the instructions contained in the order and present himself for medical examination at the time and place indicated.

4. If the time set for the medical examination conflicts with important University work, such as an academic examination, he may, on applying to the Divisional Registrar, have the date changed; or if he should be called for a medical examination outside Toronto, the Divisional Registrar will, on request, arrange for him to take the examination in Toronto.

II

5. Each student who receives an Order—Military Training from the Divisional Registrar "B" will take this order to the Orderly Room of the unit in which he is enrolled for military training and obtain a certificate showing that he is taking this training satisfactorily.

6. He will then present both order and certificate at the Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall. A record will be made of the order, which will be returned to him, and the certificate will be retained in the Registrar's Office.

7. The student must apply immediately to the Mobilization Section for postponement of Military Training in order that he may continue at the University; in his application for postponement he should state the year and course in which he is enrolled and indicate that the University Registrar is forwarding a certification of his academic standing and attendance at military training. When he receives from the Mobilization Section a letter stating that he has been granted the desired postponement he will then return the Order—Military Training to the Divisional Registrar.

III

8. Each student who receives an order of Postponement of Military Training will follow the procedure outlined in sections 1 and 2 above.

IV

9. Each student is warned that he must inform the Divisional Registrar promptly of any change in his home or permanent address.

Tribute Paid Sir William By Heads Of All Faculties

President Cody New Chancellor

Registrar A. B. Fennell told The Varsity yesterday that the Senate of the University of Toronto has agreed to appoint President H. J. Cody to the position of Chancellor of the University, left vacant by the death of Sir William Mulock.

A few days prior to his death, Sir William Mulock was re-elected Chancellor.

The holder of the office of Chancellor of the University is, under ordinary circumstances, elected by the graduates of the University for a period of four years. In the case of a vacancy in the office of Chancellor before the term of office for which he was elected has expired the vacancy is filled by an appointment of the Senate at a special meeting called for that purpose. The successor holds office for the remainder of the term for which the Chancellor was elected.

The duties of the Chancellor are to preside at Convocations and to confer degrees.

Varsity Symphony Holds Auditions

The University Symphony Orchestra is rebanding this year, again under the conductorship of John Reymes-King, M.A., Mus.B. Auditions were held in the U.C. Women's Union last night to bring the orchestra up to its full strength of 65 members.

The orchestra has been in existence intermittently for some years but achieved its first important success in February, 1943, after Victor Feldbril became conductor, according to Hanus Gruber, assistant conductor. Under the baton of John Reymes-King, organist of the Metropolitan Church, Toronto, its success was continued last year. Mr. Reymes-King, an experienced organist, was formerly conductor of a choir at Cambridge University.

Hanus Gruber, a student in I Music last year, remains associate conductor of the orchestra, although now a private in the Army Intelligence Department.

Performers in the orchestra are recruited from the University students and students of the Conservatory of Music, and do not need to have had any previous orchestral experience. The purpose of the group, according to Hanus Gruber, "is to provide experience and fun for people who like music, not to put on a world-shattering performance."

This year's new executive includes Katherine Williams, Jean McMillen and Elaine Fricker, all undergraduates, as well as George Armbruster and Allison Kemp, who held the positions of Chief Librarian and Personnel Manager respectively last year.

The orchestra will rehearse weekly until the first concert which is tentatively scheduled for the middle of January. If time permits, more than one concert will be presented, but the objective of the group, according to Gruber, is to present one good concert rather than several mediocre ones. In choosing a program the orchestra does not try to play down to the public but to offer a true symphonic evening with one major soloist part.

Each performer provides his own instrument with the exception of the tympany and other instruments which are extremely difficult to procure.

The orchestra is sponsored financially by the Students' Administrative Council, and the services of all its members are completely voluntary.

The Late Chancellor Was Respected For His Leadership, Farsightedness, and Sincere Devotion to His Alma Mater

A PIONEER; BENEFACTOR

The heads of the different faculties and colleges of the University have expressed their regret in behalf of the University over the loss of Sir William Mulock. Principal Sidney Smith of University College stated that Sir William Mulock did not merely belong to Ontario but was well-known in the Maritimes and regarded as a leader in public affairs in Western Canada. "His distinguished career in the Judiciary of Ontario parallels his attainments in the administration of Justice and in the field of education."

Doctor H. Bennett, registrar of Victoria College said, "More than any other one man Sir William was responsible for the consummation of the scheme of Federation which made Victoria a partner in the University of Toronto. This was the first step in the unique combination of State and Church, a combination which today is providing a model for other Universities of the continent. The success of the plan is a monument to his far-sightedness and wisdom."

"In the life and experience of Sir William there is inspiration and example for every student of this University," states Dean W. P. M. Kennedy of the School of Law. "The University was indeed his Alma Mater and one to which he gave a devotion not only sentimental but practical as well."

Dean C. R. Young of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, said that the University was the main interest in the life of Sir William and one which absorbed most of his time and energy. "All may now enjoy the fruits of his labor which have common acknowledgment," he ended.

Provost F. H. Cosgrave spoke for the graduates when he stated that the office of Chancellor was occupied with great dignity by Sir William and that former members of the University would miss his impressive figure at Convocation and other University functions.

OCE Library Grads In Great Demand

Graduate librarians of the Library School course at O.C.E. are now being offered responsible positions in the National Film Board, the Wartime Information Board, and in many large government offices and private companies, according to Miss Barnstead, director of the School. She said that emphasis is being laid now in the curriculum on the preparation for this type of work and for the expansion and establishment of regional and county libraries after the war.

At present, the demand for graduates of the school far exceeds the supply, owing to the reduction of enrolment because of enlistments and the attractions of immediate jobs for fresh B.A. holders. The registration this year is 22. Of these ten are from Ontario, three from British Columbia, five from Saskatchewan, one from Quebec, and two from Trinidad. Universities represented are: Toronto, McMaster, Ottawa, Queen's, Western, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Bishop's College, London (England).

The Need Is Great

At this very moment, on grim and ravaged battlefields all over the world, brave men are suffering and dying. A great many of these heroes can and are being saved through the efforts of the Red Cross by means of blood transfusions given right on the field of battle, at field dressing stations, and at base hospitals. This life-saving blood is obtained from the voluntary donations of men and women who realize that they are living a life of comparative comfort and ease only because of the tremendous sacrifices on the part of their fellows who have taken up arms against the foe.

Every day increasing quantities of blood are required. From three to five individual donations are necessary to produce one bottle of plasma; a wounded soldier may require anywhere from five to 25 bottles of plasma for a single transfusion.

Here within the peaceful confines of the campus, we lead a life secure from the horrors of war. How little we are asked to contribute in this time of general sacrifice! By merely filling out a Blood Donor's Card which may be easily obtained at any Faculty Office, and which will lead to blood donation, one may help to save a precious life. This is a particularly painless way in which to serve the common cause of humanity. A man may donate blood every nine or ten weeks, a woman, every three months.

A University committee has been formed to organize student donations. In order to complete their plans, it is imperative that they receive as many of the Blood Donor's Cards, properly filled out, as soon as possible. Remember, today the need is greater than ever before!

The Student Paper

The Varsity, the Undergraduate Newspaper, is a student's journalistic organ intended to give universal coverage to all campus news. From time immemorial, students of diverse faculties and colleges have bitterly complained that their particular organizations were not receiving their due share of publicity for their functions. This is not due to negligence on behalf of the overworked staff of the newspaper, but due to the fact that the news staff is not representative of the entire University. Most of the reporters are enrolled in the Arts courses; this is not unnatural when one considers that these students generally have lighter time-tables and their work on the newspaper usually proves of value in their studies.

There are, however, a few students engaged in professional studies who are able to find time to contribute to this all-varsity effort; they are, unfortunately, all too few. The smaller faculties who feel that this state of affairs is detrimental to the success of their extra-curricular activities, should appoint a semi-official representative to The Varsity, invested with the responsibility of reporting all faculty news.

The Engineering Society has carried out this practice for the past few years with excellent success. This system is not only of value to the faculty concerned, but also contributes to a more interesting and more universal campus publication.

Scourge

At the present time, the federal government is engaged in a widespread and vigorous campaign aimed at the prevention and the eventual stamping out of venereal disease. The incidence of this terrible and tragedy-inflicting curse has been in the ascendancy since the outbreak of war. The camp-follower is not a figure in the distant past, but an only too real present-day reality. Thus far, the committee's efforts have been directed almost entirely towards the armed forces; today the problem is being brought before the general public from whom it has too long been shielded.

Mayor Conboy of Toronto has recently issued a proclamation encouraging the campaign and exhorting the civic body as a whole to take up the crusade by acquainting themselves with the terrifying statistics. The Toronto Branch of the Health League of Canada is carrying on the work in this city. As part of their program, they are sponsoring a full-length dramatic film dealing with this major disease problem entitled "No Greater Sin" which opened at Massey Hall yesterday. All citizens should make a point of seeing this film.

The special problem which the committee faces is the deep-seated prudery of the public in regard to such matters and their reluctance to face facts. University students, who are representative of the new era in thought and manners in which false prudery plays no part, should give this campaign their unmitigated support by serious, open discussion of the question. There is no place for modest blushings and awkward stammerings as long as this horrible plague stalks at large. One of the most vital social problems of today, it deserves the attention of every thinking and responsible student.

The Thief Of Time

How is it, that every Spring when the Bogey Man of examinations has been defeated in a close race, and we are faced with the evident inadequacy of our system of study and time utilization, we say, "Next year, it is going to be different?"

Now here it is "next year," and lo and behold, the same familiar phantom is creeping in; we find ourselves in our annual position of scientific procrastination, already engaged in multitudinous extra-curricular schemes with no sign of daylight until Christmas time.

It seems that we must conclude, either that our Vernal theorizing is irreconcilable with our Autumnal scholastic apathy, or that the natural insuperable course of events will ever dictate our policy and we will never see that next year when "things are going to be different."

If the later hypothesis is to be adopted, and it has a multitude of adherents, we must find ways and means of making effective each of the 24 hours in the day until our chief concern is that "we haven't time." We have just as much time as the next man, 24 hours of the stuff, and each hour has the same number of minutes as it did last year when we figured that we were cut short. No one should be guilty of complaining that "we haven't enough time," our complaint should be "we don't know how to use the time we have."

There is a way in which we can beat the old thief Procrastination at his own game. During these hectic first weeks we have a wonderful opportunity to effectively utilize our time. The simple aphorism, "Don't put off until tomorrow, what you can do today," has a meaningful application to our daily college lives. Remember it, and act upon its wise suggestion!

Consider the Blood Donor's Card that you have been carrying around or have stuck in a desk drawer at home. Your negligence in putting off the brief operation of filling it in (15 seconds) and returning it to your Faculty Office, has cost other people much more valuable time, simply because you let Procrastination do his insidious and subtle work. Here is your first opportunity to show Procrastination who is boss! Practise this faithfully and you will truly find that "things will be different."

HART HOUSE THEATRE A SHAMBLES

Bats Flick Wings Over Cobwebs and Belfries; Lickerbreath, Gilhooley, Make Potshots With Revolver Club Pistols

APPARITION WIGGLES TAIL

"Come, old chappy," whispered Warden J. B. Lickerbreath in a mysterious tone, picking up a flashlight and a rusty old key from the ring about his waist, "come, we must make the initial investigation."

So Comptroller J. R. Gilhooley, picking up one of the Revolver Club's target pistols, whispered in return, "O.K. boss, der Tag has come."

Tip-toeing softly, the two men, dressed in blue capes borrowed from the hirelings of "Q," the Terror of last year's Cat-Underworld, crept stealthily from the Hart House Inner Sanctum and out onto the moon-drenched campus. "Hsst!" whispered Lickerbreath, "What's that?"

"It's Constable J. Dodgem Glass-Eye on his nightly tour of sentry duty."

They dodged behind the Hart House Ginkgo Tree, waiting until Glass-Eye had passed by, chasing two School frosh who had been trying to break into Whitney Hall.

"Silly boys," muttered Gilhooley, shaking his head, "When will they find out that women are not essential to the life of an engineer?"

The two caped figures slid down the bannister and finally reached the weathered door of the Hart House Theatre. "Cavnt do that the way I used to in 1921—or was it 1922—the day the Prince of Wales spoke to me pulson'ly—or was it 1924? Anyway, my deah old bones ain't what they used to be," groaned Lickerbreath. He rubbed his sacro-lilac tenderly and undid the rusty key from his waist-ring.

The key slid protestingly into the corroded lock. The door creaked back. Gilhooley quickly drew his trusty Smith and Wesson and shot 15 bats which flew out. "Reminds me," said Gilhooley, "when I played Simon Legree shooting at Little Eva escaping across the ice-floes in the big production of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' here back in 1899."

They struggled knee-deep in dust and swirled the cob-webs away with their capes.

"Hrmp, Hurrumph, jolly beastly bloody awful!" said Lickerbreath. "As Major Watson Vandersnort Chomold-cleylundleyhaw (pronounced 'Chumly'), C.B.E., Ph.D., C.C.F., Director and Vice-President to the Personal Advisor, Educational Branch (Ward IV) to Lt. Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton, said to me over a spot of tea as buzzbombs were buzzing nearby: 'Dahnn'd nuisance, don't y' know!'"

"Yes, yes, I've heard that story before from you, Sir," said Gilhooley, stepping over a bed of mushrooms. "But, psst! What's that queer noise? Surely that's no buzz bomb."

And there on the stage before their very eyes appeared a weird, bearded apparition. He had a long tail curled around his beard, and was clanging away at six little bells.

"Who are you?" demanded Gilhooley, making a weak attempt to make a disgusting noise through his chattering teeth.

The apparition bowed and waved his tail in the air.

"You should know me, gentlemen. My name is Legion. Surrounded by quiet mushroom beds, on which I sleep at night, and in this quiet laboratory-like atmosphere I have been working as an extension to the Department of University Extension. B. Fuddeluff Goodrich, head of the Extension Department, sent me here when the theatre closed to work on a wonderful project."

Lasting Friendships.

THEY meet in the classroom... on the campus... at the prom... wherever the young crowd gathers—making new friends, true friends for 'keeps'! For schoolday friendships are lasting friendships that weather the years... dependable, sure and strong. And, to start the coming term, supply them with another friend... a Waterman's! A friend they'll cherish... knowing that, in writing the school chapter today—carrying on in the future tomorrow... a Waterman's is a friend they can count on—always at hand... always verifying that, indeed—old friends are best!

And only a Waterman's gives all these friendly services combined:

- The Inkquaduct Feed—perfectly balanced to flow freely and stop instantly in any position.
- The hand-ground 14 Kt. gold point... personalized to write smoothly.
- The style of lasting beauty with individually perfected features.

... and lastly, but so important—the name... WATERMAN'S... is your guarantee of perfect performance.

TONIGHT at 5 p.m.

ATTENTION ALL FACULTIES, COLLEGES AND DEPARTMENTS

If your Torontonensis representative has not yet been appointed, this should be done immediately.

The first meeting of Torontonensis representatives will take place next week. Make sure that you are represented.

Representatives should watch The Varsity carefully for announcements of meetings.

U. of T. Tennis Tourney Commences Wednesday

Entries Closed Monday: 130 Singles, 40 Doubles: Some Stars Back, But Dark-Horse Freshmen May Surprise

TRINITY DOMINATES

The University Tennis Tournament gets under way tomorrow morning at nine o'clock on St. Hilda's courts. Entries closed yesterday at five o'clock, and 130 singles and 40 doubles were received. The doubles will be run off early next week.

Trinity dominated the entry sheets with over 40 participants, and every faculty on the campus was well represented. Many of last year's outstanding stars including champion Mel Jones, B. McGraw, and Owen Gray are gone. But among the better players left are Patzalek of Dents, and Morrison and Young of U.C. Feyerer of Meds is also back this year. He was seeded number one and the pre-tourney favorite. However, numerous upsets and some sparkling play can be expected from the dark-horse freshmen.

Due to the restricted court accommodation arising from the heavy entry, competitors are urged to take advantage of the present good weather and run off their matches in accordance with the daily draws. Results are to be given to the officials in charge to facilitate the scheduling of future matches.

TENNIS RULES

Rules of play for Men's Tennis Tournament are as follows:

1. All players up to and including round three must be on courts within ten minutes of scheduled time, except for fifth and sixth year Meds, who must be at courts within 20 minutes.
2. Times in further rounds are to be arranged at convenience of players, the officials presiding, or the Athletic Office.
3. The Globe and Mail and The Varsity will carry the daily draw for the following day.
4. A match will consist of best two of three sets and the final best three of five.
5. Standing Committee Member on duty will be the official referee pertaining to all games and decisions. He will assign courts and supply balls.
6. Above rules apply to both singles and doubles matches. Failure to comply with these rules forfeits the offender his entrance fee and entrance points.

Track Teams Begin Workouts

Hee Phillips, the Varsity track coach, has begun his annual training grinds at Varsity Stadium. He's there every afternoon from four o'clock on to give the boys a work-out.

The Junior Track Meet is coming off on October 12 and any man who has not won a University Track event is officially classified as a Junior. Freshmen are especially encouraged to turn out for Hee's conditioning and get themselves entered in some of the many events, as each entry, regardless of where he places, receives points for his Faculty in the Reed Trophy race.

ANONYMOUS . . .

All letters of the unsigned variety which are directed at this paper usually find their way into what people around here like to call the waste paper basket, but what the layman would be prompted to call the floor.

Yesterday, a sinister looking character appeared at The Varsity newsroom—no, not McGeech—and squishily asked for any member of the sports staff. As none were evident, he carefully deposited such a letter in the receptacle maintained for the purpose. Then this ghost writer disappeared.

While there is little doubt but that the mash note was written by an imbecile, the idea contained is worthy of mention.

After the first two undistinguishable paragraphs, this character goes on:

"In today's column, you mention a need for a re-shuffling of the teams in the rugby league. How true! But do you go ahead and suggest the grouping? Of course not, for why should you stick your neck out. Well, I will.

"Last year, Vic was grouped with the two strongest teams on the campus—they failed to win a game. Junior Meds were almost in the same class.

"Here is my idea. Revert to the two-group system of two years ago. Thus, one group would comprise Junior Meds, Victoria, Trinity and Dents. The other group would hand together St. Mike's, Junior School, Senior School, Senior Meds and University College.

"The winners of the group championship would meet in the Mulock Cup finals. Now, what is wrong with that?"

Not very much, chum, not very much. That line-up would eliminate the most prevalent fault found last year as four of the weaker teams would be in a class by themselves. There are a number of smaller difficulties which arise from this.

The first would be, quite naturally, a monstrous protest from School. To have both teams in the same league, playing against one another, perhaps one eliminating the other, is asking a lot from the football fans at School. And yet it seems to be the only alternative as School is more than capable of turning out two strong squads.

Another protest could be expected as Dents are far from the fourth weakest team to be found on the campus. In fact, they survived to the quarter finals last year before withdrawing their entry. University College, with a riddled squad, could certainly have a legitimate protest, as could St. Mike's.

The situation is a tricky one and it is very fortunate that it is to be settled by a bevy of experienced hands. Another suggestion offered has been for a three-team three-group league. Whatever the final outcome shall be, the football fans on this campus can rest assured that the situation was handled as well as the occasion permitted.

ABOUT THINGS . . .

Having been sent all the way from the press to Whitney Hall because our boss Mosby forgot the U.C. tennis draws, we have a good mad on. So good a note that we are loath to type anything, except that we know there are others of a more patient and walking frame of mind who would simply love to write the column and do all the walking required. Reluctantly and still annoyed, we therefore present the U.C. tennis draw as given to us by Ruth Margeson. The games are to be played today. Diana Bernholtz vs. Doreen Cohen, at 9:30 a.m.; Sybil Cadesgy vs. Jean Stevenson, 11 a.m.; Elaine Fricken vs. Margaret McRae, at 2 p.m.; Clara Smith vs. Ruth Margeson at 3 p.m.; Gwen Innes vs. Joanne Miller, at 4 p.m.; and Joan Davis vs. Mary Bulmen, at 4 p.m.

Second thing on the list for today's notes we see is that the baseball games for the University will start Thursday, Oct. 12. The meeting of the reps went off as scheduled except that there was no rep from St. Mike's. As Mike Mahaney has assured us that St. Mike's definitely plan to enter a team, we have planned on it and have worked it into the schedule. Tomorrow we will publish a tentative schedule of practices and games, if the fields may be arranged for by then; and if not by tomorrow the list will definitely appear the following day so that the captains may choose teams in time for the opening games. So far the Arts colleges and P.H.E. are the only ones who have made known their desire to play softball, but if the other faculties or schools would like to do so, would you please call us soon at Ho. 9458, so that you may be fitted into the scheme of things. If you would like to enter two teams like Vic and P.H.E. say that they think they can, you are very welcome to. The more the merrier.

ABOUT PEOPLE AND THINGS . . .

Freddie Baxter up at Lillian Massey today seemed to be overburdened with the woes of the world, or at least the campus world. At this time all Freshies are taking tests in swimming in the limpid 94 degree F. water of the pool. She has a new assistant this year, Miss Inglis, and she hopes to have all the tests over and done with by next Friday. Until that time we have promised not to pester her or Miss Forster with queries about activities and reports on this and that, but when Friday comes the manifold doings of Lillian Massey will be uncovered to the readers of this column, we hope. Freddie also said that she had something to tell us that was very interesting and important, but that she couldn't remember it at the time, so we'll have to wait for that one too. Disappointing, isn't it, girls? And not the least bit fair. Anyway we hope that it will ensure lots of readers until the day when Freddie finally remembers what it was that she wanted to tell us, and we tell you.

Red Cross to Sponsor Nurses Refresher Course

The Ontario Division of the Canadian Red Cross is sponsoring a refresher course, open to graduate nurses. The purpose of the course is to familiarize the nurses with the necessary requirements for teaching the Home Nursing prescribed for the Emergency Nursing Reserve Group.

The teaching staff consists only of doctors and nurses with the exception of Mr. H. E. Elborn, principal of Toronto Normal School, who is to outline the principles of teaching and organization of classes. There are no certificates awarded on completion of the course, but all nurses attending must have the approval of the Red Cross. Several such courses are given throughout the year, each extending over a period of three days. The first of the current series of lectures and demonstrations begins October 3, the opening being marked by a luncheon at which Dr. R. P. Vivian will be the guest speaker.

Street Opera House instead of the Royal Alexandra Theatre.

The reason for this misconception was the inordinate number of ornate anklets the stage had on display.

There were glamour girl assistants galore, popping onto the platform one minute and vanishing into thin air the next, a practice, obviously, which the customers at the Opera House would never brook, but which the delighted clientele at the Royal, most of them youngsters, didn't seem to mind at all.

Alokazani said Blackstone, and the limbs of one girl were transmuted into a pot of violet; Ponff he shouted, waving his sorcerer's wand, and another female was sliced into three neat sections; Abacadabra! and three black-haired beauties were conjured from behind a net into the nether world of nothingness.

No magician could get along without rabbits and the woman sawed in half and the borrowed and maltreated watch.
But Blackstone never failed to give these old standbys several new twists. The unhappy femme is quartered in full view on the table of a cruel screeching buzz-saw, with no hanky-panky of wooden boxes. And when things disappear they generally vanish before your eyes. A birdcage with a live bird inside went west with a gentle ponff, the hands of a dozen onlookers actually resting on it.

And for the most breathtaking climax the Royal boards have seen in many a moon, Blackstone and an assistant switched identities beneath disguises in a whirlwind first-act finale that left the audience with their young mouths open.

Unlike his bearded rival, Dante, who brought down equally crowded houses last season with a flow of unceasing fast patter, Blackstone's ad libbing is more suggestive, the innuendo pointed with a twitch of his eloquent eyebrows.
When an amiable handkerchief tangoed across the stage, for instance, and the white-haired magician unsuccessfully tried to exterminate it with a pistol, his quizzical grimace towards the watching crowds implied that he was, if anything, even more surprised than they were.

A parade of palmed aces and face-cards plucked from nowhere was proof enough that Blackstone would be the last person in the world to call a spade a spade.

If you want a fourth hand for a poker game, Mr. Blackstone, just forget about

People say that The Varsity is kid stuff. They say that because things have a bad habit of going wrong on The Varsity. They notice these things because The Varsity's boners are concentrated into four pages.

But our 40-page brothers are not blameless, and herewith we reproduce evidence to show that The Varsity is not the only journal that permits slips to pass in the night.

Several aspirins are needed by city editors, particularly when they find that cutlines beneath photographs have been switched by the errant linotypist, a mistake that often results in fantastic literature. Which was what happened once in The Star when a bungled cut-line read:

"This poor coolie, his clothes tattered and dusty, his sandals threadbare, has just arrived in Shanghai after a 500-mile pilgrimage."

Above was a photo of a sophisticated, lipsticked debutante. Her "tattered and dusty" apparel consisted of a revealing strapless bathing suit.

O TEMPORA! O MORES!

And then there was the time when the picture displayed a baby being wheeled down Park Avenue in a dawdling gram.

It was identified with a sentence which told:
"Racing around a hair-pin bend at 120 miles per hour, this speed demon is in a racing car in a Chicago tournament."

The reporters at The Star will bray with laughter when they recall another baby picture, which appeared in early July this year, showing a plump and toothless infant grinning and pushing his chubby finger into the ear of his equally plump and grinning mother.

The caption read:
"Star reporter William Ellis points to
calis, Que., as the forest fire swept through."

Some wag pinned the picture on the office bulletin board and pencilled in:
"Which is Willie?"

Walking in on a session of the Department of Diabolical Ideas at "73," the reporter was greeted with groans.
"Don't talk to us about hazings," snarled an anonymous committeeman. "Every year it gets worse. They come here prepared for everything. What on earth can we do to these frosh this year?"

news items are written about them.
There are times, though, when either the proof-reader wavers or the linotypist is in a hurry, and the unhappy result stimulates the poor editor to make disgusting noises with his teeth.

One such occasion occurred when The Hamilton Spectator once headlined:
UNBORN CHILD'S BODY FOUND AT DEPOT

When it comes to birth troubles, though, the harried editor of a small Ontario paper ordered a complete makeover when he had trouble with:
"Mr. Larson is the son of the Ogden High School."

Reviews of musical and theatrical events, with their strange terminology, often confuse the unlettered linotypist.
So it sometimes happens, as it did in The Toronto Telegram, that you get something like this:

"... and brought the event to a glorious climax in the immortal Halleluah chorus."

Shades of George Jean Nathan.

A human interest quotation in a headline is as much loved by The Star as is a big upper lip admired by the Ubangi. The result often is the The Star—not the Ubangi—often had headlines which read like a stuttered conversation—even when properly reproduced by the unlettered linotypist.

But when the lino man does go astray, he may get gibberish like this in The Star. Students in French please note:
"WANT TO SELL A CANARY h
"Want To Sell a Canary?"—"Nou!
"It's Monty Wants It"—"Qui, Qui!"

Which, of course, was pretty bad, but not half as bad as The Star's blunder:
"Hurling a brick through the window of a Yonge St. furrier store last night, two mash-and-gab thieves stole two mink coats."

SOUNDS LIKE WOMEN ANY-WAY.
Finally, there was a brand new girl infant, an added passenger in a crosstown street car, who won this witty line:
BORN WHILE HER MOTHER WAS AWAY FROM HOME

In the First Year of the Pass Course the standing ran along similar lines.
More men succeeded in obtaining Grade
A standing, and also in obtaining standing without grading, while more women obtained Grade C standing and the per-

In the Second Year of the Honour

Second Year of the Pass Course, more men obtained standing above 66 per cent and more women standing between 50

the whole group, however, obtained standing between 60 and 66 per cent.

In the Third Year of the Honour Courses, there were 7 per cent more men in First Class, 5 per cent more women in Second Class and 2 per cent more women in Third Class. In this group also, Second Class Honours were obtained by approximately one-half of the successful students. In the Pass Course, nearly 25 per cent of the men obtained degrees on active service.

In the Fourth Year 22 per cent of the men and 28.2 per cent of the women secured First Class Honours. However, three times as many men obtained degrees without Honours. One-seventh of the men of the Fourth Year were granted their degrees while on active service.

St. Michael's Students
Hold Opening Mass

The official opening of St. Michael's College took place with the celebration of a Solemn High Mass in the presence of the student body in St. Basil's Church. The ceremony, an annual one, is traditionally held on the Feast of St. Michael, Sept. 29.

Father T. P. McLaughlin, Superior of the College, who addressed the assembled undergraduates of Loretto, St.
Joseph's and St. Michael's Colleges, described the particular kind of religious education available to students enrolled in St. Michael's, which is symbolized by their attendance at the opening Mass.

He recalled the inroads which the war had made in the ranks of St. Michael's arts students and pointed out that the male registration of the College this year is only one quarter as large as it was four years ago.

Of the 85 former students of St.
Michael's who have lost their lives in this war, Father McLaughlin said that they had an especial claim to the prayers and to the gratitude of their successors.

Professor J. H. Cameron Dies Thirty-Eight Years On Staff

Author of Many Texts and Former President of Ontario
Modern Language Teachers' Association Passes

VARSITY GRADUATE

John Home Cameron, M.A., Professor Emeritus in the University of Toronto and for 38 years a member of the teaching staff of University College, died on Saturday at his home, 96 Admiral Road.

Born in Edinburgh, Scotland, he was less than one year of age when his family came to Canada. His father, the Rev. James Cameron, gold medalist of the University of Edinburgh, opened a mission at Chatsworth, Ontario, and became an outstanding member of the Presbyterian ministry.

Professor Cameron received his first schooling at Chatsworth, and subsequently attended Owen Sound High School, Upper Canada College, and the University of Toronto, winning the silver medal in Modern Languages at the time of his graduation in 1885. His college course had been interrupted for several years, during which he taught at Orillia, Harriston, and St. Mary's High Schools.

He was Fellow in French and German in University College in 1885-1887, studied in Paris and Leipzig from 1887 to 1891, from 1891 to 1927 was successively Lecturer, Associate Professor, and Professor of French, and from 1916 until his retirement in 1927 was Head of the French Department.

Professor Cameron was the author of many textbooks used widely in Canada and the United States, and collated the French texts for the Champlain Society's edition of the works of Samuel de Champlain. He worked in the libraries at Quebec, London, and Paris, purchasing several original editions to establish the text. He was presented to the University of Toronto a few weeks before his death, and they are described by Mr. W. S. Wallace, the Librarian, as "among the rarest treasures."

Feminine Aura Prevails In Invaded Emmanuel

"Plaid cushions on a dark green chesterfield will look smooth," and "Let's keep our fashion magazines on the small table" are typical remarks heard around the Emmanuel residences these days.

Once strictly male haunts, the five houses—Ryerson, Nelles, Caven, Bowles and Gaudier—now echo to the clatter of high heels on their circular staircases.

There is in them a distinct spirit of pioneer days. As Shirley Cousins of Caven House says, "It's fun to have a clear field." And the girls—even if they are there on a strictly temporary basis—prove that it is fun by the way they tackle the problem of giving men's residences a feminine touch.

House rules, however, tend to limit the scope of the girls' decorating talents. Take the case of curtains. Rules state that the ones already hanging must not be taken down. But the co-eds have got around this difficulty craftily. They can follow the example of Mary Pat Fleming and Marg Jackson of Caven House and pin up drapes over the drapes. Their new curtains feature splashy red and green poinsettias on a white background. Or they can do as Pat Friche and tack red fringes around the edges.

Rules state no nails in the walls. The co-eds find that notebook reinforcements hold picture up just as well.

Stuffed animals—panda bears and elephants leading in popularity—are found in every room.

The new residences have made a change in Vic undergraduate dining arrangements. The girls now eat at Burwash as well as at Annesley and Wymilwood. Audrey Tilston, a Caven House resident, quoted the boys as saying that the latters' table manners and table talk would improve if they could eat with the girls. But this theory has not been given a chance to develop.

Meanwhile the pioneer residents express themselves as completely content with their new homes. "We love it," said one.

However, one squawk still remains, and was voiced in a wailing, "We haven't got enough room to entertain the boys!" But if the way they have tackled problems to date is any criterion this lack should soon be remedied.

Sir William's Last Rites In St. Paul's Wednesday

The funeral of the late Right Honourable Sir William Mulock, P.C., K.C.M.G., will be held in St. Paul's Church, Bloor Street East, Toronto, at 2:30 p.m. on Wednesday, October 4.

A section of the Church will be reserved for members of the Board of Governors and the Senate, other senior members of the University, and the Students' Administrative Council. On request, the ushers will show them to this section.

Lectures and laboratory classes will be withdrawn, and the University, library and administrative offices closed after 12:30 p.m.

One Dollar Per Student Canadian ISS Objective

This year the Canadian Committee of International Student Service has set as its objective the collection of one dollar from each student in a Canadian University or approximately $30,000 dollars from all Canada.

I.S.S. is a student relief organization, part of a total project of World Student Relief, which has its headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland. The Canadian branch of I.S.S. distributes the funds which it receives from the local committees of some 20 Canadian universities and colleges.

The funds which are sent to Europe are administered by the European Student Relief fund to provide parcels, books and technical equipment for prisoners of war refugees and internees.

In China the funds are administered by the National Student Relief Committee, a civilian relief agency, to provide various forms of relief for evacuated students, as supplementary to the aid already given by the Chinese Government. Since 1937 approximately 30,000 Chinese students have moved into the interior to what is still free China, following the evacuation of many universities to escape the consequences of Japanese bombing and occupation. Because of this displacement and because of the progress of inflation in China the need for relief is steadily increasing.

Early in September the student president of the University of Caen, sent a plea to Canadian Universities for help in rebuilding the University which was razed during the recent battle there.

In a normal year $5 per cent of the Canadian I.S.S. budget went to Europe, 32 per cent to China, 10 per cent for work among refugees in Canada and 3 per cent for operating expenses.

The extent of the contribution to the I.S.S. made by the University of Toronto depends on the formation of a representative committee to plan and carry out this year's campaign. A meeting for this purpose is being held in the library of the Women's Union on Thursday, Oct. 5 at 8 p.m. All faculty and college student officials are asked to send representatives.

Bishop of Athabasca Appeals for Workers

This war has "globalized" the church just as it has "globalized" the world, stated Rt. Rev. Arthur Sovereign, Bishop of Athabasca, speaking in Wycliffe College.

The northern prelate told the student gathering that no longer did the church seek to implant in the foreign mission field a part of the church of Canada, but sought to sow the seed of Christ which would grow.

Describing the building of the Alaska highway, Bishop Sovereign said that he expected it to be maintained after the war, adding this would cost about 1,000,000 a year.

In appealing for men and women to go "down north" to serve the church, the Bishop declared that this was the church's greatest hour. He added that by agreement with the other leading Protestant churches, the Anglican church is the only one working in Canada's northland.

Bishop Sovereign, a graduate of Wycliffe, was introduced by Professor W. E. Taylor, of Wycliffe.

McGill Begins Course In Tropical Medicine

Kingston—(CUP)—A new course in tropical medicine, unique in that it combines study at the university with clinical work in the tropics, has recently been inaugurated at McGill University, reports the Queen's Journal.

Principal P. Cyril James said that it is the first time in the history of medicine that a diploma in tropical medicine has been instituted which requires clinical training on the spot, and no other university in the British Commonwealth or the United States is known to be offering a course of precisely this kind.

Because of increased cultural and social relations between Canada and the British West Indies due to development in trade and air transportation facilities in the post-war period, the possibility of tropical diseases becoming more important has greatly increased.

"This is a big step ahead in medicine," said Dr. James. "Despite the obvious importance of this clinical training, it has not previously been a required part of any course leading to a diploma in tropical medicine."

NOTICE

Every University student is asked to make sure, at once, that his correct Toronto address and telephone number are entered upon his registration card in the office of the University Registrar, Simcoe Hall, and in the office of his College Registrar or Faculty Secretary. The University Directory is now being prepared for the press and it is of the greatest importance that all addresses and telephone numbers be correct.

Canada's Great To Attend Late Chancellor's Funeral

S.A.C. MEMBERS

Members of the Students' Administrative Council are asked to meet in the Council Office, Hart House, promptly at 1:45 p.m. on Wednesday and to attend in a body the funeral service for Sir William Mulock.

The Council meeting called for Wednesday at 4:30 p.m. will be postponed until Friday at 4:30 p.m. in Room 82, University College.

President Cody to Pay Tribute to Sir William Mulock at Afternoon Service in St. Paul's

BURIAL AT NEWMARKET

The funeral of the late Right Honourable Sir William Mulock, P.C., K.C.M.G., will be held at 2:30 this afternoon in St. Paul's Church, Bloor Street East.

President Cody of the University of Toronto and the Rev. Canon F. H. Wilkinson, Rector of St. Paul's Church, will conduct the service, and President Cody will give the address.

Two hymns will be included in the Church of England service, "Lead Kindly Light" and "Abide With Me," both favourites of the late Sir William. The choir will sing the Nineteenth Psalm.

A private service will be held at the Mulock residence on Jarvis Street at two o'clock before the service at the church. At the close of this service the funeral party will leave for Newmarket where Sir William will be buried.

In deference to Sir William's memory, lectures and laboratory classes will be suspended, and the University, library and administrative offices closed after 12:30 p.m.

Representing the University of Toronto will be members of the Senate, the Board of Governors, the Students' Administrative Council and staff members of the University. Mayor Dr. F. J. Conboy, members of the Board of Control and Council will attend.

Representatives of both Federal and Provincial governments will be present; Prime Minister King, whose friendship with Sir William was first formed in the days of the Laurier Cabinet; Hon. Louis St. Laurent, Minister of Justice representing the Ottawa administration, and Premier George Drew, the Provincial Government.

The honorary pallbearers will include Prime Minister King and Mr. St. Laurent. Others are: Col. Redford Mulock, Hon. R. S. Robertson, Chief Justice of the Ontario Supreme Court, D. L. 'Non-Essential But Nice', Schoolmen Pass Freshies

Despite all they might say to the contrary it would seem that certain Schoolmen on the campus are not at all convinced that "women are unessential in the life of an engineer."

Take, for instance, the boys who have moved up north of the little red school house. These are the ones who have set transits up at various strategic points around the campus.

Technically speaking their job is to run levels. But besides their official observations they take a few memos that don't reach the profs down at School.

Such as:
Honey blonde.
5 ft. 5 ins.
Estimated weight, 110.
Estimated age, 19.

Two of the "slidrop" lads, who discreetly forgot to mention their names, have classified with technical precision—legs. According to the experts, these fall into five groups: A, B, C, D, and UGH!

"When you're writing your story," drawled one with a mischievous smile, "tell those new little girls not to be frightened of us. We like them, don't we?" He nudged his companion.

"We sho' do," the latter replied. Both turned to whistle in confirmation at a group of stangely-attired freshies who were trying to pass by as inconspicuously as possible.

And so it went. There was the boy who protested, "But, Jim, she's not your type." Jim wasn't so sure.

There was the one who said in all seriousness, "This is an important part of our course."

There was one who remarked—irrelevantly—"It's a cold day for October."

From way across the campus there came a prolonged howl. The shade of McGehee—the now-departed Varsity pup—perhaps?

Nope, wrong again. It was a . . . that's right. And don't let anyone tell you that engineers are women hatters. "For after all," as the Schoolman once said, "who is going to look at us wide-eyed when we make those intelligent remarks about jet propulsion?"

And there the case stands.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1944

Perennial

Each year for 63 years, undergraduates have demanded a statement of editorial policy from The Varsity. Today's issue marks the 64th answer to that plea.

The primary aim of The Varsity is to stimulate thought. When a newspaper is regarded by all as having a "good sound policy," it then becomes dangerous. When letters to the editor, voicing disagreement cease to arrive, it may be concluded that the paper has ceased to fulfill its function.

On the campus there exists a variety of opinion. Student thought is not stereotyped. It is our duty to sustain it by praising, criticising or suggesting. Thus when necessity arises, we will adopt a definite policy concerning the question of the moment. We do not intend, however, to cut off our discriminating ear to save our editorial face. We will not probe or exaggerate a point purely for the sake of maintaining a stand.

Yesterday we stated our proposed system for campus news coverage. In addition to this, it is our intention to supplement local events with stories of activities from other universities. We propose to effect a balance between Canadian University press items and our own news.

Within the last few years it has become evident that the undergraduate newspaper can no longer be a localized gossip sheet. The tendency has been to integrate and stimulate student thought by including in the paper despatches from exchanges and wire service. When such stories are absorbed into the main body of a paper, it immediately becomes of universal interest, effecting at the same time an interchange of ideas.

Pass, And One No Trump

There is an attitude of mind, which is increasing year by year, that the pass course requires a minimum amount of work and a maximum amount of play. The basis of this conception lies partly in the short range view taken by the student and partly in the lack of personal contact between the staff and those enrolled in the course. The average person attending pass lectures invariably gives the impression that he is emulating the idolized prototype who does little work but acquires high grades. The only difficulty is that the high grades give way to a low academic level.

It is true that large classes with no personal guidance often result in indifference. Some students complain that the work is so simplified in the lectures that they need do no outside reading in order to pass their examinations. Other students argue that there is no need to attend lectures since they will "cram" their work the first few weeks in April. These are the people who require three years to learn that they benefit according to the amount of attention they place in their course.

Many of the opportunities found in specialized courses are manifest in the pass course but students are not prone to make the most of them. Reading lists remain untouched and essays are rushed to completion pending the deadline. If such laxness were remedied, the popular attitude would not be so prevalent and first year students who do not realize their incapacities would not adopt a flippant view at the outset of their course.

On the other hand, the Pass Course student could be helped tremendously by admission to the stacks, tutorial groups if the classes were too large, and enlightenment as to The Idea of a University.

Don't Be A Slacker

With the acceptance of the view that the war is nearing completion, many people visibly slacken on war work, blood donations and money subscriptions. Little do they realize the exhausting hardships yet to be encountered by those in the war-torn areas. University students especially, will face in Europe, problems of rehabilitation that will bar the way to their education. In Canada we have, comparatively speaking, a luxurious set-up. Have we become too disinterested and selfish to appreciate the difficulties of our fellow students in other continents? Each year the I.S.S. organizes a campaign soliciting donations from university students in Canada. Preparation for the campaign is being made tomorrow. Representatives of each faculty and college should make their appearance at the meeting. Student relief will be essential many years after the final shot has been fired.

May We Introduce

One of the toughest jobs on The Varsity is that done by the managing editor and his assistant. Ken McRae and Mary McIntosh are two of the hardest working staffers that we have. Both of them stay down at the press into the small hours of the night, keeping a watchful eye on all the copy, correcting it and laying out the dummy.

Ken McRae is the only individual on the mast-head who does not want to make journalism his career. An extremely modest young man (19 years year old), he has won three scholarships. He is in his third year of Political Science and Economics and is a student at Victoria College. He graduated from University of Toronto Schools and is a resident of Toronto.

His assistant, Mary MacIntosh, hails from Quebec. She is almost as great a bear for work as her boss. Mary is in second year at University College and in some way or other will undoubtedly find her future in journalistic fields. The last of a line of Varsity Staffers, Mary is maintaining the family tradition.

What's YOUR Line?

Just a quick one-two to acquaint the freshies and freshmen (and incidentally to brush up all sagging memories) with the salient features and opportunities around the campus open to students.

Of course the choice item is the re-opening of Hart House for a five-week run. The critics as well as the students will have a hey-day of college plays, and most succulent of all, the U.C. Follies.

Prospects and possibilities for musicians and the average listeners are bright. For the singers, the various college musical productions leave ample scope for their prowess, while the instrumentalists can play to their hearts' content (as long as it agrees with the conductor!) in the University Symphony Orchestra every Monday night. Full-length concert coming up in January.

The Hart House Sunday Evening Concerts, alternating with the Wymilford Musicales, make a pair of musts. For those who like to drop into a comfortable easy chair after a tiring day of lectures and let yourselves relax to the world's classics, the

Little Tales For Skulemen

No. 1:

BESSIE, The Wholesome Holstein

"Alas," boomed Bessie, "I am utterly despondent."

Bessie was a homely Holstein with sad cross-eyes and a tendency to deliver cold cream. She had been standing there mournfully among the flies all day and hadn't scratched yet. She was buried in bovine meditation.

For Abner the Eligible Ox sat there afar in the meadow among the buttercups, chanting carelessly "She loves me . . . She loves me not" about no one in particular.

Abner was a ladies' m—whoops—a cow's ox, and Bessie loved Abner; yes she did, with all the fervour of her bovine soul. Passionately she loved him, but his cruelty chilled her to the—well, children, to the point where she gave cold cream.

One day, a MAN came to see Bessie. His triple-breasted suit was by Adrian; a gold-plated slide-rule hung from his watch-chain; and from his El Ropo cigar there arose a luxuriant stink.

As Bessie's good eye caught the green gleam of his Old School Tie, she emitted a moving moo. She knew that here was the dream of every hefty young heifer—the talent scout of Burpin Bros., renowned for their glamazon dairy-maids and Supersuds Milkshakes.

"Give, sister, give," he grunted, shoving his monogrammed platinum pail beneath her.

Bessie was all aflutter. Surely now Abner would notice her triumph. But as she raised a coy eyebrow and "grave," the sight of Abner's unperturbed posterior chilled her to the marrow once more and she gave (alas!) ice cream. . .

But what is this? The Burpin man is whopping, hollering, sliding his slide-rule ecstatically. "O Thou Most Glorious and Divine of Bovines," he whoops, "ice cream on the hoof, Gadzooks!"

Bessie became the Burpin Company's principal lactical asset. They retreated her hoofs. They curled her horns. They tied green bows to her tail. They even fed her strawberries and cream, served up by 20 dainty dairy-maids. And she reclined at her ease on pink plush pillows. Above her hung a canopy embroidered in gold with the slogan of Burpin Bros.: "If It's Super It's Got To Be Sudsy."

But all this warmed her heart not a whit. Abner, delectable Abner, remained as ever aloof of hoof, and the cold cream flow continued.

One day, the bell boy brought Bessie up a card. It read, "Abner, the Eligible Ox." Bessie's tail quivered with ecstasy! It was Abner, Abner at last! He entered immaculate as ever, and began with a discreet bow: "Bessie, I have come for you. I love you only."

From that day, Bessie gave with Hot Stuff. No longer could they trumpet her fame abroad. The Pre-Refrigerated Cow was cooked.

Disgusted, they hooved her out. Poor Bessie. Now perhaps even Abner would desert her.

But as she mournfully dusted off her tail, a voice roared in her ear: "Bessie, darling, I will follow you anywhere."

"O Abner," she cried, "How cud you?"

And they set off happily for the glue factory, hoof in hoof.

The Sportswoman

By Peggy Wallace

AT LAST . . .

Today is the first time that we have felt at all satisfied about the number of things available to write about—which means that the femmes on the campus are beginning to knock themselves out at sports with their old accustomed vim and vigor.

Polly Mutz has been working feebly as Bowling prey. Having received an enthusiastic reception from all the colleges, she is planning a "huge" (quote) tournament to begin as soon as she gets cards for all entrants. For you characters who have not yet decided on your Phys. Ed. classes, be it known that there are at least 50 girls enrolled in bowling. If you think you might like Ye Famous Olde Indoor Sport, why not give it a try? You'll be in good company!

St. Hilda's tennis tournaments are well under way these days and the courts are busy practically any old time. Marg Alexander hopes that the people still playing will hustle their games and finish as soon as possible because the Varsity tournament is to follow on the same courts. This seems to be sterling suggestion since we have a faint, dim recollection of a downtown paper's printing the write-up and picture of our Varsity Women's Tennis Finalists dated one bright sunny day in January! This could happen to you—

One of the most interesting items in a good long while came in today. It seems that some progressive, sports-minded gals at School have long deplored the lack of females of said Skule which tended to keep them out of most intramural activities. So after due thought, they trotted over to Meds with the brilliant idea of a School-Meds combine in, as a starter, basketball. The Sports Execs of two such confirmed enemies have thus buried the hatchet to their mutual benefit and School women will again be seen on local basketball floors, thanks to the co-operation of Meds. We don't know but it seems to us that, in a rather obscure, subtle way there's a moral to that thar tale. Other small faculties please note.

Speaking of basketball, that old bogey Medical Certificate rears his ugly head. As they say in the magazine ads—"Don't be a bench-warmer when the day of the big game arrives. Get your medical exam over early and join the happy throng on the floor." Dr. Gwen Mulock, up at 44 Hoskin, will be only too glad to give you an appointment for a medical and she'll appreciate it no end if you DO IT NOW!

THE GENTLE ART . . .

There have been many queries around and about concerning that grand old pastime, fencing. Believe it or not, gals, but in times gone by fencing was taught up in the Fine Art Lecture Room in U.C. For a while after that interest seemed to flag, but last year a great hue and cry arose and the noble art was revived by a few enthusiasts.

This year their numbers seem to have increased and bid fair to keep on doing so as more and more girls discover that the royal road to a lovely figure may well be fencing. We are all anxiously awaiting further news as to when things will begin to hum in that department.

Neatest trick of the week in the feminine sport world has been accomplished by Meds. The men in the faculty held their track meet last night and rather unexpectedly felt the need of representation from the girls. A women's running race was announced and, though completely unprepared, the gals came through in fine style—IN THEIR BARE FEET!

AND AS SPECTATORS . . .

It has been called to our attention rather forcibly by the last couple of rugby games, that various co-eds were not too visibly impressed with the sport and couldn't see why 22 full-grown men should be out there chasing that silly ball around. Setting out to do a little research on the subject we questioned several chappies about this impression and had it sadly, but firmly, confirmed.

"Why doesn't someone take them aside and explain the fundamentals of the game to them?" they groaned. "And then we wouldn't be bothered with such questions as—What's a down? Why is he running that way? What are they doing all lined up like that?"

Nothing will convince us that the situation is that bad, but something has got to be done about it anyway. Such as collaring "McClusky" the stalwart Sported and getting a concise discourse from him on the gentle art of watching rugby for one of our future columns. Sports are "spectated" as well as played, gals, so watch for the article and brush up on your rugby along with the rest of us.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION FOR WOMEN

First Year

All classes begin the week of October 10 except tennis instruction which begins this week. Any student who has not enrolled in classes or who has not made an appointment for a swimming test must do so immediately at the Physical Education office, Household Science building.

Students whose test was scheduled for Wednesday afternoon, October 4, please make new appointments immediately.

NOTE: The physical Education office entrance is at 155 Bloor Street, down the east side of the building. Do not enter the main part of the Household Science Building.

Upper Years

The following groups are arranged for students in the upper years. Enroll at the Physical Education office (see "NOTE" above) for these classes immediately.

DANCING: Wednesday 3:45 (if enough enroll)

FENCING: Friday 3:45 (if enough enroll)

SWIMMING:

Life Saving—

Award of Merit—Monday 3:55

Bronze Medallion—Wednesday 3:55

General Swimming: Monday to Friday, 4:30 to 5 p.m.

DANCING is limited to those who have had at least a little training in modern dance or ballet.

FENCING is mainly for those who have already had some fencing but a few beginners will be accepted.

SWIMMING is open to all who wish to swim for recreation. Instruction will be given to those who want it, in strokes, life saving, diving, ornamental or speed swimming.

Any student taking one or all of the above subjects pays the $3.00 Physical Training fee (this is not the $3.00 athletic fee). For swimming a student may pay at the rate of three swims for $1.00.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasiv

SPECULATION . . .

The outcome of the standing rugby committee meeting to be held Friday noon is awaited by a large number of fans. The justification for the rather sudden interest is questionable, but wholly selfish motives may play a great role. The usually unmovable Gus Fan has abruptly sprung into the fray with a violent torrent of verbosity.

A letter, partially reprinted in these columns yesterday, was a typical example. In it was contained the idea for a two-group league. Group one was to contain Junior Meds, Victoria, Trinity and Dents, while the remaining five teams would be banded into the second group. From this suggestion difficulties were certain to ensue.

After a complete day's intensive study and research, our consultant, whose name was recently linked with that of ex-warden Gilhooley, came forth with the idea that was to receive the approval and sanction of this department.

A three-group league, each containing three teams, would seem to be the requisite. The first would contain squads from the colleges with the largest male enrolment still unaffected by Selective Service. This would letter Senior School, Senior Meds and Dents.

The second group would manacle three fairly balanced clubs in University College, Junior School and St. Mike's.

The remaining three clubs in the proposed plan would be left to scramble for themselves. Victoria, Trinity and Junior Meds seem to have little to present save a number of willing players. Even then the willingness of some of the players of last year could be questioned. However, spirit alone is not sufficient to overcome a team's lack of high calibre, hence the separation.

The play-offs, like those of last year, would find four teams battling for the coveted Mulock Cup. Two teams from the strongest group would be placed in these play-offs. Thus, two of Senior School, Senior Meds and Dents would advance. The second place team would take on the winner of the supposedly weakest loop, while the first place winner advanced to meet the other victor.

A possible protest would emerge from Dents. While it is not one of the largest faculties, Dentistry has always managed to field a team which more than held its own with the larger colleges. This year should prove no different. A year ago, Dents reached the semi-finals, only to withdraw due to a misunderstanding.

Then a rumor has reached our ears of a third School team. To use a well worn cliché which best describes the situation, a monkey-wrench would be thrown into this well-planned and well-meant arrangement.

The starting of ten teams would necessitate a reversion to the two-group plan with five in each. Here again at least two of the squads from School would be forced to play against one another and one would necessarily eliminate its running companion.

It all adds up to a grand headache.

Tennis Tournament Commences Today

The University Tennis tournament was scheduled to commence this morning on the courts of St. Hilda's at nine o'clock. The large entry list will be slimmered down game by game and set by set as the losers fall off at the way.

Entries represent every faculty and college on the campus so that fans are assured that a representative of their home of learning will be present.

Five different games are scheduled every hour on the hour. No games will be run off this afternoon due to the funeral of Sir William Mulock.

Of the seeded players, Morrison of University College will face Adams of Trinity in his initial test today at 11 o'clock. Patzalek of Dents, another threat, meets Mel Lawson of Trinity at 11 tomorrow.

Record Enrolment In O.T. Course

This year the course in Occupational Therapy has a record first year enrolment of 98, although the second year registration has dropped to 40, Miss H. P. Le Vesconte, Chief Instructor and Supervisor of the course, told The Varsity yesterday.

Miss Le Vesconte feels that the increased wartime interest in the course will not slacken after the peace, because it has not been occasioned by the war only but by an increased need for therapists trained to do orthopedic work. There is a definite expansion planned in the orthopedic departments in most hospitals after the war which will provide opportunities of work for girls returning from service overseas.

At present there are 29 graduates of Occupational Therapy from the University of Toronto serving overseas, and 20 doing work in Canada at Casualty Retraining Centres and large military hospitals. Girls who enter the army upon completion of the course are commissioned as second lieutenants and after six months service are eligible to become first lieutenants.

Mary-Sue McLaren a graduate in the class of 1940 who was killed in an automobile accident in August 1944 while serving overseas is the only casualty of the course.

There have been changes in the curriculum for second year students this year, with attention focussed on the study of remedial games. Weaving, art and woodcraft formerly studied as "Crafts" have been replaced by the study of "Therapeutic Games."

Women's Union Undergoes Repairs

Miss Marion B. Ferguson, University College Dean of Women, announced recently that until extensive repairs and alterations at the Women's Union are completed, dining facilities will be limited to women residents only. "We are happy to make the Union as attractive as possible for our women students," she said, "but until then, the day students will have to eat elsewhere."

A new salad room has been built and a steam-table and water-cooler have been added to the enlarged serving-room. When completed, the rebuilt serving-room will aid the staff in accommodating 100 extra women.

The interior of the Union has also undergone some changes. The theatre, dining room and hallway have been repainted while some of the front common-room furniture has been moved to the smoking room. All the old furniture in the Union has been re-upholstered.

Knox Appoints "Varsity Rep."

At the opening meeting of the Knox College Association last night, it was decided to adopt the suggestion of Tuesday's Varsity and appoint "a semi-official representative to The Varsity invested with the responsibility of reporting all faculty news." J. D. Jaek, B.A., was chosen for this post.

At the meeting plans were made for the various activities of the association for the coming year. Convenors of Worship, House, Athletic and Social committees outlined an extensive program which promises to give the men of Knox a full year of extra-curricular activities. As an added feature of the evening, the Principal, Rev. W. W. Bryden, addressed the students on problems pertaining to their student life.

Up to the time of his death Professor Cameron took a very active interest in the Ontario Modern Language Teachers' Association, of which he had been a charter member and, later, President. He was a member of the Arts and Letters Club and a life member of the Art Gallery of Toronto.

Many years ago one of his colleagues wrote of him: "He is a beautiful character, modest, kindly, thorough, with wide literary and scholarly interests and tastes."

Professor Cameron's first wife, Elizabeth Read Cameron, died in 1925. Surviving him are his widow, Elizabeth Dingwall Cameron, his sister, Miss Margaret D. Cameron, and a nephew, Mr. Guy Parker, all of Toronto.

COMING EVENTS

THURSDAY, OCT. 5

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 11

The V. C. F. Reception, originally planned for today, will be held next Wednesday in Wymilwood.

hither and yon with peggy bates

We are rapidly coming to the conclusion that students should never be allowed to wander alone, far away from the campus, where peculiar things happen all the time—no, not even in the summer. The sad case of two students who wandered as far as Montreal and had the truth of the old motto "Honesty is the best policy" forcibly brought home, strengthens our convictions.

These two carefree lads one evening strayed into a restaurant, where they dined royally, and began to stray out again, when they found to their utter amazement, that sufficient funds to pay for their repast were lacking. So they sat down again, and meditated furiously. Then, as a man, they lock-stepped nonchalantly to the men's powder-room, which had a handy window over a back street. The first dived cautiously out into the murky night, alighted gracefully on the sidewalk, and turned to await his companion. The form of escapee No. two flashed past his eyes and disappeared into the too, too solid sidewalk! It was all very peculiar. A long whizzing sound arose beneath his feet, followed by a crash and subdued howls.

Then he discovered that some careless coal-heaver had neglected to replace the cover of the coal-chute, and at that very moment, his hapless brother-in-arms was perched on top of a heap of coal in the cellar of the restaurant, discussing the weather with the Chinese proprietor, who seemed rather confused with the whole business.

And guess where No. 2 had thought he was going as a just retribution for his sins?

RECIPE OF THE WEEK: Has anyone heard of the new, delicious

Carbfee? It can be made nonchalantly and unobtrusively with a little practice. A cup of ordinary coffee should be ordered, and a cigarette lighted.

After stirring the beverage, place the spoon in the saucer, and, as there never is an ashtray, put all ashes into the spoon. By the time the cigarette is smoked, the ordinary coffee will need re-stirring. Do so AT ONCE—with the carbon-laden spoon. Carbfee is the result, and if a running conversation is kept up, no one will notice what is happening until the ambulance arrives.

Proof of the power of the press, "the pen is mightier than the sword," and all that, was evinced 't'other day at Convocation Hall, when one of the Hart House officials arose to speak. One serious-faced co-ed turned to her friend and anxiously demanded, "But, WHAT HAPPENED TO GILHOOLEY?"

Professors, we find, are at last beginning to face the inevitable. One of them in a pensive mood, sat silent for a while, then lifted his head, and staring at the wall reflectively sighed, "Yes, students are human too — I GUESS."

Modern civilization has stretched its hand into the very heart of this quiet campus. Nowhere now exists a peaceful nook or cranny. No place is sacred and still.

Even that silence-shrouded path by Trinity has been awakened. When the moon is full and all serene and calm, the echoes are startled by the voice of the even-younger generation, perched high in the overhanging branches of trees beside the path, giving a lusty "WOW!"

Culture is Injected Into S.P.S. Curricula

This year has seen a widening of interests for those in third and fourth year Engineering. To broaden their outlook, several new courses have been added to the Engineers' curriculum. These courses are chiefly concerned with modern problems and include Modern World History, Modern Political and Economic Trends, Introduction to Political Science, the Philosophy of Science, Engineering and Society and the Profession of Engineering.

When asked their opinion of these courses, the men seemed interested and enthusiastic. Bob Shelley, III S.P.S., said, "I am very interested. Some people, including Arts professors, think that it is rather ridiculous. At least the professor holds our attention, and the uninterested ones can sleep. There is absolutely no throwing of orange peel."

F. Patterson, IV Engineering, who is taking Political and Economic Trends, said, "It is a pretty good thing."

"I just love it, but I don't like the idea of an exam," said Gord Rosenthal, III Aeronautics.

Give Psychiatry Course To Boston Theologs

Boston.—(CUP)—A course in psychiatry is being offered by Boston University in connection with the Massachusetts General Hospital for Theological students and the clergy. Eight hours weekly service on the psychiatric wards will be required for term credits.

Orderly, chaplain and counselling service as well as opportunities for clinical training will be features of the course.

Tinsmiths Workshop In U.C. Basement

From the basement of U.C. the mingled sounds of hammers and machinery have become distinctly noticeable to anyone passing the heavy doors opposite the cloisters. Within these doors lies the abode of the U.C. tinsmiths.

An iron staircase leads down to the basement workshop, which is furnished with work-benches equipped with pliers, hammers, and vices. There are cutting and shaping machines also. The white-washed walls are covered with pieces of metal—sheets and bars of various sizes. In this room, too, are kept the unfinished articles of the workmen. The finished pieces are in an adjoining room.

Mr. Walter Osborne, the foreman of this establishment, supervises 20 workmen, who make plumbing and laboratory appliances. A stainless steel sink—the work of the tinsmiths—is to be installed at 79 St. George St. Animal cages of wire netting are manufactured for Connaught Laboratories. All of this work, with the exception of cutting and shaping, is done by hand.

U. of T. Men's Residence Holds Annual Election

The University men's residence held its annual elections on Monday, Chairman Den Lloyd, house master of North House, presiding.

Philip N. Blake was elected president; Lynn Gordon, S.P.S., vice-president; Maurice Schrage, treasurer; Des Moleksi, Meds, secretary; Bill Jones, S.P.S., head-soph; Ken Minard, Pharmacy, head-fresh; Ed Currah, P.H.E., social director; and Lloyd Kaufman, S.P.S., athletic director.

The general meeting was followed by a committee meeting at which plans were made for future house activities.

Victoria Music Club Holds Open Meeting

The annual open meeting of the Victoria College Music Club was held last night at Wymilwood. The president of the club, Doug Thomas, introduced the executive for the coming year.

Dr. T. J. Crawford, musical director of the club for a number of years, delivered a farewell address to the gathering. He is to be succeeded by Mr. Godfrey Ridout. Mr. Geoffrey Hatton, of the Eaton Operatic Society, is to be the new stage director.

During the evening selections from Gilbert and Sullivan operettas were presented by Helge Hongisto, Betty Capes and Gwen Milhalko, singers of last year's club.

Doug Thomas outlined the program for this year. The Gilbert and Sullivan operetta "Pinafore" will be presented in Hart House Theatre on December 8 and 9.

The first rehearsal for this production is scheduled for tonight at 7:30 in Victoria College Chapel. There are openings for 30 to 40 women and 25 men in the chorus.

Newman Club to Hear Hon. S. Saint Laurent

The Hon. S. Saint Laurent, K.C., Minister of Justice for Canada, will speak at the annual convention of the Canadian Federation of Newman Clubs to be held in Toronto on Oct. 27, 28 and 29. Delegates from New Brunswick, London, Kingston and other Canadian clubs are to be represented at this convention.

Another feature of the convention will be a panel discussion to be held on the 28th and prepared in conjunction with the work of the Canadian Youth Commission.

Occupational Therapy Holds Informal Dance

Following two weeks' promenading in pillow-slips and pigtails and a wild night out serenading, Occupational Therapy freshies brought their initiation period to a close at the first informal dance of the fall term, held in the Women's Union last night.

Invitation cards issued to passers-by as a matter of initiation routine resulted in campus-wide publicity and a turnout of six-footers from the south end of the campus that threatened at one point to swamp the reception facilities.

FOUR THOUSAND HONOR CHANCELLOR

Debating Society Plans Constitution Like U.S. Senate

St. Joseph's College Debating Society Changes Name to Senate Club; First Meeting To Be Held Oct. 9

The St. Joseph's College Debating Society will change its name and regulations this year and become known as the Senate Club, Evelyn Critelli, president of the group, told The Varsity yesterday.

She said the first meeting would be held Monday, Oct. 9, when she planned to adopt a constitution patterned after that used by the United States Senate.

"Last year we found that our rules of order were not regulated plainly enough," said Miss Critelli, who was also Debating Society president last semester. "Students like ceremony, so I thought the U.S. Senate's sort of formality would just suit us," she said.

She had no idea how a Senate was organized, admitted Miss Critelli, but she intended "spending an afternoon at the library and finding out just how things are run on a proper basis."

At the first meeting next week, she said, it was expected that the executive of the St. Michael's College Debating group would attend and thus make adequate suggestions with regard to speech regulations.

Attendance at St. Joseph students at the Debating Society last year had been "gratifying" in view of the war work activities which held most of the girls' attention, she said, and this semester the meetings would be held once every two weeks.

Gregg's Proposal Can't Work Here

Commenting on the recent proposal by M. F. Gregg, president of the University of New Brunswick, that one full day out of every 12 be devoted to military training instead of periods after lectures, Lieut.-Col. H. H. Madill, Commanding Officer of the University of Toronto Contingent C.O.T.C., said yesterday he "doubted whether that plan could conveniently be adopted at the University of Toronto."

While he said the University C.O.T.C. officials were prepared to accept whatever worthwhile training arrangements might be suggested, it was his opinion that a plan of one full day's training would be more suited to a smaller university than to the larger University of Toronto.

"It would be difficult," he said, "to adjust the time-tables of the many professors, and particularly the science students with their laboratory periods, to such a plan. Moreover, the C.O.T.C. here has many staff officers who, during the day, are business men downtown, and it would be impossible for them to take

Local And National Figures Pay Their Last Respects As Sir William Mulock Lies In State At St. Paul's

Attending one of the largest funerals that Toronto has witnessed, approximately 4,000 mourners paid tribute to Sir William Mulock yesterday at St. Paul's Anglican Church.

The service was conducted by Canon F. H. Wilkinson and the Rev. Dr. H. J. Cody, who delivered the funeral oration. In his address, Dr. Cody presented cameos of Sir William's life as a student, statesman and educationalist. The President pointed out the fact that the Chancellor was born in the same village as the Osler family.

As a student, Sir William and several other graduates were responsible for the admission of all religious denominations to University College, said Dr. Cody. In addition to this, Sir William was also a firm supporter of federation in the University in order to diminish sectarian strife. As a figure rendering public service, continued Dr. Cody, Chancellor Mulock was Postmaster-General and Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

Dr. Cody also mentioned Sir William's piety. In his later years he read scriptures from which he derived daily strength for daily need. The fact was also emphasized by the President, that the Chancellor combined energy and ability with his old age. A hoary head becomes a crown of glory in its way of righteousness, said Dr. Cody. He recalled the tribute paid to Sir William at a luncheon in his honour some years ago, "All that youth is, thou art."

Dr. Cody went on to say that tongues that had been critical were softened by kindly memories of a man who had contributed so much to his country. Tolerance and understanding had marked Sir William's life as well as his faculty of standing by friends when they needed friends most. "This great company, and thousands of others who esteemed and loved him, join in paying tribute to a great Canadian whose life spans the history of Canada from colonial status to nationhood and free membership in the world-wide alliance known as the British Commonwealth and Empire," Dr. Cody continued. "They pay tribute to this man who played so great a part in many spheres of our national development—legal, financial, social, judicial, political, charitable and educational."

During the service, Sir William's favourite hymns, "Abide With Me" and "Lead Kindly Light" were sung, accompanied by the choir.

Modern Russian Writers Extension Course Subject

Dr. Egbert Munzer, lecturer at the University Department of Political Economy, and Sir Bernard Pares, well-known authority on Russian affairs, may each give one lecture this year in the evening tutorial classes on Russian Modern Literature, it has been tentatively announced by the University's Department of Extension.

The course, under the Extension lecturer, Dr. B. P. Skey, will consist of a survey of works by Russian novelists, playwrights and poets of the 19th and 20th centuries.

Writers whose works will be selected for a special discussion are Pushkin, Lermontov, Gogol, Tourgeniev, Leo Tolstoy, Dostoyevsky, Chekhov, Gorky, Alexey Tolstoy and Sholokhov, Extension officials report.

It. On the campus, representatives from the Students' Administrative Council returning from the funeral over the grounds Sir William loved so well, realized that they had experienced the final chapter in a great man's life. Mourners representing all branches of Sir William's interests were present at the service. Prime Minister MacKenzie King and the Hon. Louis St. Laurent, Minister of Justice, were among the honorary pallbearers. D. L. McCarthy, K.C., and Hon. George Drew, Premier of Ontario, were also in attendance.

Active pallbearers were Colonel A. E. Kirkpatrick, Dr. H. Burnham and seven grandsons of Sir William: Hon. W. P. Mulock, A. W. Kirkpatrick, W. J. Mulock, T. H. Mulock, Wilfred Thomson, Stanley Thomson and A. R. Mulock.

Seven great grandsons of Sir William also participated in the service.

Messages of sympathy were received from universities throughout Canada and the United States.

Change Proposed In U.N.B. Training

Fredericton—(C.U.P.)—President M. F. Gregg of the University of New Brunswick, proposed in a recent address that one complete day out of every 12 at U.N.B. be devoted to C.O.T.C. training, rather than drilling after lectures.

Changes have also been suggested in regard to the training of third and fourth year Science men. It was proposed that men in these classes should take seven days' training this fall, approximately 50 per cent of the total time required. It would then be up to them to decide whether or not the training was of sufficient importance to compensate for the time lost from studies.

Brigadier Gregg Heads U. N. B.

Fredericton, N.B.—(C.U.P.)—Brig. Milton F. Gregg, V.C., M.C. and B.A., has been appointed the new President of the University of New Brunswick, it was announced recently. He succeeds Dr. N. A. McKernie, who resigned his post to become President of the University of British Columbia.

Enlisting as a private in the First Great War, Brig. Gregg was wounded three times. He returned to Canada with the rank of major. He was awarded the Military Cross for gallantry at Vimy, the Bar for action at Arras, and the Victoria Cross for courage at Cambrai in 1918. He re-enlisted in 1939 and rose to the rank of brigadier.

Prior to accepting his new position, Brigadier Gregg was Camp Commandant at the Infantry Training School at Vernon, B.C.

S.C.M. Conference To Be Near Weston Sunday, Monday

Gerald Hutchinson, Canadian Student Christian Movement General Secretary, Will Lead Discussions and Bible Study

Planned to take advantage of the long week-end afforded by the University's Monday closing, a Student Christian Movement Conference will be held next Sunday and Monday at Camp Westown, near Weston.

Open to all new students who are interested, the Conference will seek a clearer understanding of the content of the Christian Faith, examining the role of the Christian community in a secular world, and by analogy the role of the S.C.M. on the college campus.

The conference agenda includes Bible study on "What was the Message of the Early Church?" and a series of discussions on "The Necessity of a Christian Community," led by Gerald Hutchinson, general secretary of the S.C.M. in Canada. Mr. Hutchinson's frequent trips to most of the universities in Canada have contributed to his wide experience in the trends of Canadian life and thought.

Helen Morton, vice-chairman of the World's Student Christian Federation, will open the conference, presenting a picture of contemporary student life based on her numerous contacts with universities all over the world.

Contrasting with these deliberations, activities such as hiking, singing, dancing, and softball are planned to help make the week-end a memorable one.

Hope was expressed by the executive yesterday that in view of the opportunity afforded by the long week-end, many students will make plans to attend the conference.

Wycliffe Cabinet Meets at Midnight

Because of the difficulty in meeting the time-tables of all members, the Wycliffe College Cabinet will hold its first meeting this year at a midnight session, Maurice J. Walsh, Wycliffe social director, announced to The Varsity yesterday.

"It was a matter of holding the opening sessions at midnight or not at all," Walsh said, in stating that the members would gather Friday, Oct. 6, at 12 midnight sharp.

One aspect of college life which will be discussed, he said, were plans for the Wycliffe annual At Home, which were still in the formative stage.

Tentatively, he said, the social affair will be held later this year, with a dinner at the college, followed by dancing at Hart House and a Social at the principal's home on University Crescent.

McGill Plans to Confer 168 Degrees Tomorrow

Montreal—(C.U.P.)—One hundred and sixty-eight students will receive degrees at McGill University's fall convocation exercises on Friday. Among the graduates will be 90 Medical students and 12 dentists who have completed a four-years' course in two years and 11 months, under the accelerated war-time program. Sixty-five other students are graduating after attending the McGill summer school.

The diplomas will be presented by the Chancellor, Morris W. Wilson.

VARSITY STUDENTS TOUR CANADA WHILE WORKING WITH SUMMER CARNIVAL

By Sid Jourard

Last spring, at examination time, a desire other than the conventional spring desires smote some 17 undergrads of this University—the desire to get away. And so, in a band, they made their way to the winter quarters of a well-known carnival to throw in their lot with it. Those involved report a most interesting and memorable summer.

These students, from various faculties and courses about the campus, threw a note of "culture" into a very heterogeneous collection of people—showmen, labourers, agents, and the vast assortment of humanity that follows a travelling organization.

With the sound of the merry-go-round dinning in their ears, the boys "bingo'd" and concessioned their way through the major towns from Brantford to Calgary, and then to Quebec, and then you saw them back on the campus last week, broadened men.

We say broadened because these men have been everywhere, relatively speaking, that is. All the conventional tourist sights they saw in their odd hours of leisure, and many of the sights that tourists seldom see. Of course the reason for some of the more unusual sights they saw was because they were all seen after midnight when the carnival spare time begins. Who has ever seen Banff at the hour when both moon and sun are gleaming industriously on both walls of mountains? Or who has ever swum in the muddy Saskatchewan River at 1:30 a.m. when there was still a sun in the sky?

But we are inclined to believe that it was the people in all of the various towns that were more amazed. In the School Frosh To Be Initiated In Varsity Stadium Tomorrow

Tomorrow afternoon, the greensward of Varsity Stadium will be the scene of initiations planned for the green-tied School frosh.

All Junior and Senior Engineers, as well as staff members, are invited to witness the sophomores put the freshmen through their paces. Lectures and laboratories at the south end of the campus will be cancelled for the event. Freshmen are advised to wear old clothes.

Following the initiation, a Freshman Reception Dance will be held in Hart House at which the newly-initiated Frosh will be welcomed into the social life of School by their new friends the sophomores. Bert Niosi will play for the dancers in the Big Gym, Jack Evans will hold forth up in the Little Gym, while the more rustic Schoolmen will swing their partners to Charlie Hannigan and his Mountaineers in the East Common Room. Admission fee for the gala night will be one dollar.

first place, these rah-rahs (as the veteran carnival workers called them) were quite picturesque. Dressed in plaid shirts, old pants, and headgear ranging from berets (to cause comment among Calcareans) to ten gallon hats (for the benefit of those in Quebec), they visited all the best hotels and restaurants and silenced complaints by spending hard-earned cash liberally.

It was no uncommon sight early on a Sunday morning to see a sweaty, dirty crew of individuals stroll into an exclusive restaurant, and resembling tramps as they did, begin discussing everything from philosophy to girls. This was the culture that the rah-rahs imbued into the show.

Never, we believe, has the name of U. of T. been so broadly spread across Canada as last summer—the "Blue and White" would sound proudly from the top of the brilliantly coloured box-cars, or from the tops of the high-piled trucks. On the tear-down nights, when the show was ready to move to the next town, the

Unity

The University of Toronto possesses a very powerful attraction for the aspiring student, not only because of the excellence of its courses, but also because of the people who attend lectures here. To the University come some of the finest minds in the British Empire, and the young man who would exchange ideas, broaden his knowledge of people, who would sit up very late at night smoking a brand new pipe and solving the problems of the universe, finds here an unparalleled opportunity to do so. To this city come, from time to time, the world's great musicians, writers, and actors, and to him who likes to know what the world's more brilliant minds are thinking, Toronto is a magnet.

But one of the more salient and rather deplorable features of this University is the lack of cohesion between the student bodies of the various faculties. If you ask any average Toronto graduate about his college career, he will tell you about his engineering, medical, or arts degree. He may, perhaps, mention as an afterthought that he took it at Toronto. This is a feature not common to all large universities; a Harvard man is a Harvard man, whether he took his degree in engineering, law, or applied metaphysics.

This lack of "spirit" is perhaps due, in part, to the abolition of intercollegiate sport, which, granted, is a wartime measure. But there are other changes which could be made regardless of the present situation; more all-university functions could be promoted and held, an interfraternity council could be formed, and student politics and elections need not centre entirely with the separate colleges and faculties.

It is to be hoped that with the return of intercollegiate sport and the consequent burgeoning out of the feeling of student unity, that these and other changes will be instituted.

Greek World

During the first few weeks of the fall term, coincident with the arrival of large numbers of eager, enthusiastic freshmen at the University, the rushing season of the men's fraternities on the campus swings to the height of its activity. There are hectic days for the Greeks, full of parties, luncheons, smokers, and dinners, pervaded with a spirit of friendly rivalry, and fraught with anxiety and expectation. To the freshman, rushing signifies a gay social round, new-found friends, and the eventual linking of his interests with the fraternity whose ideals and members most appeal to him.

In spite of the fact that at the University of Toronto, fraternities are not officially recognized by the governing bodies, they have, nevertheless, co-operated with the University's policy of refraining from publicity and retiring from public notice by keeping their social functions on a modest scale and within the environs of the University. Gone are the elaborate rushing programs of the carefree pre-war years. Today, the fundamental serious nature of these fraternal student organizations is being stressed; the rushee is no longer swept off his feet by a blinding whirl of extravagant parties in order that the social advantages of the fraternity be impressed upon him.

From social and economic standpoints, fraternities, admittedly, have many disadvantages; much controversy has been raised in regard to them. However for the out-of-town student at this University, fraternities fulfill an important function in providing him a home on the campus, and for all students they play an important role in integrating the widely divergent colleges and faculties into a unified whole.

Hazing

Last week, in his opening address to the students, Principal Wallace of Queen's University stated that he thought that hazing was "puerile, foolish, and sadistic." A recent survey of student opinion about this question conducted on this campus by The Varsity, indicated that many people here rather disagreed with this sentiment. Actually the hazing of freshmen at this University has long been forbidden by the Caput. This edict arose many years ago from the abuse given this custom, not only here, but at colleges all over Canada and the United States.

The opinion expressed by the Toronto students is perhaps due to the fact that they have never seen this system of initiation in practice but are merely indulging in idle theorizing. Principal Wallace's remarks were made in all intelligibility of the situation, by an educationalist who has witnessed the scandals to which that hazing has given rise.

The most interesting aspect of the controversy is that the interested parties are first and second year students who are filled with the high spirits of youth are just beginning to realize the serious nature of higher education. There are few people who have any objection to the harmless and controlled initiations that are at present carried out at the University of Toronto. These give full scope to the exuberance of youth and are not by any stretch of imagination sadistic. Any type of initiation may be termed foolish and puerile by a fully mature man. They seem, however, to be perfectly natural and necessary to the development of college spirit.

Army Art

Toronto Art Gallery

Of great interest is the Canadian Army Art Exhibition now on display at the Toronto Art Gallery. It clearly shows the trend of thought among the soldiers overseas and at home.

The bulk of the work was divided between portraiture and scenes from army life. Since the army tends to tone down extremists, both of these classes were quite conservative. Portraiture in the photographic vein was best illustrated by Tom Miller with his exquisite Nurse Campsall, while C-91051, by Frank Hazelhurst, is a fine bit of realistic impressionism.

There was a great variety of subject in the army life group. Still life was exemplified in Forty-eight, a water-colour sketch by Mary E. Wilson, and action painting in the first prize winner, Cross Country Convoys, by Bruno Bovak. A clever though

SMOKE Blacks Out SKULE

Both students and skoolmen gaped in amazement yesterday morning as clouds of belching smoke issued from the south side of U.C. and drifted across the campus to conceal the ill red outhouse beneath opaque black billows.

"Smoke Nuisance!!!" screamed Dean Foo-Yung, expert on the building and maintenance of the Wall of China, through a rift in the inky cloud. "We will sue," he shouted. "Sue The Varsity! Wait till I tell my brother about this!" The Dean's brother, by the way, is the eminent authority on nuisances and soy-beans, Egg-Foo Yung.

Hastily improvising a gas-mask from a discarded running-shoe, Tangent McSildrool, Mech. IV, President of the Engineering Society, crept across the campus and into U.C.'s checking corridors on a tour of investigation.

"If only McGeech were alive," moaned Tangent as he shuffled about the building, dodging blase artsmen in the smoking inferno. Then a thought struck him.

"Aha," he mused on, blinking at this novel experience, "perhaps it is the late McGeech who is raising all this stink. McGeech is burning below!"

But the thickening smoke led him not to the defunct Department of Sanskrit and Window-Washing, but to the office of Principal Kidney Myth. Pushing open the door, he saw the source of Skool's newest plague.

Dimly visible through the haze was Dr. Myth, smoking a King Size Pell Mell in a two-foot cigarette holder that jutted aloft like a miniature chimney. Nearby sat Papa de Field of the Sanskrit Department, ashes from his nickel cigar falling carelessly on his long bushy beard. "Aha," breathed Tangent, softly closing the door. And he went off to report to Dean Foo-Yung.

"This," hissed the Dean, "is a case for my illustrious brother."

But before the Dean could direct Tangent to contact Egg, there arose a loud clamor from the gasping, choking Skoolmen gathered on the steps.

"They'll asphyxiate," cried one Chem. man (who had come by his four syllable words from his Soc. and Phil. girl friend). The laughing, singing voices of a class of Civil Engineering students floated from a top floor window.

"Don't understand that at all," said the Dean. "The smoke is going in that window, too. They should be dead!"

"All Skoolmen should be," mumbled an onlooking Artsman. Poor soul.

The Dean cried for volunteers to enter the building and save the lighthearted group who were so tragically unaware of their fate.

Tangent led the party into the forbidding smoke screen. Valiantly they stumbled by the stairs and into the room of Civil Engineers. But they stood back, amazed. The atmosphere was as clear and pure as a classroom can be.

"How strange," was Tangent's profound statement. "We shall investigate."

In less than seven seconds, the mystery was solved. Three trunks, their lids open about two inches, were

Tennis Tourney Launched Here

The first day's play in the University Tennis Tournament provide little startling play and no startling upsets. The St. Hilda's courts buzzed with white-clad men from early morning up to the time the courts were closed for the last rites for Sir William Mulock.

All matches were of the shorter variety and the lone match of any length came when Robinson of Forestry extended Mackan of St. Mike's. The scores were 6-2, 3-6, 6-4.

While he recorded no upset, Morton Gross of U.C. provided the onlookers with surprising form as he walked through his opponent, Jones of Trinity, in two sets, 6-0, 6-0.

Seeded number three, Ian Morrison of U.C. romped through Adams in two love sets, as did Wade, also of U.C., as he swept aside Foster of Forestry. The other seeded players in the higher brackets did not see action.

The following are the full results: G. Davidson (S.P.S.) defeated McMillan (P.H.E.), 6-4, 6-3. Hendra (Trin.) defeated Doner (S.P.S.), 6-3, 6-3.

Bennett (St. M.) defeated Fraenkel (Wyc.), 6-0, 6-2.

W. Thompson (St. M.) defeated Scroggins (Wyc.), 6-0, 6-2.

Wade (U.C.) defeated Foster (Forestry), 6-0, 6-0.

Thornton (S.P.S.) defeated Cunningham (Knox), 6-2, 6-2.

A. Kaufman (S.P.S.) defeated J. G. Bennett (U.C.), 6-2, 6-1.

Staples (S.P.S.) defeated Rogerson (Trin.), 6-2, 6-2.

Mynahan (St. M.) defeated Kingston (Trin.), 6-4, 6-1.

B. Kaufman (S.P.S.) defeated Gooderham (Trin.), 6-1, 6-2.

Grass (U.C.) defeated R. Jones (Trin.), 6-0, 6-0.

Golf Games Tomorrow

St. Andrews Golf Club will welcome Varsity students to participate either as players or spectators in the annual University Tournament tomorrow starting at nine o'clock in the morning. An entry of 75 has already been received by the Hart House Athletic Office and the final total is expected to exceed last year's record of 110. The course was affiliated with Varsity this summer and is the home grounds for many of the University students.

Summer rules will probably still be used as the fairways are reputed to be in excellent shape even at this late stage in the year. In the event that Winter rules are adopted, however, a notice will be posted to this effect at the first tee. The only difference this will make in the playing is that participants will be allowed to tee up on higher turf if they (Continued on page 4)

Wiles (Knox) won by default from Rolland (Knox).
Morrison (U.C.) defeated Adams (Trin.), 6-0, 6-0.
Haywood (Meds) defeated Hallet (Trin.), 6-1, 6-0.
N. Young (Knox) defeated Hodgson (Vic.), 6-1, 6-2.
Mackhan (St. M.) defeated Robinson (Forestry), 6-2, 3-6, 6-4.
Barron (Vic.) defeated Currier (Knox), 6-2, 6-1.
Ferguson won by default from Sims (S.P.S.).
Doran (St. M.) defeated Beverly (Trin.), 6-2, 6-1.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasiv

WE'RE AWAY . . .

Early yesterday morning, five pairs of racket wielders trotted onto the hardened courts of St. Hilda's to usher in another year of intramural competition as well as start the ball rolling in the annual University of Toronto tennis tournament. Judging from the results of the first day's play, as well as the odd comment, the tournament will be full of success. The results are published elsewhere on this page. Of the 20 matches scheduled, all were accounted for. This is something of a record and the tennis committee should especially be commended.

A very promising newcomer to the campus tennis ranks was uncovered in the person of Mort Grass, a University College freshman. Grass possesses a blistering drive coupled with a capable backhand and with a little more steady playing could upset the seeded players. He handily disposed of R. Jones of Trinity in two love sets.

A keen match promises to crop up in the third round when and if Grass encounters Joe Feyerer, seeded number one. The winner of this foreseen match will take a lot of beating for the McEachern Cup. However, upsets do crop up and generally add interest to a knock-out tourney of this type. If Grass should fail to weather Feyerer, he may rest assured that his display yesterday raised his stock up with a leap.

Today brings out some 40 pairs for more singles matches. Friday morning should see the conclusion of the first round, narrowing the participants down to a mere 64. Weather permitting, the 32's should be reached by high noon on Saturday.

Contestants are again warned to watch the Globe and Mail for the nine and ten o'clock games as this paper hits the street slightly before The Varsity which will also carry the draw.

McGILL MONDE . . .
News simmering from out McGill way shows the Redmen of Intercollegiate fame now holding down a berth in the Quebec Rugby Football Union for the second successive season. The other teams comprising the cheaper edition of the O.R.F.U. are Navy and Verdun Grads. This move is quite surprising considering the showing of the Redmen a short year ago.

Coach Doug Kerr opens his tenth successive season at McGill with a fairly raw squad. Only the nucleus of last year's team has returned and he has hopes of filling in the gaping holes with high school stars who have just entered college. Taking into view that the Navy teams, both here and in Montreal, consist largely of recently enlisted high school players, the pattern of Kerr's argument can be clearly followed.

The text of this argument was borne out on Tuesday when 72 aspiring candidates turned out for the initial practice. The turnout proved to be so unexpectedly large that goodly number were unable to scrimmage due to lack of suitable equipment.

News of this sort is very gratifying. With such a large quantity of material, a football team of some note should result. Here may be another example where quantity means quality. With Kerr's coaching and enough of last year's team back to give a steady influence to the team, this squad should measure up to the standards of the two other teams. If it does not, McGill can certainly be looked up to for their attempt to place a Red and White team back into the limelight.

" The Sportswoman "

By Janice Murray

HAVE YOU AN APPOINTMENT . . .

for a medical? This is a very important question and you should be able to answer in the affirmative if you plan to play on your college teams in either baseball or basketball. Dr. Mulock would like all appointments to be made just as soon as possible, that is—TODAY—so that your examination may be completed in a few days and she may continue examining Freshies, while you start playing games. If you are a Freshie and intend to play baseball the staff at 44 Hoskin would like you to go up and arrange for an earlier medical if you have not already had it. Victoria College RESIDENTS need not worry about medicals, as they know, because the College looks after it. Please remember that for baseball this year you must be examined before playing.

seems to be a popular cry at 44 Hoskin, as everywhere else. Dr. Mulock says that at last there has been a system figured out that will overcome the terrible disadvantages (an understatement this is!) of eligibility slips. This will follow the system used by the Men's Medical Office and will make it easier for all concerned. Under this system all First Year girls will be examined and all those who intend to compete in Upper Years. After each girl has been examined she is classified, not 4F or 1A exactly, but the same idea, and the classification is entered on a little card which with other little cards is sent down to the Women's Athletic Office in the S.A.C. Office, Hart House, and filed. Comes now the time when little Iodine wants to play baseball. She has her name taken down by the team manager and it is sent in to the office, with those of her teammates. The little cards are referred to, little Iodine is looked up in the dossier, found to be struggling sufficiently enough to be pronounced "living" and is allowed to play. The only person who hasn't much of her job taken from her is the team manager, and even for her it is easier, as all she must hand in before the game starts are the names of those on her team. Only those who have shuffled those eligibility lists in days of yore know what a great thing this is.

Another way in which the Women's Health Service is imitating the boys is by having the same system for excuses as they have. This for the recalcitrant femmes who dislike an hour of push-ups, is bad news. No longer will the tall handsome friend be able to call the Office of the Health Service and shyly mutter that he said femme's papa, and that she has sniffles and so is ineligible for push-ups, before heading for a mid-morning coke. The old order changeth, so that now a sickness of two weeks duration is necessary before any excuses are accepted, and of course the old rule holds that a doctor's certificate is necessary for a two-week absence. This would be unbearable except that there are a couple of periods allowed for inadvertent absences during the term. So Dr. Mulock warns us that unless violent exercise is your meat, and you want it for two years, Freshies, you had better be there!

BASEBALL REARS ITS UGLY HEAD . . .

again, and indeed hourly. St. Mike's are to rest assured though that they may have Little Vic field on Tuesday at 4 p.m. to practice on; but what is to happen about playing fields for the games is anyone's guess at this time. A well-informed Meds girl tells us that her sisters intend to enter a team in the schedule too. What about Skule?

Any time's SHOPPING TIME!

NO SLEEPLESS NIGHTS re budgeting the clothes allowance . . . the Evangeline Shop's method of helping you build a wardrobe week by week has your limited budget problem licked. Jackets or plaid and blouses designed to match or contrast 'em, tweeds designed to team up with your current choice in the most chummy way imaginable, slacks you can whip into without changing the upper half of your costume, all these and accessories too are yours in plenty at your nearest Evangeline Shop, which is a branch of the best-known family of women's specialty shops in Ontario. 751 Yonge Street above Bloor.

THINGS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW about ointments . . . there are about one hundred and fifty specialized ointment prescriptions, designed specifically for a great many different skin conditions, but any doctor will tell you that the ointment which covers most of the purposes of these ointments is Mecca Ointment. It took seventeen years to perfect the Mecca formula, which, after many years' trial, is still being used as a general household rub. It is also used in Great Britain in celebrated hospitals by celebrated doctors. Your twenty-five cent investment in a tin of Mecca is pretty good insurance against surface infections.

One of our stalwart engineers, engaged in the inevitable holiday surveying job, was walking down the street one July evening in Strathroy, Ont. (We don't know where it is either.) A smiling cherubic ten-year-old, hanging out of a second-story window, greeted him as he approached with: "Sure not today, isn't it?"

"Sure is," he agreed.

"Oh well," replied the cherub as our hero passed underneath "this will cool you off"—and proceeded to dump a very large and very wet glass of water on him!

A recalcitrant medical student was being raked over the coals a while back by a professor long noted for his keen, rapier-like wit. With the culprit standing uncomfortably before him he began to sum up the lad's character as only he can.

"Well, Mr. Jones, I think you are interested in this course—sometimes. But really, I do think you are a bit of an ass, Mr. Jones."

NEATEST TRICK OF THE WEEK DEPT.: Last week the boys of a local Greek-letter house were entertaining guests in style at a swank nifty. In order to add to the elegance of the situation one of the lads was chosen to pay the check the others settling up with him privately. The evening moved grandly to a close and our chappie laid down a two-dollar tip with a flourish, picked up the bill nonchalantly and followed the others out.

Halfway across the room he glanced casually at the check, blanched visibly, tore back across the room to rescue the two-dollar bill from under the very nose

"Ah-ha," shouted Egg Foo-Yung. "My waffles."

"Your what?" asked Tangent and the Dean in chorus.

"My monogrammed waffles," beamed Egg, grinning from tooth to tooth. "I have been experimenting on post-war conveniences for the home. My waffles have taken up most of my time lately. I keep them in these trunks. You see, I have a device that puts monograms on . . ."

"But where did the smoke go?" interrupted Tangent peering at the neat piles of delicately browned waffles.

The engineers put their heads together and soon came forth with the revolutionary discovery that the absorbing quality of Egg's experimental subjects was so great that smoke was drawn to them from miles around.

The inspired Skoolmen then carried the waffles to U.C. and distributed them throughout the building. Magically, the smoke disappeared and Dr. Myth puffed on his cigarette in comfort, fearing not the irate threats that the Dean had made.

Egg Foo-Yung was delighted. He scampered off to his hot stove, muttering the old proverb, "Every day, in every way, I can get better and better."

of the waiter and stalked out, head held high.

A group of gals were chatting on the steps of U.C. the other day, the freshies in the circle obviously impressed with the seniors' suave, sophisticated ways, when the subject of summer jobs came up, as it inevitably does. The first year gals were visibly staggered upon learning that one of the lovelies had "slung hash" in a restaurant, another had worked on the assembly line of a war plant, and a third drove a truck!

WHICH GOES TO SHOW THAT GLAMMER IS ONLY SKIN DEEP.

A couple of inmates of a certain St. George St. hostelry were gossiping about their fraternity brothers' love affairs, as fellows will.

"Say," said one, "I hear that Butch's girl is also going out with someone else. What a dope that guy must be—what a fool! He hasn't got an earthly chance with Butch around. I wonder who that moron could be?"

"Well," said the other, beckoning him closer and lowering his voice, "if you won't tell anyone—if you promise to keep this dark, I'll tell you."

"O.K.," promised the first avidly.

"Who was it?"

"ME."

CARNIVAL . . .

old "Gaudemus Igitur" mingled beautifully with the roar of high-powered trucks; the carnival faculty of U. of T. had finished another lap on their way back to Toronto and school.

Naturally, such a life sounded idyllically care-free. But all was not irresponsibility. Registered letters, covered with forwarding addresses, were constantly catching up with the boys who were on bad terms with Mr. Fennell, and these were dropped off in the towns to get fitted for their khaki uniforms. The crew that finished the summer was considerably smaller than the one that started. But the same can be said of any job. It was merely disconcerting to receive an "order medical" when a thousand miles from home.

When at last the time came for school to begin, and the last tear-down to be effected, spirits were high. During the last tear-down, toasts were drunk, cheers were shouted, and it was probably the first time that the "Blue and White" was sung in pidgin French.

As a final note of final irony, while the boys were impatiently waiting for their train to begin the long journey home, the whole trip was held up for three hours by some other train carrying a man named Frankli, whose last name they did not catch.

America, the University of Toronto graciously made way for you.

And now the summer is over, and Toronto binds us to our task of passing another term.

Track Meet By Tele

According to Hec Phillips, Varsity track coach, a telegraphic meet between Varsity runners and those from McGill has been arranged. Full details are not available at the present time as a further reply is expected from the officials in Montreal.

The present plan is to coincide this telegraphic meet with that of the senior interfaculty track meet to be held at the Stadium on Thursday, Oct. 17. The times from the events would be sent to McGill as the Toronto times in the Intercollegiate meet.

The McGill Interfaculty meet will take place on Oct. 18 and 20 at Molson Stadium and is the first affair of its kind to be held there since 1939. Previous to this year the events were run off as Inter-Company competition with teams formed of each company in C.O.T.C. as well as entries from the other two services.

MIDTOWN: an excellent showing "ATLANTIC CITY"

This musical-comedy is a must for every theatre-goer, for the plot is good and well-played, and the comedy not of the slapstick type which we find so often in films.

The story is about Brad Taylor's fight to put Atlantic City on the map. During his rise from an erstwhile young promoter to become Mr. Atlantic City, he loses his wife and most of his friends. Finally, when his greatest venture, a huge pier, is destroyed, and he's left penniless, his wife and a troupe of friends come back and help him regain his spirit and prestige.

Intervened with the plot are many old-time songs and skits, band leaders Paul Whiteman and Louis Armstrong aiding in this department.

As an added feature the Midtown presents a thrilling but subtle spy picture in "The Secrets of Scotland Yard."

off a complete day from work.

"Another point, the Lieutenant-Colonel said, "Is that the syllabus here, with its three-day training arrangement after lectures, offers more variety than would be possible under the other plan."

Equipment for various phases of training, under the present arrangement, he said, could be used by different units on various days. Also, when training was broken up into three days, the topics were probably more interesting for the trainees rather than if they were studied at one dose, he stated.

Possible change of training periods would depend entirely on "the academic authorities," he stressed.

Form I.S.S. Committee To Publicize Campaign

Action Committee Appointed at First Meeting: More Publicity Promised as Need for Students' Dollar Grows

SOCIETY AIMS STATED

According to their representatives on this campus, the International Student Service plans this year to campaign and use publicity on a grander scale than ever before, in order to evoke interest in and obtain financial aid for the organization.

Yesterday's meeting saw the first great step taken in this direction, through the formation of an Action Committee, which is to stress the urgency of assisting our less fortunate co-students in other countries and here. Mrs. Grant, Chairman of the Canadian I.S.S. Committee, told the audience that the I.S.S., an international body with headquarters at Geneva, has as its main aim to furnish assistance to students in need and to bolster up university activities, where they have been checked, especially in Europe and China. In the latter country students receive one third of the funds available in books, food and other essentials. Money contributions in Canada, Mrs. Grant was proud to add, have increased 100 per cent during the last two years.

Mr. Dale Brown, the other guest speaker, emphasized that interest in the I.S.S. is interest in an international fellowship. On the receiving line of the organization is the most motley crowd of students imaginable: Russian soldiers studying in Switzerland, Chinese trekking for hundreds of miles to their places of study, Canadian prisoners in Germany... but all of them desperately in need of the help of their more fortunate fellows in our universities. They need our help.

Mr. Brown, having extensively traveled to Prisoner-of-War Camps, added that German prisoners in this country also receive assistance through the I.S.S. This is due to three reasons. First, it insures the same help being sent to Canadian prisoners in Germany; secondly, the I.S.S. has never been discriminating against people because of race, nationality or religion (and, according to Mr. Brown, there are plenty of anti-Nazis in those camps); and thirdly, the study material of the I.S.S. might actually help destroy the Nazi philosophy among the prisoners.

Concluding, Mr. Brown suggested that if out of all the half-essentials of the average student, only one dollar a year could be spared for our fellows who are in desperate need of it, the I.S.S. drive would be a smash success.

The Committee was then elected, with Gordon Stulberg as chairman, June Wrong, secretary, and Henry Alsberg, treasurer. Said Stulberg quite emphatically, "We shall use all publicity possible to instill in every student's mind the absolute necessity of realizing the responsibility we have in providing help—often of the barest subsistence—for those who need it," adding that in his opinion no finer contribution to world student fellowship could be made, than giving a little bit we can spare to those who cannot do without it.

A resolution adopted, called for an unlimited ceiling in the forthcoming fund drive. The first campus drive will take place at the Freshman's Dance on Wednesday, where tags will be sold and information about the work of the I.S.S. given out.

Former Chairman Joan Corbett told of the destruction of the French University at Caen and observed that this actual concrete reminder of European students' plight might give us an almost symbolic reminder of our share in reconstruction. "Let us lend a hand in rebuilding Caen University!"

The meeting was then dissolved.

Noted Arab Prof. Visits University

Professor Philip Hitti, one of the most renowned scholars ever to come from Arabia to this continent, is now visiting at the University of Toronto in connection with the Department of History.

Professor Hitti obtained his B.A. degree at Beirut and his Ph.D. at Columbia University. He then became professor of Arabian and History at Princeton University.

Himself an Arab from the Lebanon, Mr. Hitti is the founder and director of the Institute of Oriental Studies at Princeton University and was three times the director of the American Oriental Society.

For the past three years Professor Hitti has been teaching the Arabian language to army officers during nine-month periods. He is at present the chairman of the Council for Syrian-American relations. His most well-known book is "The History of the Arabs."

Victoria Men Freshie Fails

Whistles whistled. Bells clanged. The jury stopped playing cards. And the trial of Vic freshies who had disobeyed initiation rules began.

One by one the victims were dragged up. The first had to find a man which, as Judge Billie Allan pointed out, is quite a feat at Vic. Once he was captured the freshie was thrown out and the sophs, spurred on by Joan Chalk, took over.

Next victim was forced—in reparation for her sins—to propose to him. She was conventional on bended knee. She blushed, she looked down, she looked up, she smiled demurely, then bellowed at the top of her young lungs: "Marry me."

He refused flatly and a soph, taking pity on the poor girl, handed her a whip accompanied by a sage, "Babe, you haven't got the right technique."

The man in question was last seen streaking south.

Half the jury—those with R.C.M.P. complexes—joined the chase. The other half got in a circle on the floor and were last heard shouting, "Roll them bones!"

Court was adjourned.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Medical Examinations

The week of October 10 is reserved for basketball examinations. After that there will be no appointments available till the end of October. Those who have any intention of playing basketball should make their appointments at 44 Hoskin immediately.

Two Queen's Training Contingents Renamed

Kingston—(CUP)—Changes in military training on Queen's campus this year include renaming the C.O.T.C. and the U.A.T.C.

The change in the name of the C.O.T.C. was made necessary by the alterations in the army regulations with reference to the status of officer candidates. It may be called the "University Training Corps. The U.A.T.C. has been renamed University Air Squadron. No alterations will be made in the name of the U.N.T.D.

International Club Plans Meetings

The Planning Committee of the International Affairs Society will meet on Wednesday, Oct. 11 at 4:30 p.m. in the U.C. Rotunda. All those who have been previously interested and those in first year are particularly requested to come and draw up plans for the coming year.

The regular meetings are to be held every second Monday in the common room of the Women's Union at 4:30 in the afternoon, and the Society invites everybody interested in world affairs and their importance.

The International Affairs Society is a students' organization on the campus interested in current events, and its aim is to present as many varied and authoritative points of view as is possible on large international problems, such as war aims, peace aims, and world politics, for the consideration of the student body.

The Society tries to bring interesting speakers to its bi-monthly meetings, where it also tries to encourage open discussion of the problems presented. The Society feels that the only way to form an intelligent student opinion is by open discussion of the difficulties with experts in their respective fields.

In connection with the Society there exists a library on international problems on the second floor in Baldwin House. The Society invites everyone to make use of these books.

Victoria Freshies Formally Greeted

"Freshman, approach at Alma Mater's call

While she invokes a blessing on you all;

...The Sophomores, who their trust held true

Now hand this lamp of learning on to you..."

These words filled the Victoria College chapel last evening as the sophomores lit their freshies' candles at the close of a ceremony formally welcoming the class of 478 to Victoria.

Miss J. MacPherson, Dean of Women, addressed the combined classes. She pointed out the appropriateness of the lighted candles to symbolize the enlightened mind.

Dr. W. T. Brown, Chancellor and President of Victoria, and Dr. H. Bennett, Dean of the College, also welcomed the new class.

McGill Principal Names New Department Head

Montreal—(CUP)—Appointment of Lieut.-Commander George H. Kimble as Professor and Chairman of McGill's newly established department of Geography was announced by Principal Cyril James on Tuesday. A Meteorological Officer with the Royal Navy, Lieut.-Commander Kimble will arrive from England early in the new year to assume his new duties. Trained in England as a teacher and Navy expert, he has recently completed a 40,000 mile tour of operational zones furthering meteorological studies for the Navy.

In a release from Principal James' office, it was announced that by means of the new course, geographical factors which affect the economic and social life of a race could now be dealt with, and an understanding of the manner in which geography affects the relationship of nations be made available to McGill students.

FIRST YEAR WOMEN STUDENTS

Any student who has not yet made an appointment for a medical examination must do so at once at 44 Hoskin.

U.C. First Year Choose Executive

Nominations for the Freshman Executive of the Women's Undergraduate Association of University College were made last night in the Women's Union Theatre. Rose Rabkin, president of the Association, outlined the principles of the election to the assembled audience and stated that nominations would be open for a first year president, secretary-treasurer, and a social service director, who will act as assistant to the main service director in the various drives held during the year.

Eleven girls were nominated to fill the various offices and were asked to confirm their nominations with Ruth McDougall, second year president, before leaving the hall. The nominees were: Kay Weir, Margaret Dale, Nancy Margaret Louis, Pat Catto, Anne Norman, Joan Western, Evelyn McCormick, Helen Welsh, Mildred Spier, Christine Zurnstein and Deborah Avery. These girls have been requested to hand in their photographs which will be put on display in the U.C. Rotunda.

Campaigning for office has been confined to an Election Tea to be held on Tuesday, Oct. 10, at 4:30 p.m.

Elections for these offices are being held in the Rotunda from 11:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Oct. 11, in conjunction with the men's elections, and the results will be announced at the First Year Dance will be sponsored tonight. Miss Rabkin announced that the First Year Dance will be sponsored entirely by first year students and has been arranged in lieu of the usual Soph-Fresh banquet which unfortunately had to be postponed.

U.T. Settlement Has Student Tea

The staff of the University Settlement held an informal tea yesterday afternoon for University students, in order to interest them in the work of the group. After tea was served, one of the members of the staff explained the systems used by the Settlement workers. Then Miss Kay Kato, a recent graduate in Sociology, and others, took the guests on a tour of the playrooms and workrooms.

The Settlement, which is situated on District Avenue, is in the centre of a district which is regarded as cosmopolitan, and because of this, the staff is striving to solve racial problems there, many of which have appeared since the beginning of the war. Both children and adults come to the Settlement.

The children have mixed clubs, and scarcely any are conscious of any racial difference, as black, white and yellow mix freely. It is this spirit that Settlement workers are trying to promote in the adult groups.

There are many phases of this work which can be done by the University student, and the Settlement feels a desperate need for volunteer workers in many of their departments. Discussion groups, nursery school, arts and crafts, English, music and dress-making classes, dramatic and athletics are all part of the day's work.

Credit Given Students For C.O.T.C. Training

Vancouver, Oct. 2—(CUP)—Authorities here recently declared that university military training will shorten the basic training of students who enter the armed forces.

A statement explaining and conclusions concerning the credit to be given to men with university training were arrived at by officials of the army, navy and air force with the commanding officer of university training units at a conference held Sept. 7 and 8.

Theatre Under Repairs For November Debut

Vic to Present Goldsmith Play

Mrs. Havor Moore, will direct the Victoria College Dramatic Society's annual play this year, "She Stoops to Conquer," Oliver Goldsmith's comedy. The play will be staged in the Hart House Theatre Nov. 10 and 11, it was announced yesterday by Miss Maurie Kelly, publicity director of the group.

Mrs. Moore, who also directed the Society's last production, Oscar Wilde's "The Importance of Being Earnest," has had wide theatrical experience. She participated in professional plays in New York and London several years ago and says that at different times she has acted all the women roles in the Goldsmith comedies. Her son, Mavor Moore, graduated from University College in 1941 and acted in the college plays during his stay here.

The first open meeting of the Vic group was held last Tuesday at Wymilwood when 150 would-be actors came and tried out for roles. At the meeting, a satirical skit, "Daddy, Don't Go Down in the Mine Tonight," written by Bob Simpkins, II Chemistry, was enacted. Simpkins is also the group stage manager.

Written in 1775, "She Stoops to Conquer" will be dramatized in the atmosphere of its period. The first rehearsal will be at Alumni Hall, Victoria College, tonight.

Amongst those playing the major roles are: Rosalind Falk, IV, Kay Thomson, IV, Pegi Brown, I, Ralph Hicklin, B.A., Vernon Chapman, III, and Adrian Brook, II, all of Victoria College.

NEWSFRONTS

London—Improved flying weather made possible Allied air raids on railway supply depots in Germany. 1300 planes participated.

Berlin—Russian armies open new offensive in Lithuania using 120,000 men. East Prussia claimed target of this attack.

Ottawa—Department of National Defence stated today that Canadian Army casualties numbered 42,577. Of these 11,829 are known dead.

let's go places

The Tivoli-Eglinton feature of the week, except for the now ever-present war-time angle, is the same story of mistaken identity with a few added wrinkles.

Lorraine Day, a pampered heiress who is also a billiard shark par-excellence, sets out to "Bride by Mistake" get her man, by that favourite device of Hollywood—working incognito. She trades personalities with her beautiful secretary, played adequately by Marsha Hunt, and after a long and complicated chase, ultimately succeeds in hooking a very wooden and unconvincing air corps hero, Allan Marshall.

As if this wasn't confusing enough, Miss Day insists on playing cupid's advocate to a buddy of Marshall's from the nearby army base. Allan Joslyn reverts from his usual super-sophisticated cad-type of role to that of the slightly bewildered husband of Miss Hunt who is being continually pursued by soldiers of every description. It is his performance which drags the picture from the grade B quickie to the level of a mildly amusing comedy.

On the same program are a series of selected shorts which are better left unmentioned.

Begin Renovating Theatre for Many Campus Shows; Electrician Returns for Autumn Season

STAFF COMPLETE

Bookings for Hart House Theatre for the five-week theatrical season beginning next month are almost complete and a staff has been engaged. W. R. Dymond, Manager of the theatre, announced yesterday that all but two of the organizations who had indicated their intentions of using the theatre had confirmed their bookings. S. R. Gilley, Comptroller of Hart House, said at the same time that Charles Fuller, who was electrician at the theatre before it closed in January, 1943, had agreed to return for the fall season of productions.

Meanwhile the theatre is the scene of repairs. Although it has not been found necessary to cleanse it of a vast accumulation of cobwebs, the Champus Cat has suggested, leakage from the quadrangle during heavy rains has done some damage to the plaster work in the subterranean auditorium and this is now being fixed.

The stage was measured yesterday by Alex Siegel and Ben Orenstein, producers of the forthcoming U.C. Follies, scheduled to go on the boards on Friday, Nov. 17. The opening performance of the season will be the Victoria College Dramatic Society's play on Nov. 11 and 12, and the Vic Music Club will close the season with its annual operetta on Dec. 8 and 9.

School Nite will involve the use of the theatre on Dec. 1 and the St. Michael's College Players will do a play on Dec. 4 and 5. Both the University College French Club and the Players' Guild have spoken for dates, but have not yet confirmed them, Mr. Dymond said.

Medical Sophs 'Treat' Victims

First year women medical students were cured of any real or imaginary sicknesses last night at their initiation ceremonies held in the U.C. Women's Union. Such varied ailments as malnutrition, fractures, skin infections, short-sightedness, hydrophobia and measles were treated in a second year style from the knowledge acquired after one year in Meds.

The 38 freshies who have been conspicuous on the campus these past few days for their oddities of dress, were formally welcomed into medicine by the sixth year girls in an impressive candle-lighting ceremony.

After the ceremony the freshies, still clad in their initiation outfits of white surgical gowns, caps, masks and trailing bones, formed a long conga line and disappeared in the direction of one of the medical fraternity houses where they were welcomed as members in good standing of the medical profession.

Wymilwood is Setting Of Annual Varsity Tea

The annual Varsity Tea was held yesterday in Wymilwood and refreshments were served before the speeches. The tea was held for the purpose of acquainting prospective reporters with the masthead and to give the freshmen an idea of the policy and the aims of The Varsity.

Betsy Mosbaugh, editor-in-chief, welcomed the freshmen, outlined the policies of the paper, and introduced the masthead. Each one gave a short talk to explain the work of the different departments.

Whirling Dervish

The average student today is retarded by personal disorganization. This bewilderment often results from lack of guidance in the selection of a course. When a teen-aged youth pauses on the threshold of his university career, he is confused by many factors.

For example, he must answer the question, should he stake everything on one subject in a specialized course or should he select unrelated subjects to give variety and outlook to his thought?

Quite often he is in a turmoil over such problems even after four years of experimentation. The pros and cons of the situation remain balanced in his mind. A specialized course might not provide him with a liberal attitude or a long range view of life. On the other hand, the pass arts course, labelled with hour-tags and pigeon-holed with unrelated facts, would promise no definite anchor after graduation. How can a lad select integrated subjects without assistance? The potential student coming to this University is indeed in a quandary.

Very often circumstances are such that no intellectual guidance can be obtained from his background. Many times would he prefer to discuss his indecision with an impartial advisor who would be equipped for just such problems.

At this University there is no official counsellor of that type. Any advice is secured from the deans of the various colleges and faculties. In some cases these heads have a thorough knowledge of only one course and suggest accordingly. The general antipathy between arts and science often leads to the placement of a student in the wrong academic niche. Few students, when applying for an arts or science calendar ever hear of the opportunities found in the extension courses.

The need for guidance in the selection of University courses is great. It would not require a colossus to span the courses which the University offers. Such a counsellor would require training in the problems of the student as well as a specific knowledge of each course. A position of this sort would not be part-time.

The vital contact of a clear, unbiased advisor with an unsure immature student would obviate much of undergraduate disorganization. At the present time not only high school youths but men returning from the war are appearing at the University portals. The former are inexperienced while the latter are upset and cynical over the horrors and inefficiency of battle. Neither type of student is in a position to embark upon a course without the guidance of a man who has full cognizance of their problems.

C.O.T.C. Plan

The proposal of M. F. Gregg, president of the University of New Brunswick, that one day out of every 12 be devoted to military training instead of periods after lectures, presents the possibilities of a more efficient C.O.T.C. set-up.

The sole objection to the C.O.T.C., aside from those of idealistic pacifists, is the amount of time wasted each day not only in lining up and assuming formation but also in the interval between lectures and parades.

If drill occurred every twelfth day, students would have considerably more time to devote to their studies, which, owing to the present selective service regulations, demand increased attention.

Surely, in these days, when business is under centralized control, arrangements could be made with the staff officers who are connected with downtown offices to transfer their duties to a single day. The difficulty of rearranging labs and lectures could possibly be lessened if the one day for drill were allotted to every other Saturday. The number of days missed by such a two-week plan could be made up at the end of the year.

In soliciting this arrangement, Varsity men are not asking to be coddled. They merely desire to ensure their academic safety.

Thanksgiving

The gradual envelopment of the campus in the turkey brown shades of autumn heralds the arrival of Thanksgiving. Those attending the University of Toronto should have much to hold in retrospect. Their Alma Mater has bestowed upon them benefits long since absent in universities in the United States and abroad. A thankful voice should be raised lauding the maintenance of a liberal arts course in wartime. There has been no obvious shortage on the campus which has resulted in an inconvenience comparable to the suffering overseas. Students should appreciate the fact that they are the backers and not the recipients of the I.S.S. drive.

Although the University has maintained the arts, it has also contributed its share of the youth who have given up their lives for their country; and as we realize our fortune on this day of abundance, let us commemorate the fallen who responded so magnificently to the honour of our and their University.

May We Introduce

The news staff of The Varsity merits much credit for the daily appearance of this paper. Barbara Jones, News Editor, is a fourth year student at Victoria in English Language and Literature. She is as efficient and hard working as she is glamorous. Her two assistants make the news staff a truly representative affair. Barbara Hood, who is at St. Mike's, and Frank Rasky, a U.C. student, are both in third year Arts. Young Hood is an extremely conscientious and charming individual. Frank has a nose for news which leads him into all sort of affairs. All three of them hail from Toronto.

It is the business of the news department to make up the list of stories to be done for the day and then collar some youthful reporter and browbeat him or her into submission.

ARTEMUS

Musicians A La Mode

Varsity Arena

Last night's capacity audience at Varsity Arena was treated to a delightful showing of consummate musicianship. Andre Kostelanetz, most popular guest conductor of the Promenade Symphony Orchestra, took joint honours with Robert Weede, baritone with the Metropolitan Opera.

The depth of tone, richness of quality and sincerity of feeling gave Mr. Weede's performance a nobility which many singers seem to lose in their efforts to put themselves across to a popular audience. Invocation di Orfeo by Peri displayed his controlled tones and clear enunciation admirably. Tosti's Aprile and The Balad Monger of Easthope Martin showed his subtle contrast in treatment of content. Mr. Weede made the hit of the evening with the negro spiritual City of Heaven, his favourite song as he pointed out to the audience. His free and easy manner brought him back for two more encores. The two arias sung with orchestra, Di Provenza Il Mar from Verdi's La Traviata and Non Piu Andrai from Mozart's Marriage of Figaro were simply further proof of Mr. Weede's artistry. Perhaps the one criticism which could be made was Mr. Weede's love for the lunga pausa over his top notes.

Mr. Kostelanetz's secret of success can be found in his use of accent, contrast in tone and tempo, crisp trills, contrasted with lyrically rounded melodies. His interpretation of Strauss' Tales of the Vienna Woods

Sight Sub In H. H. Pool

Doughnuts for Tank Retreats Sought as Submarine Surfaces in Athletic Wing: Likkerbreth Shocked

KOMMANDANT NAZTY

Censorship was lifted today as the U.N.T.D. security officials disclosed the real nature of the strange rumor in the Hart House swimming pool during the past week. "Not rust, but oil!" gasped Commodore U. Swabbitt; "Oil from vest-pocket German U-boats!" The Commodore sank back in his chair, faint from thoughts of near disaster, so that Champus had to lick his face to revive him. "Yes," he continued, pulling himself together with some effort, "they were bent on seizing the Tuck Shop... ladders in the Fatherland are running low, you know..."

"Or perhaps they wanted the doughnuts to retreat their tanks," suggested Champus, with a satisfied purr.

"That may be," assented Commander Swabbitt, brightening somewhat. "But that's not all... they planned to seize the Pool Room!"

"But that would mean the end of Hart House as a recreational centre!"

"Quite, quite!" said the Commodore.

"And whatever would Schoolmen do with their time?" The Cat leaned on one paw and contemplated the irony of the situation: the discoloration had first been blamed on a party of merry Schoolmen, purportedly led by Temperance Official McSiddrol, who were suspected of concocting home brew in the pool; people had seen them stirring the water with their slide rules.

"You stopped them, of course?" said the Cat, superfluously (alluding to the subs, not the Schoolmen).

"Naturally—by draining the pool..." "Did they resist?" asked Champus, pausing to untie a knot in his tail.

"Yesss..." sighed Swabbitt, "most impolitely! The Oberkommandant actually swore at me..." Then the Commodore flushed an indignant green: "So we mowed them down with water polo mallets."

"And the Oberkommandant..."?

"President Dody scolded him for being a naughty boy, and the Warden barred him from the pool room!" The Commodore rubbed his hands with vengeful glee.

"But how did subs get into the pool?" "The Germans kept sending loose parts through the piping system," explained the Commodore. "Secret agents

Golf Tourney Begins Today

The first twosome will tee off this morning at nine o'clock as the University Golf Tournament gets under way out at St. Andrews Club. It is still not too late to enter so if the weather is to your liking you can go right out there and get in your post entry. It definitely will be accepted and there are no handicaps allotted so you have just as much chance as those who got in the draw.

Gord Ball of S.P.S. won the championship last year but the field is wide open this time as he is not back at School. Dents claim to have a dark-horse entry who is all set to walk off with the prize but anything can happen and probably will. In the team grouping, S.P.S. won last year with the foursome of Ball, Anderson, Stee and Graham taking the honours. U.C. were runners up with Givens of P.H.E., Gibson, Simpson, and Graham and Garner tied for fourth. Practically every faculty is well represented so the team championship may very easily change hands.

Anyone wishing to see the tournament can reach St. Andrews easily by the following route. Take a Yonge St. car to the city limits and then a Radial car to stop 3A. Walk west along old Yonge St. till you come to the entrance to the club.

Mr. MacWilliam, the St. Andrews professional, states that clubs may be rented by those so desiring at the course and that balls may also be purchased by turning one old ball in on each new one. These balls are re-processed, not prewar, but are, in Mr. MacWilliam's opinion, "good balls." He called last year's tournament "the easiest I ever handled in my life."

The starting times appear in The Globe and Mail this morning so that those taking part should make sure they see where they place in the draw. The individual low gross will decide the champion, and the team winners will be ascertained similarly by selecting the four low gross men from each faculty. The complete tournament will be run off in the one day.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Jerry Ewins

REMEMBER THE DAYS . . .

when the big interest was High School Rugby? Well, there are some mighty good High School Rugby games being played up at Varsity Stadium these days, and the boys are playing really high-class ball (no pun intended). These games are well worth a look see on your part, and you can gain admittance by flashing your admit-to-lecture card at the man at the gate.

These High School boys are the ones who, in many cases, in a year will desert the familiar High School jersey for that of the Beaches, Indians or Service teams of the O.R.F.U.

There have been three twin bills, Junior and Senior games, at the Stadium so far this fall. The opener was last Thursday, with Riverdale C.I. and Jarvis hooking up in a pair of well played games. The Junior tilt went to Riverdale by the lopsided score of 20-1, while the Senior was much more closely contested, Riverdale winning 1-0. The Riverdale Junior team, in which Ray Wilkinson starred, came up with a tricky lineup formation without huddles that seemed to have Jarvis pretty well baffled. The Senior game, played in a steady downpour of rain, was a hard fought game, based mainly on line plays. The Jarvis team was powerful and heavy and we thought that the Easterners were lucky to pull out with a win. Walter London did great work all around, while Bob Prentice recovered some bad snags, and this combination possibly gave them the win. We liked a boy in the Jarvis line called Robinson, while their kicker, Bill Winemaster, got consistently long punts and ran back the ones he received for good distances.

On Monday last Norvok and Bloor battled it out, coming to a tie at 6-6 in the Junior tussle, while in the Senior bout Bloor topped Norvok 12-10. A boy called Franklin (Bud) Bishop died as a result of head injuries sustained in line play during the Senior game. An investigation is being held concerning the cause of this mishap by Dr. W. E. Brown, and the facts will later be made public.

In an exhibition game between Malvern C.I. and Danforth Tech another casualty occurred, when a fellow from Danforth broke his leg and a heavy doctor's bill piled up. Malvern got together and held a Tea Dance for him (remember those things) and last night Tech followed suit. There is even a rumor that Riverdale is going to hold one also, which we think is a very good thing and should help the fellow concerned and his family a good deal with the medical expenses.

The St. Mike's and Winnipeg series should really make history as they take their High School leagues seriously, and crowds of five and six thousand people turn out per game. A marked contrast with Toronto turnouts.

There's a team down East, the Balm Beach Juveniles, coached by a swell guy called Bill Prentice, who are really hard up for rugby equipment. Prentice, although handicapped by a physical disability, gets the kids really interested in the game and does a good job for our money. If any of you know where equipment could be found, please get in touch with us at the Varsity office.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN . . .

Mac McCutcheon wants it known that the Rugby, Soccer and Volleyball Committee Meetings are changed from Friday to Saturday at 11:45 due to the conflict with the golf matches. All concerned please note.

BRIEF ROUNDUP . . .

We have been informed that the girls of School have come across and intend to enter a baseball team in the coming tournament. This makes the schedule include nine teams. Besides S.P.S. there are teams entered from Meds, St. Mike's, St. Hilda, U.C. and two from P.H.E. and Vic. This is a very good showing and should ensure this sport being fully recognized and taking its place in the athletic calendar.

Betty Rolls informs us that there was a meeting of the Golf Club yesterday at St. Hilda's which yielded the following information. Girls you will need your clubs for next Friday the 13th when the tourney will be run off. It will take place at St. Andrews, teeing off from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m. 'Twill be a gala day, we are assured. So if you visit home sweet home this week-end do return with your trusty niblicks, putters et al.

The Meds girls were so successful in their impromptu showing of the day in their bare feet, and their influence was so great in the final outcome of the men's meet, that today they held a women's track meet. The results were: in the 100-yd. dash—1st, M. I. Wood, I; 2nd, Barbara McCallum, II; 3rd, H. A. Ribey, I. The running broad jump—1st, B. McCallum; 2nd, H. A. Ribey; 3rd, K. E. Stauffer, II. Finally in the high jump event—1st—K. E. Stauffer; 2nd, B. McCallum; 3rd, H. A. Ribey and J. MacPherson, II. This showing proves a little more conclusively than all our words that our colleague Mickey is wrong when he says women's place is not in the athletic world, or words to that effect.

Toronto Rifle Club Begins Revolver Class

The University of Toronto Rifle Association was organized 40 years ago, and offers all male members an opportunity to learn revolver shooting.

Arrangements have been made with Colonel H. H. Madill, C.O. of the C.O.T.C., to have certificates presented to undergraduates passing revolver tests which are supervised by an officer of the C.O.T.C.

There will be an organization meeting on Tuesday, Oct. 10, at 5 p.m.

Abbe Maheux Discusses Life in French Canada

Abbe Arthur Maheux will be the first speaker of the season for the Modern History Club, which is holding its opening meeting at Wymwood next Wednesday evening. Abbe Maheux will talk on French Canada.

Students in Social and Philosophical Studies, Modern History and Modern Languages are especially urged by the Club to attend, although anybody interested in the Club and even those not taking History will be welcome.

FOOTBALL

The Athletic Association has made arrangements with the Ontario Rugby Football Union and the Ontario Service Football League, for the reservation of the usual Student Section in the Bleachers on the days of ordinary scheduled games (not play-offs). University of Toronto students will be admitted on presentation of Registration Cards with the Athletic Portion attached.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

made this especially evident. Two Red Army Songs, orchestrated by Mr. Kostelantetz, are built on the theme of "defense of the Fatherland"—"Moudou-lund found in Knipper's Fourth Symphony and Song of Tachanka by Listov. It is interesting to know that these arrangements were performed by Mr. Kostelantetz on his recent tour to the Persian Gulf. Thousands of Soviet troops listened with the rapt attention of the wanderer hearing the melodies which evoke the image of his native heath.

Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree by Weinberger is a Czech's tribute to the English way of life. The composition, so we are told, was inspired by a film showing the King of England at a young people's summer camp, devoid of any military guards and obviously enjoying himself. Weinberger had never heard bagpipes before and his interpretation forms one of the variations. It forms an eight-bar sentence connected, rather originally, by piano interludes. The Sarabande was exceptionally beautiful, his use of the major ninth sequence with muted strings creating an ethereal impression.

Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture was written in commemoration of Napoleon's defeat at Moscow. Mr. Kostelantetz's rather emotional and rubato interpretation of Tchaikovsky may be justified on the grounds that it opens with a prayer and prayers at present seem to have a low priority. The Russian National Anthem, in the dorian mode, is cleverly woven with the Marseilles. At points they become rather confused but the Russian theme comes out on top, rising to an ear-splitting climax.

The audience brought back the conductor for two encores, Boccherini's Minuet and a rousing march from Tannhauser. It was evident from first to last that Mr. Kostelantetz is completely at home in Toronto and Toronto is completely in love with him. He returns for the two closing concerts of this season.

A prof whom we dare not name because he is a national figure learned recently that the words "Close Cover Before Striking" mean what they say when one of those paper match packets ignited en masse in his hands, leaving him with a badly burned, swollen, and useless thumb.

So the news travelled as news will, and a gossip little clique approached a newcomer with the cry, "Oh, did you head about Dr. Whosis? His thumb's all-swollen!"

"Huh?" stammered the innocent, caught off guard. "Does he hith-hike?"

AN APPLE A DAY Dept. Profs write books, and they take a long time at it. One of them, whose reputation is based on a book that has been dawdling in the manuscript stage for years, was accosted by a bubbling freshie who gushed on about how thrilled she was "Because I heard about your book and I read it and I think it's wonderful!"

Which will be a very good approach a few years hence. WHEN THE BOOK HAS BEEN PUBLISHED.

Then we mustn't forget those younger sisters whose greatest ambition is to enter Varsity. The trouble is that most of them are entirely too flippant.

One particular sister yawned and stretched and made the profound statement that when she came to the campus she was going to shoot for the degree of "S.S.S.B."

"Huh? Whuzzat?" Conscious of having made her effort, she translated archly, "SIT ON STEPS AND SMILE AT BOYS."

While you recover from that we whisk you to a downtown movie house, where three ladies are pulling "Mark Twain" all to bits.

1st female: "I thought the picture was wonderful, but wasn't it a bit too long?"

2nd female: "I liked it. But I'm sure they made it too long."

3rd female: "For heaven's sake, what do you expect? Didn't he live for 75 YEARS?"

Meds freshies these recent days have been trailing little bones on strings down the streets behind them, a practice which we hope does not foreshadow similarly cavalier future treatment of people's inside.

Dragging these osseous bits of stuff along the pavement, they are fit targets for the stares of passers-by, the hoots of Engineers, and the concern of kindly old ladies who wonder if they know that something is dragging.

But there are worse hazards than any of these. One winsome bone-trailer was unhappy evidence the other day, skipping and kicking in fierce hand-to-tooth encounter with a hungry spaniel.

Back to younger sisters again for more light on why we stuffed ours down a sewer years ago.

Back from a kitchen shower for an about-to-be-golden-ringed friend, a co-ed submitted to the usual intense interrogation peculiar to younger sisters.

"Who was there?"; and she enumerated; "What did you have to eat?"; and she described. Then, "What was the kitchen like?"

"Huh?" mused the co-ed, fumbling for the connection.

"Well, if it was a kitchen shower they did serve it in the kitchen, didn't they?"

"Women Haters Wail," said The Varsity over a grim little bulletin about the closing of the men's reading room; and it is beginning to wonder. Because the women's reading room is just chock full of earnest young men over their books. Which may explain the conduct of the freshie who walked in laden with books, then wheeled round out again mumbling something about "DIDN'T KNOW THAT THIS WAS HART HOUSE."

reassembled them." "And what did they use for fuel?" asked the Cat, naively.

"Pepsi-Cola, of course!" . . . as if Champus could be so ignorant!

S.C.M. Weekend Meeting Held At Thistleton

Leaders Discuss Position, Aims and Achievements of World-Wide Organization; 50 Members Attend Meeting

HELD AT WESTAWANIS

Fifty members of the Students' Christian Movement met in conference at Camp Westawanis at Thistleton over the Thanksgiving week-end.

Rev. E. Lute, secretary of the S.C.M. for the University, expressed his pleasure at the success of the conference. The leaders, Gerald Hutchinson, national secretary, Helen Morton, vice-chairman of the World Student Christian Federation, and Mac Ransom, missionary secretary, provided the guidance for the discussion. The general themes developed by the leaders were: "What we need," "What we have," and "What we must do."

Saturday night, Helen Morton stated the position of students in Norway, Holland, France and Canada. Her work with the Federation, world-wide in its scope, provided a background for her observations. She referred to the heroism of students in Norway, who carried information to and from the outside world against Nazi prohibitive measures. Needs of students in foreign countries are being investigated and reported upon by S.C.M. workers in all parts of the world.

Rev. Lute, after showing "What we have," concluded his message by a re-statement of Christ's admonition that "Whosoever shall save his life shall lose it, but whosoever shall lose his life for My sake shall find it."

Pointing out "What we must do," Mac Ransom stated the case for the expansion of Christianity in all the vocations open for university students. He saw the expansion of Christianity "Not in terms geographical, but as a functional development." His injunction regarding the work of the S.C.M. in the university and the community included many interesting recommendations.

A large part of the conference was devoted to Bible study and worship. Students at the conference were a cosmopolitan body. The closing worship was conducted by Rev. Victor Sothian-adhan who has been studying in Toronto for the past three years. He is returning to his home in Colombia, Ceylon, soon.

Vic SCM to Hold Camp-Fire Party

Tonight the S.C.M. of Victoria College is holding an opening camp-fire party. The executive reports that the main purpose of the party is to introduce the S.C.M.'s program and to explain the nature of the movement.

Morley Clark, president of the S.C.M. at Vic, assures everybody that the main feature of the evening will be the entertainment. This will start when all those interested meet on the steps of Victoria at 7:15 p.m.

A hike to Reservoir Park followed by songs around the camp-fire, games, skits, and other entertainment, plus food, are promised for further enjoyment.

The S.C.M. is hoping to have a full turnout and that each will bring his ten cent fee.

NOTICE

Every University student is asked to make sure, at once, that his correct Toronto address and telephone number are entered upon his registration card in the office of the University Registrar, Simcoe Hall, and in the office of his College Registrar or Faculty Secretary. The University Directory is now being prepared for the press and it is of the greatest importance that all addresses and telephone numbers be correct.

U.C. Lit. Elections First Meeting Held By Ukrainian Club

A meeting to fill offices of the U.C. Literary and Athletic Association was held Friday afternoon in the Junior Common Room. The few who turned out, not being otherwise occupied in drill or athletic pursuits, were welcomed by President Bob Bell, who stressed the serious responsibility involved in accepting one of these positions and urged the audience to consider as their candidates men who would be aware of this fact.

The nominations were as follows: U.C. Lit. treasurer—John Turchin, Bob Marjoribanks; first year president—Alan Foster, Glen Dickie, William Meyers; first year athletic representative—Sydney Rossin, Ed Corrah; first year secretary—treasurer—E. R. McLean, G. N. Eldridge, M. Stitt.

Nominees were selected by members of their particular year only, but will be elected by the College as a whole. In the absence of Mike Bremner, last year's freshman president, M. Michasiw was acclaimed second year president.

No formal campaigning has been arranged owing to the short length of time remaining before the election, but that precludes no impromptu soap-box harangues that may take place on the campus up until 11:30 a.m. tomorrow when the voting begins in the Rotunda. Results will be announced.

The opening meeting of the Ukrainian Students' Club of the University of Toronto was held in Newman Hall Sunday afternoon. After introducing the new members, Paul Ocheta, III, Dentist, president of the club, read the official constitution to club members.

John Kucherepa, VI Meds, gave a short history of the club. Plans for the future activities of the year were outlined and discussed.

The U.S.C. is an undergraduate club whose membership includes students of Ukrainian birth or descent. As yet it has no alumni, but is growing rapidly. With an active membership of 45 last year, "we can expect a much greater development in the future since the attendance of Ukrainian students in the University has grown from ten in 1940 to approximately 140 at present," said John Kucherepa. In 1940 the club was accepted as a student organization. Its purposes were to help young Ukrainians choose future professions and to gain the good will for all Ukrainian people in Toronto.

One of the aspects discussed at the meeting was the existence of the Ukrainian Students' Loan Fund. The fund, amounting to about $1,000 at the present time, is at the disposal of club members in need of help with university fees. The club hopes that the fund will become a scholarship for Ukrainian students in the future.

V.C.F. Guest Tells Of Experiences

Mrs. H. M. Kilborne, recently repatriated from Japan, was guest speaker at the V.C.F. meeting in the Anatomy Building Friday afternoon. Missionaries in the Orient for 29 years, Mrs. Kilborne and her husband arrived home last December after seven months in a Japanese internment camp.

Opening her talk Mrs. Kilborne told of the policy of the Oriental Missionary Society, which is to train the natives to carry the Gospel into the interior. After the founding of a bible institute for this purpose in Japan, 800 churches sprang up as a result. Even in these war years two bible institutions are still in operation in Japan. Mrs. Kilborne considers that "It is almost a religious war over there."

After the announcement of Pearl Harbor, Dec. 7, the Kilbornes were advised to leave the district of Shanghai and escape to the French Concession. Crowded into a small Ford car, with passports well hidden, 11 people drew near the first of the three barriers, saw the indignities suffered by those who were going before them and feared for their own safety. But to their surprise they were not challenged by the sentries but were allowed to go past. "Truly a miracle," declared Mrs. Kilborne.

Later, the Kilbornes were placed in an internment camp with 1,052 others. Malaria was prevalent. Their meals consisted of fish and rice. Otherwise life was not too difficult. Then 1,500 prisoners were repatriated to America. Three hundred and forty-three went from this internment camp.

The Kilbornes were among the fortunate. Their journey home, lasting 72 days, took them by way of the South Sea Islands to India, where they boarded the mercy ship "Gripsholm," bound for New York. Among the repatriates were 127 Canadians from Hong Kong. They were in a pitiable condition, mainly because of the lack of food at Hong Kong. Even Japanese ships had not been able to get the food through.

After Germany's fall, Mrs. Kilborne thinks it will take at least a year to defeat Japan. "Japan has one of the finest fleets and has harbours well hidden along the coast of Korea," she stated.

Freshman Dance Tomorrow Night

Tickets will go on sale today and tomorrow at 10 a.m. in the U.C. Rotunda for the U.C. First Year "Come Single, Go Home Double" Dance to be held on Wednesday, Oct. 11 in the Women's Union.

As there are only a limited number of tickets on sale, students are asked to get their tickets early. The admission fee is 50 cents for U.C. students and 75 cents for all other faculties. Registration cards must be shown before the ticket is bought.

There will be an orchestra at the dance and the results of the first year for both men and women will be announced.

The date for the First Year Dance has been exchanged with the date set for the Soph-Frosh banquet. The latter will be held on Thursday, Oct. 19 at the King Edward Hotel.

Cadets Recommended as P.O.M. May Proceed to Advanced Training at the Discretion of Canadian Army Authorities

DISCUSS C. O. T. C. CREDITS

"Credits for C.O.T.C. training given to recruits on joining the Canadian Army (Active) depend upon the need for reinforcement officers, and upon the ability of the recruit," stated Major H. C. H. Miller, Adjutant of the First Battalion, C.O.T.C.

There is "nothing automatic" about a C.O.T.C. cadet proceeding directly to an Advanced Training Centre. However, regulations provide that a C.O.T.C. cadet may be recommended as a potential officer candidate. In this event, there is some short-circuiting of the normal procedure on enlistment.

In the case of Science and Engineering graduates, who are recommended as P.O.M. by the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel Board which visits the University annually, the candidates are enlisted into the army and given the status of Cadet.

These cadets then proceed to an Advanced Training Centre of the Arm concerned (R.C.E., R.C. Sigs., or R.C.E. M.E.), where they are given a short intensive course prior to entering O.T.C. at Brockville.

Last spring a sudden need developed for a few infantry reinforcement officers. A special course was held, open only to C.O.T.C. men, which fitted the men for the course at Brockville. However, there is no assurance whatsoever that a similar need will develop this year.

Under the present set-up, it is entirely up to the Army officials whether a recruit from the C.O.T.C. proceeds to an Advanced or Basic Training Centre.

Lost and Found Office Serves U.C.

An obscure little office at one side of U.C. Rotunda will sooner or later be discovered by everyone who takes lectures at University College. Its importance, nevertheless, is quite out of proportion with its size, for there, if anywhere, beats the heart of U.C. This easily overlooked cubby-hole is generally used as a Lost-and-Found Office and is run by a capable though diffident person named Mr. A. G. Keel, who greets everyone with a resigned but cheery, "Well, what have you lost today?"

Mr. Keel not only keeps track of all mislaid articles, but is also temporarily conducting a post office in this rabbit-warren. It seems that, away before the days of Simcoe Hall this office served as post office for the entire campus. Mr. Keel is kept quite busy delivering letters to the faculty, quoting after supplies for the evening classes, taking care of apparatus for the Fine Art department and implements used for the general upkeep of the building. All this is in addition to conducting a Lost-and-Found for forgetful students.

The little office fairly overflows with assorted paraphernalia such as oil cans, rakes, movie projectors, leaflets, blotters, stockings, gloves, pens, umbrellas, compasses, lipsticks, skirts, lunches and even a pair of pyjamas—loud ones. Mr. Keel is quite convinced that every possible article that is portable has at one time or another been lost in U.C.

After a period of time, unclaimed articles of apparel such as gloves, sweaters, jackets and shoes are given to the University Settlement where they are distributed to the needy.

Trinity Divinity Student Is New S.A.C. President

"I feel very honoured at being elected president of the S.A.C.," Edward Downey told The Varsity or hearing of his appointment. "But," he added, "I still feel rather like an undergraduate and I'm still interested in undergraduate activities. Although I never was on the S.A.C. as an undergraduate, I appreciate the importance of the place it holds on the campus."

The results of the election were announced at the close of the S.A.C. meeting held Friday afternoon.

Mr. Downey is in his second year Divinity at Trinity College. He comes from a farm about 20 miles from Ottawa. He attended a country school near there and then went to Nepean High School in Westboro. Between his Junior and Senior Matriculation he spent five years on a farm and almost decided to make farming his occupation. In preparation for this he took a short course at Kemptville Agricultural College.

He came to Varsity in 1940 and took his B.A. in Pass Arts. "I'm glad that I had those five years away from school before I came to college," he explained, "but it was difficult to start to study again. . . . I had scarcely looked at a book during that time."

While an undergraduate Mr. Downey was a member of the Hart House Music Committee and a member of the Trinity College Athletic Executive for two years. He was also on the Trinity Board of Stewards for three years.

This year Mr. Downey holds the position of Vice-Chairman and Head of the Discipline Committee for Trinity College, and he has been made "Head of College," an appointment which is made by the Provost and the Dean. He is President of the Theological Society of Trinity College, a member of the Conversat Committee, and Opposition Council for Trinity College Literary Institute.

"The first day I was back I had eight meetings and they're still coming," he said, commenting on his different offices.

Clothes Make The Man

J. B. Bickersteth, Warden of Hart House, who has recently returned from England where he served on the personal staff of General McNaughton, and then as Director of Army Education at the War Office, has raised his voice in protest against the appalling decline in taste in the choice of clothes of the male undergraduates of this University, since his departure for the other side, four years ago. Whether it is due to the infiltrating influence from the campuses south of the border or to the fact that the students coming to University in recent years are in less affluent financial circumstances than their predecessors, it is true—that sweaters, windbreakers, displayed suspenders, and open shirt collars have become more prevalent on the campus in the past few years. Speaking in Convocation Hall before the President's address at the opening of term, Mr. Bickersteth urged all men making use of Hart House and dining in the Great Hall to wear ties and suit coats, if at all possible.

It is true, especially since the increase of Government bursaries and loans, that many men coming to the University are not in the position to have a suit for everyday wear, the one suit they own being reserved for Sundays and the occasional evening's dancing. However, there are a vast number of undergraduates who consider that dressing sloppily is the smart thing to do; men who do not care particularly about their appearance, and are selfish enough not to be concerned whether it offends good taste and is ugly in the sight of other people.

It was to these men in particular at whom the Warden's remarks were aimed, and rightly so. To the other men who claim not to be able to afford an extra suit, a lesson in simple economy would be of great value. While a sweater is cheaper than a jacket it is decidedly not as serviceable and lasts for a much shorter time. Also, their poor taste in wearing sweaters decreases their prestige in the eyes of others.

The decline in taste in clothes is not limited to this campus but is a general attitude in the country at the present time. It is unfortunate in these days of full employment and high wages, that people do not take the opportunity to dress well.

Receptions

Since the beginning of the war, much space has been devoted in the editorial columns of this and other campus newspapers, and much discussion has taken place, on the subject of initiations. On the advice of the heads of the University, students on this campus have almost completely abolished the time-honored tradition in the larger colleges and faculties, in keeping with the war-time policy of retiring from public notice.

In the place of the initiation, has come the reception. In a recent editorial, The Varsity maintained that hazing and hoodlunism were not only dangerous and "sadistic," but had no place in an institution of higher learning. However, it is in the college tradition that the men and women of the first year be made to feel humble not so much to make them respect the students in the upper years, as to cause them to realize the greatness of the institution of which they are becoming a part. That elusive element, spirit, is thus developed and maintained. The reception precisely fulfills these functions. A solemn ceremony, following upon a day or two of harmless humiliation usually brought about by a distinctive apparel, has a far greater psychological effect in impressing the freshman mind than all the wild hazings and elaborate initiations ever devised.

History was ever thus—the old gives way to the new. The classical initiation lives only in the past, the reception has come to stay. This is an evidence of the growing maturity of university minds, the result of sane and measured deliberation.

Introducing The University

Tomorrow The Varsity is embarking upon a step which to our knowledge has not been attempted before in the annals of the Undergraduate Newspaper. We are devoting the major part of tomorrow's paper to a general survey of the campus, its buildings, its history, its extracurricular activities and organizations, its publications and its administration. The purpose of all this information, most of which is familiar to the students who have been here for a year or more, is to give the freshman class an easier insight into campus life than they could achieve by stumbling upon its facts by trial and error.

In past years the policy of The Varsity has been to present daily features for some time each fall on various aspects of campus life. This year we shall attempt to produce all the "Know Your University" stories coherently by including them in a single issue. Although there may be facts in it which are as yet unknown to some of the upper classmen, our primary aim is to assist the acclimatization of the latest group of students to arrive on the campus, the class of 4T8.

May We Introduce Also

Today we have the pleasure of introducing to you the Feature Department, which is responsible for the Champus Cat, the Hither and Yon column, the movie reviews, and numerous feature stories of all kinds, ranging from the life and thoughts of Nellie the campus horse (see last year's files), to the repairing of the library roof. If the frequently heard statement that the average student reads only the Champus Cat and the occasional Hither and Yon, has any degree of truth in it, the debt we all owe to the feature department is very great indeed.

This year's Feature Editor is a versatile young man of 21 who ordinarily goes by the name of Hugh Kenner, but is perhaps just as widely known by Champus Cat readers as "Woo." In his fourth year of English Language and Literature, Hugh finds time, in spite of his connection with The Varsity, which began in his second year as staff photographer, to be Editor of Torontonensis. He is a Reuben Wells Leonard scholarship winner, and has successfully retained it throughout his undergraduate career.

Hugh was for three years a columnist in one of the newspapers published in his home town, the Peterborough Review, and he is planning a writing career, though not in the newspaper world. His magnum opus to date is the 100-page survey, "Education in French Canada," which won the Rabbi Isserman prize.

Anne Nicholson, Assistant Feature Editor, is in third year Pass Arts. She has been on The Varsity staff for three years, on news reporting, featuring writing, copydesk and the masthead. Journalism is what she plans as a career. Born in New Brunswick, she has lived a cosmopolitan life, having resided in such distant places as St. John, Winnipeg, and Seattle, Wash.

The Land Is OURS

Local's Theatre

As a rule is not our policy to review motion pictures, but we feel that "Dragon Seed" is of sufficient importance as an artistic contribution to merit some comment.

The screen play, inspired by the novel of Pearl Buck, is a drama that strikes at the heart's core. Certainly there is much in it that resembles "The Good Earth," but its far from being a poor imitation of an earlier box-office success.

The conflict with Japan hits at the roots of a peace-loving Chinese family, "neither too rich nor too poor... both wise and foolish." These simple tillers of the soil are first made aware of the peril which

The Joints Are Gaffed!!

President Exposes Fraud: Shinamagoochie Tear-Down Is Fastest in History of Show Business; President Is "With It"

MOFFIS UNPERTURBED

"I object," said the very irate president of the U. of T. "The joint was gaffed." And it was this epochal statement that concluded the very long engagement of Shinamagoochie Shows, World's Finest. (If you don't believe it, read the signs on the box cars.)

It all started a little while back when the few ambitious students who attend their 8:30's arrived on the front campus in time to see the last few stakes being driven in alongside a line of Midway tents. Before the students could reach the sanctuary of their lecture rooms the sticks had elbowed them into their clutches and the bank-rolls began to thin out.

Planted in the main corridors of all the main buildings, sticks were seen stopping passersby with shouts of, "Say there, pardon me, wanna talk to you, no money, on your ticket, just wanna show you the game, the foist try's free. See what you can win." And so, the gullible and greedy marks went down for the count, financially speaking.

Mr. Shinamagoochie stated in an interview in the "Varsiboard" that attendance figures topped last year by fully ten per cent and that the show grossed almost as much as it had lost when it hired a crew of Ethics students for the "B" circuit down in West Virginia back in '33, or was it '32—no it was '34.

Everything was going well until this one particular morning when the catastrophe occurred; the wheels were clicking, the grind-artists were bawling for the "ten-in-one," enthusiastic winners were shouting Bingo, when all of a sudden the students saw an ominous shadow approach, and they assumed a dead silence—the President of the University was walking down the midway arm in arm with Shinamagoochie.

As the affectionate pair roamed into earshot, the voice of Shinamagoochie could be heard saying "... and then, after you hook a clothespin with a ring, you choose a number; you can't go wrong, 'cause if the number's odd, you get another chance and if it's even, you have to pay a dollar for another try. But the more money you spend, the bigger the prize you can try for. Now how about giving it a try, eh? The first one is free."

By this time they were in front of the flashy tent, and the President took a ring; with unerring aim he encircled a pin. The carnal removed the pin, waved it in front of the Pres, and said, "See, you win. Now if you had only paid a dollar you'd have gotten a prize. Now give it another try."

The large mob of students had closed in to watch their President and to coach him along. "C'mon boss, show them the old eye," they all bellowed enthusiastically.

"Just watch me," he muttered determinedly. Ring after ring flew from his unerring hand. Bill after bill was stripped by the smooth-talking con-man from the mark's bank-roll. Just as he was about to take the last bill, in the middle of one of his anecdotes recited to keep the customer's mind off the game, our President, in his most thunderous voice, bellowed "Stop!" "Ha," he continued, "you think I'm just another sucker to be fleeced? Why man, you're not fit to be an agent. I mind the time back in '27 when I ran a muscle joint for Oskosh Shows in Louisiana. We were smooth in those days. But not you. So get out. My students are here for an education, and when I want them to get carnival experience, I want them taught by men better than themselves. A fine carnal you are. All the time you were conning

Varsity Entries Increase At St. Andrew's Golf Club

Mae Gibson of Dents walked off with the honours in the Varsity Golf Tournament on Friday at the St. Andrews Club with a card of 79. He shot a smooth game throughout to deserve the trophy.

S.P.S.'s Simonson and Stee placed second and third with scores of 81 and 83 respectively, boosting their team total considerably. Bain of U.C. snatched fourth place with an 85.

Entries reached a new high this year as 118 were recorded, eight more than last semester. There was no rain, although it threatened all day, but a wind approaching gale velocity blew steadily and made the driving from some tees rather tough. This possibly accounts for the increase in the scores this year. Last year's winner, Gord Ball, carded at 75 and several others were in the high seventies.

S.P.S., always strong in the golf department, again took the team championship. Their low gross of 338, made up of Simonson's 81, an 83 by Stee, and 87's by both Orr and Waeker, spotted Dents 15 strokes. Dents 355 was accumulated by means of Gibson's 79, Kennedy's 86, a 90 by Marshall and a 98 by Sebben. Meds placed third with 359. Haywood shot an 87, Paul an 88, Allore 91 and Strathearn a 93 to amass this total. Only Gibson's hot 79 kept them out of the second berth.

Trinity were fourth with 376 from scores of 86 by Burgess, 93 by Fleming, 98 by Higgenbotham and a 99 of McLaughlin's. U.C. and St. Mike's tied for fifth at 377. U.C. used Bain's 85, Wolman's and Garner's 96 and Fox's 100 to make up their total, while St. Mike's had Halpin with an 89, Henderson an 87, Weber's 90 and O'Brien's 108.

threatens them by Jade, the unconventional daughter-in-law, who has attended a progressive student gathering. There follows not only the outer conflict between Chinese and Japanese, traitors and patriots; but a deeper, inner conflict between old ideas and new, the desire for peace—for peace is good—and the seeming need to destroy.

"Dragon Seed" is an artistic production. The acting of Katharine Hepburn and the supporting cast is extremely convincing when one considers the difficulties which naturally arise out of the plot. The language is of rare beauty, full of melodious inflections, and is as close an approximation of the Chinese as can be obtained in English. There is art, too, in the interweaving of light and shadow, and scenes of quiet domesticity contrast sharply with those of brutality and bestiality.

"Dragon Seed" is an inspiring story of courage, and determination, and enduring faith in an ideal.

He turned on his heel, muttering phrases about their amateurishness. Next morning, all that was left of Shinamagoochie Shows on the campus was a few stake-holes on the lawns, some taffy-apple sticks, and the maggot-riddled body of a mark who had actually tried to leave, while winning.

Life goes on in its smooth channel, now that the President has proved his mettle, though each spring, after the exams have taken their toll, we suspect that he begins to make his plans for the old "K" circuit, and "get with it" once more.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasiv

BITS OF THIS AND THAT . . .

On glancing over the holiday sporting picture, one finds that a great variety was dished up for the ardent fan. Four football games were featured at the Stadium together with the golf tournament at St. Andrews, the Castiloux-Peralta fight at the Gardens and the races at Dufferin. Quite a week-end. . . . To the well informed, the victory of Gibson of Dents came as no surprise when this dark-horse posted his winning score of 79 over the 18-hole trek. According to the grapevine, the winner is a pro from California where he taught the finer points of the game for a number of years. It was a pleasant surprise to see School's monopoly finally broken in the individual honors. The School team of Simonson, Stee, Orr and Waeker had little difficulty in copping the faculty award. . . . The tennis tourney continues at St. Hilda's. The completion of the third round will be reached some time today. A feature match is scheduled for this afternoon when freshman Mort Grass takes on Joe Feyerer, seeded number one, at one o'clock. Up to this point, no major upsets have been recorded as favored players have found the pickings rather soft with very few exceptions. The doubles finally got under way in Friday and here again excitement did not reach the heated pitch. . . . The Beaches team look more and more like the Blues of old with every game and the six Varsity performers on the squad help no little. . . . The return of Ross McKelvey from the university at Auburn, Alabama, gives the Beaches another experienced back. Certain government regulations brought about the return of McKelvey from the southern college. While there he created quite a sensation while trying out with the football squad. . . . Myers and Cole, Beach halves, were all-stars in both football and basketball, which should be welcome news to the supporters of the basketball team, as both are Varsity freshmen. . . . The recent death of Franklin (Bud) Bishop of Northern Vocational as the result of injuries sustained in the Bloor-Norvoo game may bring repercussions. The great fathers who have always frowned upon sport, have asked for an investigation of another high school game where three stars were injured within the space of a few moments. The supporting clause of their argument is the fact that the three players were on the winning team. As soon as the men were carried off the gridiron, the opposition assumed the lead and emerged victorious. This may or may not be the result of unnecessary roughing, but it does give these factions a basis for their argument. . . . This time of the year brings the annual cry from the Athletic Office for more and more referees. The scarcity of these little men in white is not accounted for but the last few years have brought a steady decline. Potential referees will be examined for their ability at football, soccer and the other sports. The remuneration offered makes it well worth the time and work expended. The list may be signed at the Athletic Office, and the sooner the better. . . . In a recent column we stated that admission to the high school rugby fixtures could be obtained merely by flashing your admit-to-lecture card. The following day brought a curt little note saying this is not the case. Thus our usually reliable informant fell down. Tickets for these games may be obtained from high school students at a very nominal price. . . . Hec Phillips, the dean of Varsity track stars, has posted another sign for freshmen track enthusiasts. The junior track meet takes place on Thursday. Eligible are athletes who have yet to win their first University event. Freshmen must obtain medicals before they are allowed to participate, but these may be rushed through if the Athletic Office is consulted. Other years are allowed to perform on their former year's category.

THE Automotive Industry BEGAN TO EXPAND

By 1923 the automobile had passed from the luxury stage and was entering the era of rapid expansion and mass production. A great new industry had come into being.

The men who managed Canada's Nickel mines and plants were determined to build a greater Nickel industry. In the automobile, subject at that time to frequent breakdowns, they foresaw new markets for Canadian Nickel to replace the war demand which had ceased in 1918.

So the Canadian Nickel industry gave its full co-operation to automotive engineers who were pioneering the search for stronger, tougher, more dependable materials.

Cars became stronger, safer, more reliable, as Nickel alloys were used for vital parts. It was not many years before the automotive industry became the world's largest user of Canadian Nickel, and the output of Nickel exceeded its wartime peak.

Today Canadian Nickel is again devoted to war purposes and again the industry looks to the future with confidence. Plans are ready to develop and expand old and new peacetime markets, so that the Nickel industry may continue, through its own initiative and enterprise, to make still greater contributions to Canada's welfare.

University Is Managed By Various Officials

Functions of University Bodies Explained in 23-Page Booklet Issued By S.A.C. Office in Hart House

CONSTITUTION DEFINED

The management of the University of Toronto has a definite system in the handling of the property, finances, and academic administration of the University, which is entrusted to the Board of Governors, the Senate, Convocation, the Faculty Councils, the Council of University College and the Caput.

The constitution, powers, and function of the University are defined in the University Act of 1906. A 23-page booklet, "The University of Toronto, A Brief Sketch of Its History and Organization," compiled by the registrar and published in 1932, contains a short explanation in four pages of the constitution and administration of the University. The following is a condensed version of the functions of the various bodies whose authority are exercised subject to supervision and control of the Crown.

The Board of Governors consists of the Chancellor, the President, and 22 appointed members of whom eight may be nominated by the Alumni Federation. By-laws, rules and regulations regarding the investment of the funds are made by the Board, in addition to the selling and leasing of University properties, the letting of contracts, the appointment and removal of all officers, clerks, assistants, and servants of the University, the rate of salaries to be paid to the staff and officers, the fees to be paid by students, the annual appropriations and transmission of other business.

The Senate consists of ex-officio members, representative faculty members, appointed members representing each federated university and college, the Law Society of Upper Canada and the Ontario Medical Council and other affiliated institutions, and 47 members representing graduates in the various faculties and colleges of the University. The ex-officio members are the Chancellor, the Chairman of the Board of Governors, the President of the University, the Principal of University College, the president or other head of each

Frosh Fish For Fun In Campus Initiations

By Leggie Klaus

Initiation of the Frosh this year took a more subtle form than in previous years when brawn rather than brains was exercised. Anything that made a freshman look like a refugee from a psychopathic ward was eagerly employed.

For instance, what could be more astonishing than to see a serious bespectacled freshman, sitting cross-legged in front of a manhole, fishing earnestly? Equally strange was the spectacle of a number of widely attired O.T.'s climbing onto a street-car, complete with pails and brushes, and proceed to scrub it industriously from one end to the other. The T.T.C. profited on that one.

Along the same line was the sight of a freshie, in all her natural beauty—no make-up—scrubbing the wide front steps of U.C.—with a toothbrush! The same afternoon, if you had sauntered over to Mac's for the usual reason, you would have been enthusiastically greeted by a pig-tailed person who shook your hand and hoped 'you'd have fun in this Haven of Halfwits.' At this point you weren't so sure. After slinking off to a distant booth you were as likely as not to be fervently proposed to by any number of harried and bedraggled frosh. Drinking cokes with babies' nipples, shouting Toilet Oike in the Med building (there should be no scarcity of "stiffs" in the course now), conga-ing around the campus were all the order of the day. S.P.S. used no such finesse at their initiation, however, on Friday afternoon. Paddles, charcoal, shoe-polish and lip-stick were all much in evidence. For first-hand information we cornered a School freshman and made him give us the following impressions and play by play description of the initiation:

Our Official Welcome into S.P.S. By a tired freshman, John Willie, 4T8 Since we first filled out the form supplied by the Registrar, we, the frosh, have been anticipating initiation with mixed feeling. The ancient skoolmen, meaning those creatures with the peculiar swagger, the Sophs, told us in no mean language of the grim things in store. "You'll be lucky to live through it," they grinned maliciously. Heads shorn of their lovely locks, they said, and the bald pate painted a bright crimson would be a common sight around the little red schoolhouse.

Only by some intervention of fate—or the staff—could we hope to evade the

S.C.M. to Discuss Student Problems

The Student Christian Movement in the University of Toronto is one of the 15 units which comprise the Student Christian Movement of Canada.

Known to undergrads as the S.C.M., the organization is a fellowship of students based on the conviction that in Jesus Christ is to be found the supreme revelation of God and the means to a full realization of life. All students in the University are eligible for membership in the group.

The program of the movement is based on study groups planned to meet current student problems, on such subjects as social and political questions, the Church, co-operatives and Christian action.

Speakers address meetings for the students and there is a weekly noon-hour series in Hart House for the men and occasional five o'clock meetings for the entire student body.

The movement provides social activities for the member in the form of hikes, teas, social hours and supper parties. Open House is held regularly to give the members of the campus study groups a chance to meet each other.

Every other Sunday evening during the session, University services will be held in Trinity Chapel.

If interested in the movement, students should introduce themselves to the president of the S.C.M. in their college or to the general secretaries in the S.C.M. office in Hart House.

Newmanites Host To Convention

Newmanites from Canadian provincial universities will assemble for their annual convention at Newman Hall and St. Thomas Aquinas Chapel, 89 St. George St., Friday, Oct. 27, through Sunday, Oct. 29. Toronto Newmanites at the University of Toronto are playing hosts and hostesses to the visiting delegates, and are planning an elaborate reception for their guests.

Heading the guest speakers will be the Hon. S. L. Saint Laurent, K.C., Minister of Justice at Ottawa, who will deliver the principal address at the banquet to be held in the Crystal Ballroom of the King Edward Hotel.

Father H. W. Daly, S.J., will lead the panel discussion on "The Youth Apostolate."

Initiations In Swing On Canadian Campus

All over Canada freshman enrolment has reportedly skyrocketed to an all-time high, given an added impetus by returning servicemen. Initiation is in full swing from Halifax to Vancouver.

With a record-breaking enrolment of 2,700 student, 771 of which formed the largest freshman class in its history, the University of British Columbia held a Club Week for Frosh, when special meetings were held for the newcomers. With the traditional Frosh snake-dance wending its way into town, interrupting a Boyer love-scene in one of the local cinemas, and unwary frosh being dunked in the library lily-pool, U.B.C. sophs were living up to true sophomore standards.

The University of Manitoba is going all-out with monster track meets and dances for the freshies. October 12 is set aside as "Freshman Day," with an extensive program. Classes are to be cancelled and a freshman king will be chosen as well as the usual freshie queen. "Beauty of physique and regal carriage" are to be the main requirements of the male sovereign.

Many Scholarships Open to Students

College has been rhymed with knowledge more than once before now and one look at the back pages of any calendar will prove this still holds good. Scholarships are not exactly to be had for the asking but those who are prepared to distinguish themselves next May or in any other May of their college career will find that they have plenty of scope for their endeavours.

The University as a whole offers scholarships in practically every course, in every year from first to fourth and after that if you happen to be sticking around as a post-grad. These scholarships start in figures in the lower brackets and keep moving up and up. Before the war the brackets went up high enough to include post-graduate work at overseas universities. These will be available again when the war has ended.

In addition to what the University supplies, the individual colleges and faculties, such as Engineering, have long lists of available scholarships that are an inspiration. No matter what the course, you will find that there is some good reason for staying home at nights with your nose in a book or a lab report or bating out an essay.

Honour Awards are another thing which merit more than a passing glance. These are offered for those who make an outstanding contribution to the life of the University, usually in an executive capacity. They take the shape of a gold key and an Honour Certificate presented at Convocation. The key is an award to be worn with pride.

Smelly Socks? See Bill Smith

"No housewife ever goes through the volume of laundry weekly that we go through in a day," said William John Smith, head of the Locker Room Laundry in Hart House.

He is well authorized to speak thus, for foamy water runs in the veins of the Smith family. Mr. Smith has been in the laundry business for 52 years, and his father was a deep-sea sailor before him in the days of the sailing ships.

Sanitation is stressed above anything in the laundering processes used to clean the towels, shorts, and other athletic paraphernalia turned in daily. For towels alone, the procedure involves soaking, whirling, and pummeling in (Continued on page 4)

I.D.U. to Organize For Second Season

This term begins the second season in the life of the Inter-Faculty Debating Union, a society organized to enable the students of different faculties to meet by debating, one college against another.

Two years ago the defunct Women's Inter-Faculty Debating Union was brought to life, and in addition to the women representatives from the four Arts college, a male member was invited from St. Michael's, Trinity, Victoria and U.C. The society was then renamed the Inter-Faculty Debating Union.

The representatives, a woman from St. Hilda's and Loretto, a man from St. Michael's and Trinity and a man and a woman from Victoria and U.C., are elected annually by the executives of their respective debating parliaments, the I.D.U. having no say in the nominations. It is possible for a debating parliament to elect the same representative for two consecutive years but it is not usually done. The I.D.U. have found that after one year a member usually "runs out of ideas." From these representatives an executive is chosen to hold office for one year.

The details of the executives' work vary from year to year, but its main task is to see that four, possibly six, interfaculty debates are held each year. They suggest the topics, choose the debaters and arrange that at least one debate be held in each of the member colleges. There are no set I.D.U. rules for debate procedure; instead they adopt for the evening the procedure of the parliament of which is host.

Most of this year's plans are tentative as this year's executive has not yet been chosen. While the possibility of inter-university debating has been discussed, there is no official confirmation.

SAC Enlightens Freshie On Its Constitution

Once there was the Freshie who had to secure from the S.A.C. office an autographed copy of The Varsity for her merciless Soph.

"Where is the S.A.C. office," she gasped out to the first pair of unshined loafers in sight, "n what is it anyway?" "Well," said Clib (pronounced glib) softly, for she was a Soph who had not yet gone 'active.' "It's in Hart House, 'n you can't go there. It's for MEN."

"But I gotta get Missyweeparkies" (all in one breath) autograph at the C.A.S. or whatever it is." "Have it your own way," jibed Clib not so softly this time, "just dash in the front door past the porter, turn right and open the first closed door on your left. Now you are in the S.A.C. office, so walk up to the desk nearest the door and ask for a copy of the S.A.C. constitution. By this time you have a pale blue booklet and on the front of it you see the first and original translation of the letters S.A.C.—Students' Administrative Council."

Sure, but how, when and why was this body of students formed, the still bewildered Freshie wants to know. Let's open the booklet to the first page and read its history, urged Clib and starts to read:

"Apparently the first effort to bring together representatives of all colleges and faculties of the University in order to carry on combined undergraduate activities other than athletics, was made in 1901 when the Students' Union of the University was established." Further down the page we read that by 1913

Actual Opening of University Delayed Until 1843 Due to Disputes Between Various Educationalists

BAGOT OFFICIATES

John Graves Simcoe, first Governor of the province of Upper Canada, may properly be called the Father of the University of Toronto. During his term of office he set aside Crown Lands whose revenue was to be used to endow educational institutions within the province. These lands were not actually used for this purpose until the year after his departure in 1797, when 25,000 acres of Crown Lands were granted to the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of Upper Canada to endow a University at York.

No further steps were taken toward building the University until 1820, when the Rev. John Strachan, then Archbishop of York (Toronto), made a trip to England for the purpose of affecting the exchange of the lands then set aside for the endowment of the University to those with a more immediate cash value. This accomplished, he obtained also the promise of a Royal Charter which would add dignity and character to the proposed institution. This Charter was finally granted by King George IV, on March 15, 1827.

In spite of the possession of a charter and a liberal endowment, the actual opening of the University was delayed until 1843 by what seemed to be then irreconcilable disputes between Anglican and non-Anglican educationalists. In the midst of a population composed largely of Methodists and Presbyterians the University's charter vested its control entirely in the Church of England.

In the face of concerted opposition a council of King's College was formed, which in 1828 bought the 168 acres of park land on which the present University buildings stand. Later administration (Continued on page 4)

the Students' Administrative Council took over the publishing of The Varsity and Torontoensis.

What about the women at the University, were they included in these first organizations, the Freshie wonders also as she glances down the next page. Here it is. In 1916 the women of the University formed a similar and separate organization. By 1919, however, the Women's Students' Administrative Council joined the men's organization and after various changes the name of the present organization become The Students' Council.

Now that I've read about what the S.A.C. used to do, I wonder what it does now, our Freshie persisted and continued to turn to Clib.

"You ask them, I answer them if I can," muttered Clib not quite so glibly.

Since this student administrative body was formed its activities have gradually included more than was thought possible when its need was first recognized. In addition to the publishing of The Varsity, Torontoensis and the Students' Handbook the constitution calls for the developing and maintaining of the University Orchestra. The S.A.C. is responsible for the operation of an Undergraduate Loan Fund, an Employment Bureau, a Rooming Service, and the sale of official University blazers, crests and pins.

Furthermore the Council represents the student viewpoint to the University authorities and is in a position to lead in matters requiring action on the part of the student body.

Dedication

Today's Varsity is dedicated to that ever increasing class—the freshmen. It is our contention that a great percentage of students attend University without realizing the vast administrative, extracurricular and academic principles which lie behind these broad facades of learning.

We are attempting to present the various aspects of university life open to practically every student. Undoubtedly there are additional facts which we should like to be able to bring to the fore; unfortunately they show no promise of materializing in our time.

Many readers are probably aware of the need of official guidance concerning the selection of a course of study. The women, if not now, will soon feel the necessity of such an opportune gathering place as Hart House. Others may find that the sharp division between fellow students fostered by sectarian college classes, will tend to localize activities as well as thought. Also among the needs of the University is specific education and uniformity in the teaching of certain subjects in order to abolish racial and religious prejudice.

We suggest such failings in order to stimulate the thought of the class of 478. To accept the status quo without question is to smother initiative as well as to starve original and individual thought.

There was a time at this University when students went on strike. There was another incident when the beadle was locked between the gates and the large doors of U.C. while irate students pelted him with sundry objects. Such demonstrations symbolized the initiative and firm opinions of the student body. The revolt in those days was mainly one against the power of vested authority.

We do not condone such extreme measures. However, if the student body becomes centrally controlled, it becomes stereotyped. It is the freshman class this year which will play a great role in post-war planning and rehabilitation. Those graduating in 478 and their successors must guard against being a part of such a stereotyped society.

Discrimination

Included in this issue is a resume of extra-curricular activities accessible to any undergraduate on this campus. Too often do students come to university with potentialities which are never realized. The bewilderment concomitant with first year usually lapses into inertia in the latter years. Such a lapse may possibly be caused by a lack of knowledge of these events. In which case The Varsity is reprinting in palatable form the Students' Handbook of 1944.

The University, however, is not a social club; nor is it a mill grinding out the academic grist of youth. Selection of extra-curricular activities must be tempered with discrimination.

Invariably the tendency of the student is either to cut lectures in order to cram his day full of outside activities or to abnormally envelop himself in work. Both of these types of undergraduates are shrinking their responsibilities.

The University places before the student the opportunity of attaining an education combined with the practical experience of learning how to stand on his own feet. Every student desiring a liberal education should prepare to integrate at least one extra-curricular activity with his University life. This shouldering of additional responsibility will establish widespread contacts and will develop a self-confidence that will be in good stead after graduation.

This is your University. The more interest the undergraduate body takes in faculty and college organizations, the more capable will it become in attaining to a greater measure of co-operation in the bridging of the gulf between staff and student.

As well as preparing yourselves to effect a change in the attitude of the staff, you are also preparing yourselves for what you will do and what you will be.

Take a firm footing in your first year. But we stress above all, use sound judgment in choosing outside activities, for rushing headlong into campus life will only precipitate spring tremors.

The Final Hour

Entering into the sixth year of war, the class of 478 will find itself in an unprecedented position. It will be attending lectures when peace is declared and when rehabilitation is commenced. University life will have to adjust itself again to a peacetime tempo, but there will be no students present who have been on campus in times of calm.

The return of intercollegiate sports, the diminution of C.O.T.C. training, building expansion, increased enrolment and the general awakening of campus spirit so long suppressed will entail the reversion to the pre-war attitude. This attitude must, however, contain more maturity than formerly. The freshmen of this year will be juniors and seniors when returned men are entering their first year.

The problem of being not only a war baby but also a post-war baby is a difficult one. There will be apt cause for disunity, ill-feeling and argument. The answer to the question cannot be pondered too soon. Even in their first year students should face it as an intrinsic problem of their own future years. The fundamental point in the solution appears to be the abolition of adolescence and the introduction of sager thought.

May We Introduce

Despite this special freshman issue the May We Introduce must go on. Elizabeth Hopper is our Art, Music and Drama editor. This department is undoubtedly one of the most popular branches of The Varsity. More applications have been made to receive tickets to plays by more aspiring music and drama critics than we knew existed.

Elizabeth graduated from no less than two schools, Vaughan Road Collegiate Institute and Forest Hill. She is in her fourth year of music and intends to either go to O.C.E. or obtain her Mus. Bach.

She has worked two years on The Varsity as well as managing to sandwich in her other hobbies of sailing and canoeing. Young Hopper is interested in the violin and expects to continue her studies in this field.

If any potential critics want more information concerning Elizabeth they may find her any morning in The Varsity office.

Young Blood

Eaton Auditorium

Probably the first time anywhere a joint recital by a violinist, pianist, soprano and xylophonist was presented last night at Eaton Auditorium by four of Toronto's talented younger set. The concert was under the auspices of the Parkdale United Church Choir.

The xylophone is not generally regarded as a concert instrument, but Muriel Kilby handled it so ably, producing a wide variety of tones, that the audience realized that its capabilities had not in the past been sufficiently exploited. Miss Kilby chose works which had been originally composed for the violin. The sustained tone of the stringed instrument is duplicated by repeated hammering. Sarasate's Zigeunerweisen was played with ease and elegance. Unfortunately the works played were

Registrar Makes Confetti

Of special interest to freshmen is the announcement of a vague new course "geared to the unmistakable demands of the modern mind," Registrar A. B. Funnell announced today. Culminating 20 years of dispute among a special committee, Faux Pas Arts is "the application of psychology to life," he continued.

"Miss Ginny Northwoods of the Psychology Department reported to us years ago that courses were too set and formalized," the Registrar stated. "She said that psychology demonstrated the need of something more elastic, something more closely linked with the extremely fluid nature of the modern mind."

"This condition," he hastened to add, "is not to be confused with water on the brain."

Seeking an interview with the Registrar following this sensational announcement, the Cat found him busily snipping confetti out of piles and piles of cheques made payable to the University of Toronto.

"Paper shortage, you know," he explained hastily, seeing Champus make a grab for his portable strait-jacket. "The wedding bureau downtown pay me a huge commission. Why, confetti is so scarce that after every big wedding they sweep it up and use it again for the next one."

"Quite," replied Champus, being a polite Cat and not wishing to be tossed out of the window—at least not until the interview was over. "But what I wanted to ask you about was the new course—Faux Pas Arts."

"Ah, yes," beamed Mr. Funnell, starting on a particularly large cheque. "It's the greatest thing since college became co-educational. If everybody registers in Faux Pas Arts, we can pull down Simcoe Hall and build a pool-room. We'd have the Hart House business away from them in no time." Here he laughed fiendishly and scattered the confetti from the last cheque over the cowering Cat.

"Nobody registers in this course. If you do that you are automatically disqualified. . . . No more lineups. Just imagine that. No more lineups." And the poor tired Registrar's face took on the expression of unbelievable peace.

"Any course may be taken or dropped at will," he went on dreamily. "There will be no 8:30's, no P.T., no timetable, no examinations, no essays. . . ."

"And besides, on graduation the successful student is presented with Selective Service certificates guaranteeing him a job designing bigger and more complicated University Calendars."

When Champus left him he was still murmuring happily, "No more lineups. . . . no more Simcoe Hall. . . . soon we'll have no more University."

But Champus was sad. "Because that," he sighed, "would mean no more Cat."

GRANDPA AND JUNIOR.

musically inferior and banal. But perhaps the instrument would not show up to good advantage in works of greater depth.

Alice Kozner, accompanied vehemently by Livia Arnold, performed the Concerto in D minor by Henri Wieniawski. The violin was slightly out of tune, and this, combined with the performer's lack of volume and acute nervousness, produced a sad effect indeed. An incompetent rendition can often fall back on the inherent value of the music, but the aesthetic value of this too-frequently played concerto is negligible, making the young lady's faults all the more obvious. But Miss Kozner was not chosen to perform in this select group for nothing. In her other works she displayed surprising agility. Here again exception must be taken to the preference given familiar works. It is to the youthful musicians that Toronto (Continued on page 3)

Meds and School Clash In Opening Rugby Tilt

The intramural rugby league will make its annual debut this afternoon at four o'clock when Senior School and Senior Meds clash at Varsity Stadium in the opening game.

The game will mark the commencement of a round-robin series within the three distinct groups which comprise the league. Games will be run off at the rate of one a day and, according to the Athletic Office, this rate may later be accelerated to suit the schedule.

Today's contestants will be aiming at the leadership of group one which they share with Dents. Aside from this fact, the long standing rivalry between the two teams will add much to the proceedings.

Senior School will be out to gather the reins where they dropped them last year in the Mulock Cup finals. The defending champions have assembled another strong squad to carry their colors into the fray for another year.

Little is known of the quality of the Senior Meds but the first practice saw some 40 potential players strutting their stuff. The larger portion of the team which stood second to the group chamlooks for the introduction of new life into its concert programs.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

The soprano voice of Evelyn Gould is familiar to Canadians through her radio performances. Some of her pieces were undeniably beyond her range, but in Cyril Scott's Blackbird's Song, Jacobson's Chanson de Marie Antoinette and Puccini's Un Bel Dè she demonstrated that her voice is one of sensitivity combined with that quality that makes for popular appeal. Miss Gould is now planning to study at the Juilliard, where her further training should help considerably in transforming her from a singer to an artist.

Undoubtedly the most accomplished of the four pretty girls, Marion Grudeff showed extreme artistry in every work she played. Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor was performed with precision and Schumann's Soaring with a sensitive understanding of Romantic music. The climax of the evening came in Miss Grudeff's playing of the Scherzo in C sharp minor by Chopin. She handled the difficult arpeggio with remarkable ease and she captured the depth of feeling which the composer put into the music. Miss Grudeff is indeed an artist of the first order.

It is comforting to think that Toronto houses four such beautiful young ladies of talent.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasiv

THE OPENING WHISTLE . . .

After a hectic two-hour struggle consisting of shuffling, re-shuffling, voting and, probably, coin-tossing, the standing football committee arrived at a balanced league which is to last for the season. As the eight weary men field out of the committee room, one of this department's energetic reporters was handed a scribbled note. After countless hours of deciphering, the note took the form of something like this:

GROUP ONE—Senior Meds, Senior S.P.S., Dents.
GROUP TWO—Junior S.P.S., Junior Meds, U.C.
GROUP THREE—Trinity, Vic, School III, St. Mike's.

Well, that's it. The representative from St. Mike's certainly did himself proud in talking the other committee members into allowing his team to compete in Group Three. Outside of disagreeing with this, the balancing of the teams was rather well done, to say the least.

The teams are scheduled to play a round robin within their respective groups. The top teams in Groups One and Two advance into the playoffs against two teams from the remaining group. The winner of Group One will play the runner-up in Group Three, and the winner of Group Two will play the winner of Group Three. The two winners will then advance to the final game for the championship and the Mulock Cup.

The season opener comes off this afternoon at four o'clock and the schedule makers saw to it that a crowd pleaser would uncork another thrill-packed season.

Little is known of the strength of the Senior Med team outside of the odd rumor that reported hordes of players are out for the practices. But relying strictly on past performances, the Meds can be counted on to field a team which can hold its own in any company.

Senior School are again the threat for the Mulock Cup which they packed away last fall. Vern Booth, Ross Clare and Keary are again found in the backfield, while veterans in the line include Collins, Cross, Sharpe, Campbell, Moore and Moffatt. Add to these a number of the Junior School team of last year and the result will be one of the best balanced squads in the league.

AND NOW SOCCER . . .

The soccer committee met in conjunction with their more popular brethren and their decision showed a four-group league:

GROUP ONE—Meds, Vic, S.P.S. I, Dents.
GROUP TWO—Trinity, Emmanuel, Knox, U.C.
GROUP THREE—Wycliffe, Pharmacy, S.P.S. 2.
GROUP FOUR—Trinity II, Med II, Forestry.

Using this as a sole indication, soccer is definitely on the up-grade as a pastime. This grouping shows the addition of two teams. Trinity has seen fit to enter another eleven, while the small faculty of Forestry now is represented for the first time. Things do look brighter.

Today's column is written by Polly Muts, Head of Bowling on the University Athletic Association, and a Soph at St. Mike's to boot.—EDITOR.

MERRILY WE'LL BOWL . . .

As fall skips along towards winter, and freshies become accustomed to the free and easy way of college life, the Bowling Club has found itself snowed under with requests for bowling tickets. For the negligible sum of $1.00 bowlers may purchase their cards . . . Trinity students from Sydney Morehouse (Mi. 8451), U.C. students from Judy Henderson (Mi. 2375), St. Mike's cards to be obtained from Polly Muts (Ra. 4966). Victoria College and P.H. & E. have not yet announced the results of elections for representatives, but we hope elections are in progress. We would like to suggest that faculties such as Meds, Dents, Occupational Therapy, elect a representative to the bowling club, so as not to miss out on a good thing.

'STRUTH . . .

Here is an example showing that your athletic fees really work for you. The Midtown Bowling Alleys and the Athletic Association worked out a scheme where 200 University girls could bowl a maximum of 20 games per year at reduced prices. For every card sold at $1.00 to the students, the Athletic Association turns $1.50 extra over to the Midtown Alleys. Further aid is given during tournament time. When the inter-faculty tournaments roll around, the quotas of 20 games are usually spent. The University helps us hurdle this difficulty by carrying the cost of each game played by each participant. But this happens only once a year, at the end of the school term. Of the 200 girls granted these privileges, 100 are freshmen who choose bowling as their elective sport for Physical Training during the two semesters, and the remainder are University girls from all faculties and years, who reach their representatives first. So run—don't walk—to negotiate a deal with your rep.

THEY'LL SERVE TEA . . .

The College reps should be paid the 75 cents before Thursday noon . . . Trinity, Helen Johnston; Victoria, Lois Lloyd; U.C., Betty Rolls or Liz Kennedy.

JUST A NOTE . . .

to remind the basketball reps of all colleges and faculties to meet in Room 82 of U.C. on Thursday, Oct. 12 to O.K. the practice schedule and to straighten out rule problems. Representatives from Occupational Therapy, Physiotherapy and Pharmacy will be especially welcomed. So we'll see you all on Thursday at 3:30 p.m.

federated university or college, the Deans of the Faculty of Arts, Medicine, Applied Science and Engineering, Household Science, Education, Forestry, Music, and Dentistry and the School of Graduate Studies and past Chancellors, Vice-Chancellors and Principals.

The duties and powers of the Senate are many. Among these are provisions for the regulation and conduct of its proceedings for the granting of degrees, for the establishment of exhibitions, scholarships, and prizes, for the establishment of any faculty, department, chair, or course of instruction in the University, for the appointment of examiners and the conduct of all University examinations other than those in the faculties, for the preparation and publication of the calendars, to consider and determine on the report of the faculties, the course of studies in those faculties and all other courses of study for which no faculty is created, to hear and determine appeals from decisions of the faculty councils upon applications and memorials by students and others, and to make rules and regulations for the management and conduct of the Library.

Convocation consists of the whole body of graduates of the University in all faculties. It elects the Chancellor and in divisions, according to faculty, it elects members of the Senates as its representatives.

Faculty Councils number nine, including those of Arts, Medicine, Applied Science and Engineering, Education, Forestry, Music, and Dentistry, and the School of Graduate Studies. Each council is autonomous and discharges the affairs of its own faculty with reference to applications and memorials from its students, curriculum of studies, appointment of examiners and conduct of examinations.

The Caput is a committee composed of the President, the Principal of University College, the Heads of the federated Universities and federated Colleges, and the Deans of the faculties of the University. The Caput exercises discipline where breaches occur outside the buildings or grounds appropriated to each of the several colleges and faculties. The Students' Administrative Council is subject to the approval of the Caput.

More information about the administration of the University may be obtained in the book available at the Department of University Extension.

istrators did not keep the University lands intact, although Queen's Park and some of the land surrounding it are still the property of the University.

After more than a decade of further discussion and setbacks the Corner Stone of King's College was laid where the Parliament Buildings now stand on April 23, 1842, by Sir Charles Bagot.

Classes in the Provincial University attended by 26 students began on June 8, 1843, under the guidance of a teaching staff of six professors.

In the interval between the granting of the charter and the foundation of the University two other institutions of higher learning had appeared on the Upper Canada scene, Victoria, a Methodist College at Coburg, and Queen's, a Presbyterian College, at Kingston.

From its inception the public felt that the provincial, publicly endowed University should be non-sectarian. In 1849 during the Ministry of Robert Baldwin, King's College was renamed the University of Toronto, put under state control and freed of all theological restrictions. The immediate result of this step was the foundation of Trinity College by Bishop Strachan to preserve the Anglican tradition.

In 1853 the teaching of Arts was transferred to the newly formed University College, leaving the University the rights of managing endowments, conducting examinations and of conferring degrees, although the presidency of the two institutions was to remain vested in the same person until 1901.

Early in the seventies, due largely to the efforts of the late Sir William Mulock, then Vice-Chancellor of the University, a committee representative of all the colleges in the province was convened to draw up a plan for University federation. A result of this conference the University Federation Act passed the Legislature and became law in 1887. By the terms of this act the University was empowered to confer all degrees in Arts, the heads of the colleges were automatically to become members of the University Senate, and the colleges were to be financially independent and free to discipline their respective students.

This federation included, besides University College and Victoria University, Saint Michael's College which had been founded by the Basilian Fathers in 1852, Knox and Wyndfield Colleges and the Faculty of Medicine which had been part of the original King's College. Trinity College did not join the federation until 1904 and Queen's College alone of the original Ontario Colleges remained aloof.

It was not until 1906 that the ill-defined statutes of the Federation Act were clarified and a plainly organized constitution given to the University. In that year a Royal Commission was appointed to investigate University affairs. The Commission was headed by J. W. Flavelle and included among its six members H. J. Cody, now President of the University. According to the proposals of the Commission the government of the University is vested in the Senate and a Board of Governors.

Thus more than a century after the dream of a great provincial University took place in the mind of John Graves Simcoe, the University of Toronto as we know it today, except for the minor changes which are occurring constantly, was constituted by the University Act of 1906.

To depart from Arts' and Skules' view of the campus, we hereby give you the impressions of two stray Physios. . . .

Things just ain't like what they used to be when the Army Course was around. One day last winter when the boys were forming up, several young things skidded through the neat formation. The crusty sergeant bellowed angrily, "If you girls do that again I'll make you give me your names and phone numbers." Late as she was for her Lab, one brave (or desperate) soul started back but was restrained by her meeker comrades.

You can't win girls, you can't win.

And because we're not partial to one branch of the services, here's one about the boys in navy blue. There was a Navy wedding and after the usual fuss the happy couple departed in a specially decorated car. Prominent among the shoes and tin cans was a large sign which read ominously: "LOOSE TALK DID THIS."

Kinda makes ya think, don't it?

Physio freshies (as many of you know) are kinda cute (free adv't). On the night of their initiation one of them was asked to sing "The Blue and White." She tried to get away with the chorus only and when asked for the verse was obviously floored. But not for long. She pondered a moment and then bravely plied up, "We are, we are, we are the Engineers. . . ."

Funny things happen at the games at Varsity Stadium. Last Saturday one bright lad brought along field glasses, although as he was sitting in the front row we couldn't quite see the necessity of them. However, in the excitement of a touchdown play he was busy studying the situation. Seems he had it well in hand, too.

What situation?
Why the co-ed section above him, of course!

Also overheard at the game was the remark of one man calling to another sitting at least ten rows away. "Hey, where's your girlfriend or the one you were out with the other night?"

There must be a subtle difference, but what we'd like to know is how he explained to the girl sitting beside him who was obviously the Lady of the Afternoon?

A big frat party was in the offing and the two brothers were arranging to arrive together.

See one, "Where does your girl live?" "O don't know," was the answer. "Y'see, she's got a car and she's picking me up."

C'est la guerre, c'est la guerre.

C.O.T.C. Drill at Western University May be Shortened to 60 Hours

London, Ont.—(CUP)—According to the Gazette, C.O.T.C. training hours at the University of Western Ontario may be cut to 60 hours this year for junior and senior students, if they have completed with certain training qualifications.

At a meeting this summer, representatives of the universities met with officers of the forces, and at that time certain recommendations were made to National Defence Headquarters. They are as follows:

All physically fit men are to take training this winter. First and second year men are required to take 110 hours. Third and fourth year men may be allowed to take only 60 hours if they have taken 110 hours in each of the first two years and have attended two camps and provided that they have permission from their commanding officer.

All men must attend camp for the prescribed two-week period, and medically unfit men must take the prescribed first aid work.

tortures before us. With much trepidation and with stretched and twisted (but not torn) ties, we gathered at the mining building to be led to the arena of combat, the stadium. We formed the long line that Meds and Vic have learned to shy from with our trouser legs rolled up. We marched bravely to whatever lay in store, shouting the Toke Oike until the very walls reverberated.

On reaching the stadium we frosh suddenly felt rebellious: "We are four hundred, the Sophs but one hundred!" the tense whisper ran through the ranks. But at the gate stood four Sophs -- four stalwart, silent Sophs. With a few deft strokes of their shoe polish, they painted the faces of the four hundred.

Before we know it we were in the stadium. Around the track we went, punnelling the cinders to a fine dust, urged on by construction paddles wielded by giants who looked bigger than ever in their 477 gold and purple sweaters.

Over hurdles, under hurdles, through dead fish, dead cows, sand-bags, blocks of ice, a tunnel made for commando training--crawling on their hands and knees went the four hundred at the will of the small but efficient band of Sophs.

Finally we were recognized officially as engineers. General feeling among the Frosh: "They put up a pretty good show. But wait until next year. They won't live."

three separate machines, and then the latter in a large cabinet in which there are eight perpendicular drawers. On the framework of these drawers some 160 towels can be stretched and when the heat is turned on, over 1,600 pieces may be put out in a day.

Bill Smith has proved the germless and spotless condition in which the articles leave his charge. A few years ago a sanitation inspector visited the laundry and introduced a few phials of living germs into the first suds solution. After all the whirling machines had done their work and the solution was again tested, it was found to be better than 99 per cent pure. And this seems to support the motto that, "If it goes to the locker room laundry, it's bound to come out clean."

New Campaign Program Outlined By ISS Committee To Launch 2 Campus Drives

Two - Month Publicity Campaign Previous to Drives, Planned to Acquaint Students With Functions of I.S.S.

A three-fold campaign program has been outlined by the newly elected Action Committee of the International Student Service, in order to ensure the success of this year's drive, which is planned to surpass every previous one in scope and versatility. "The I.S.S. is ready, geared for action," commented Henry Alsberg, treasurer, today.

First, a two-months' publicity campaign will be launched to acquaint the entire campus with the purposes, activities and accomplishments of the I.S.S., not only in Toronto, but all around the globe as well. Secondly, various independent student relief organizations will be encouraged to work through the local I.S.S. committee.

Lastly, according to committee officials, two climactic campus-wide drives will be devoted to raising an unprecedented amount of money, befitting a university of this size. They say that there will be no lack of enjoyment accompanying the realization of these financial aims: spectacular novelties, such as ads on your napkin or matchbox, and posters will be only a few of these attractions. Quoting June Wong, secretary, a fitting slogan for the present session will be "Support I.S.S."

And help those in distress!" A meeting of the new Action Committee will be held on Tuesday, Oct. 17 at 8:30, in the Women's Union. It is of prime importance that representatives from every college and faculty should attend.

Social Work Students Greeted by Dean Jaffray

The second year School of Social Work students arranged an introduction tea yesterday for first year undergraduates. All freshmen had been warned previously to come prepared with poems about themselves, and yesterday at the Economics Building 80 participants enjoyed listening to the amateur poetry.

Also present and shaking hands with the newcomers were Dean J. K. Jaffray and other faculty members. Refreshment and bingo games made up the rest of the program.

Tastes in art are unpredictable. R. York Wilson, young Toronto artist, said yesterday in Hart House Art Gallery.

Seated informally about the gallery at noon, more than 30 students fired questions and listened as the artist discussed his 37 landscapes and figure studies displayed on the walls.

"You can't size up anybody's tastes for different paintings," Mr. Wilson said. Then, as an example, he laughingly told how he used to predict his wife's reactions to his works as he was coming home from sketching trips. "I would say to myself she would prefer this one and not like that one. Invariably, though, I was wrong. Since then I no longer try to predict her tastes."

The artist said all of his works had been painted either in Toronto or within five miles of the city. In winter time it had been his practice to make two nature sketches every Sunday morning. But one morning the weather dipped to ten below zero and his fingers became so numb that he couldn't hold his palette and brush.

"That day," he recalled, "I lost my resolution and went inside the house. Not wanting to break my tradition, however, I did a sketch of the scenery outside my bedroom window."

Mr. Wilson said he felt more satisfaction from painting human figures than landscapes. "The nature sketches," he said, "can be finished up in one or two hours. But human figures—which are done on large canvases—require a lot more attention."

As illustration he pointed to a large canvas depicting two gypsies and two colored zoot-suiters standing outside a fortune-teller's shop on Queen Street beneath a lamp post.

"The pose interested me as soon as I saw it," he says. "The group lent itself naturally for a pose. So I took out my pencil and paper and sketched. Later on I had models pose in my studio. The stances were the same and I kept in memory the colors I had noticed in the original."

Another figure which caused him some amusement was that of a librarian stamping books at the Toronto Reference Library.

"Of course she didn't look that way all the time," Mr. Wilson says. "It so happened she always seemed to cast a nauseated glance when she observed the low calibre sort of novels I returned to the library. So I sketched her in that scornful mood."

C.C.F. to Meet In Open Forum Led by Grube

Professor G. M. A. Grube, president of the C.C.F., Ontario Section, will lead an open forum about "C.C.F. Planning on Housing, Community Planning, Health Services, and Natural Resources" in the Women's Union Common Room at 8:00 p.m. tonight.

Prof. Grube is one of the founders of the C.C.F., and has had experience in the British Labor Party. He is professor of Classics at Trinity College. Dr. T. F. Nicholson, M.D., a Pathological Chemist at the Banting Institute, is the panel's expert on Health Services; P. A. Deacon, Architect, and member of the Committee on Community Planning and Housing in the Ontario Architects' Association, is the panel's expert on that topic; Professor D. N. Cass-Beggs, of the University's Electrical Engineering Department, is the expert on natural resources, and Prof. G. Grube is the panel's authority on C.C.F. general policy.

Don Millard, III Electrical, chairman of the Summer Organizing Committee, stated that the club should have an unusually active year. The gyrations of Drew, and the impending Dominion election, are causing increased interest in the C.C.F. As the war draws to a close, interest in social and political problems of reconstruction are at a new high, he stated. Don will present the report of the Summer Organizing Committee to the club.

The members of the panel have the following connections with the C.C.F.: Dr. T. F. Nicholson, Chairman of the C.C.F. Provincial Council Committee on Planning for Health Services; Mr. Deacon, Chairman of the Housing Committee; Prof. D. N. Cass-Beggs, writer of the chapter on Natural Resources and Electric Power in the new C.C.F. book, "Planning for Freedom."

The report of the Summer Organizing Committee will state a general plan for the club's activities for this year. More stress will be placed on discussion groups than last year, says Mary Richardson, member of the committee, and secretary of the club. "Come prepared for a good discussion, and come on time—8 p.m. sharp, as we have to adjourn at 11, and don't want to cut the controversy," she said.

Election Results Are Announced At U.C. Dance

The annual U.C. First Year Dance was held last night at the Women's Union for the purpose of celebrating the end of initiation. Practically all the Freshman class was present and it played host to many members of other faculties, as well.

Both floors of the Union were being used for the occasion, with music supplied on one floor by Bob Stacey and his Players' Mild, while records were played on the floor above. By way of entertainment Ben Orenstein, Literary Director of the U.C. Lit., was the Master of Ceremonies for a series of dances, and some with some of the U.C. freshmen and the world's famous Rockettes, imported directly from New York, especially for the occasion.

Bob Bell, President of the Lit., announced the election results; they were: Alan Foster, first year president; Ed Currah, athletic representative; Murray Stitt, secretary-treasurer; and Bob Marjoribanks, Lit. treasurer. Rose Rabkin, President of the Women's Undergraduate Association, announced that Kathleen Weir was elected president of the first year with an executive including Pat Catta, Mildred Spicer and Deb Avery.

Ralph Shepherd, Publicity Director of U.C., in announcing some of the details of the Annual University College Sophomore Banquet which is to be held Oct. 19, explained that this affair was formerly held in Hart House but due to the exigencies of war and attendant difficulties, Hart House is not available. However, rather than abandon such an important part of U.C. tradition, it was decided to hold the banquet in the Crystal Ballroom of the King Edward Hotel. He went on to say that tickets will be on sale in the Rotunda every day from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., and the price will be 50 cents. These tickets are also available from members of the W.U.A. and the Lit. Sales on Thursday and Friday of this week are for first year only; following that, the tickets will be available to all years in the college.

Meetings, Discussions Open to Artsmen Only

An appeal to students of all faculties to turn out for discussion meetings this year was voiced by the newly-elected executive of the International Affairs Society at a meeting in University College yesterday afternoon. This group is not limited to Arts students, and in past years Schoolmen, Meds and Dents have all been active in it.

The meetings will present prominent men to the undergrads, and following the formal meetings, discussion periods will be held, during which anyone may voice his opinion and argue his point. Meetings, arranged with an eye to lectures and C.O.T.C. activities, will be held every second Monday at 4:30 p.m. in the Common Room of the Women's Union.

The executive elected for this year consists of: President—Agnes Fischer; Secretary-Treasurer—Mildred Donaldson; Librarian—Shirley Ford; Publicity—Ruth Clarkson, Gloria Carpen, Lily—Martha Corson; Program Committee—Ruth Clarkson, Gloria Carpenter, and Agnes Fischer.

Suggestions for publicity, possible speakers, and meeting with other societies of a similar nature were discussed. A membership drive also is planned, and an urgent request is made by the executive to all interested students to turn out Monday, Oct. 25, for the next meeting.

The Society has an excellent general and current events library, endowed by the Carnegie Foundation. Although the library is open to all students, little use is made of it, according to the executive.

Abbe Maheux Sees Unity Between French, English Through Understanding

NOTICE

There will be a meeting on Monday at 4 p.m. in Room 82, U.C. for all those interested in reporting for The Varsity.

University Knowledge Should Be Passed On and Religious and Linguistic Prejudices Adjusted to Different Views

Relationships between the French and English culture groups in Canada would be much improved if the more extensive knowledge on the part of university students on the question, were passed on to others, said Abbe Arthur Maheux of Laval University, Quebec City, at the initial meeting of the Modern History Club at Wymilwood last night. Abbe Maheux stressed the point that Canada must be united because it is necessary that the French and English speaking Canadians live together. A fuller understanding in religious and linguistic problems should be the aim of all those conscious of the obvious friction between the two peoples, he said.

"We happen to feel that we don't understand each other. There are prejudices, and I believe that they are on both sides," he stated. "In this democracy we are able to vote and each man is right in his own mind. We should be conscious of our responsibilities as well as our privileges and in view of the many difficulties, we should try to adjust our different views. It is necessary that greater attention be paid to adult education."

In his travels throughout Canada, many questions were asked of Abbe Maheux regarding the problem. He had recorded some of the more pointed ones and last night he distributed them to the students at the meeting, as topics for discussion. In answering a few of the questions he advised those criticizing the Catholic Church in Canada with the condition of the Church in the 16th century in mind, to forget the past in dealing with present problems.

One of the most serious problems, according to Father Maheux, is that of separate school systems. In regard to the question of the two languages, he disapproved of the view that English should be the one language spoken in Canada. English is taught in all schools in Quebec and is compulsory in the universities, though the instruction has not met with much success in rural grade schools.

"There is much to be said for the History course of today," said Abbe Maheux. "First there is the making of" (Continued on page 4)

Mystery Is Now Disclosed Of The Hart House Dungeon

In a basement corridor in Hart House, next to the Camera Room, there is a mysterious door.

Furtive blue-coated figures slink in and out, while the door creaks shut behind them.

Rare glimpses disclose a trash-littered dungeon behind the door, where the grey light plays over weird machinery. But only yesterday did The Varsity find a reporter bold enough to walk in and investigate.

He was seized at the entry by the chief cook and bottle-washer of the Hart House repair shop, whose plaintive pleas moved him almost to tears.

"Why," he moaned, "must absent-minded students place burning fags on our good chesterfields, thereby necessitating more work on my part? Also, why can't the big students settle down on a chair instead of falling on it and breaking it? My goodness, don't they know any better?"

Fearing a breakdown, our reporter pushed him gently aside and proceeded to snoop.

"A little snooping in the cubby-hole on the side," he reported, "will disclose vices, broken chairs, tacks, felt, paint, shellac, saws of all kinds, hammers, mops, soap, towels, a flashlight, a sewing machine and a 1942 calendar. Here you will find the repairman busy as a little bee at his favourite pastime—sewing drapes.

In the next room you will find a row of lockers, two men, and a big machine, around which the men are grouped. The odor coming from the lockers is not hydrogen sulphide but is due to the fact that the cleaning staff keep their lunches there. C.O.T.C. men will be well advised to bring their respirators with them.

"A closer look at the machine, not too close though, will show you that the two men are struggling with a handle on the machine and are trying to press something down. With your heart in your mouth, and an overdose of adrenalin in your body, you will dare to move a little closer and then you will see that these men are playing at squeezing down paper trash.

"The mystery is at least somewhat cleaned up," he concluded. "It is a repair-shop. But boss," (his chin trembling), "please, boss, don't send me back there again. Please, not that."

Pitfalls On The Path

At the present time, the future of the young people of this country is shrouded by the obscure atmosphere of the post-war world. It is not difficult to see that the problems that youth will have to face in the immediate future are serious and numerous. On the completion of the present war, tens of thousands of young men and women will be discharged from the armed forces, and thus far the plans for their rehabilitation assume an amorphous character. Many will return to the universities to finish their courses under the Federal Government's educational plan, but many more will have to face a rather less uninviting world along with their brothers who have been helping at home in war plants. Delinquency and crime threaten unless such difficult questions as housing, employment, and the provision of recreational facilities are adequately dealt with.

The problems of youth have been most sorely neglected in the past. The results of this negligence have been evident since the outbreak of war and the inevitable disruption of the home. Juvenile drunkenness and delinquency have increased at a terrifying rate. The post-war years will be no less difficult than the war years. Provision must be made now for the reviewing, discussion, and solving of these vital questions.

University students not only form a considerable part of that strata of society loosely designated as Youth, but they form a part of society most admirably equipped to discuss the problems and draft the policies that would meet the needs of youth. Many of them are well-versed in the social sciences and public spirited enough to undertake the formation of a student organization given over to these problems. Such a society would work in conjunction with the Canadian Youth Commission and send delegates to the Provincial Conference of this group armed with the decisions, resolutions, and plans of the University student body.

Country Gentleman

Over Thanksgiving weekend, many University students were fortunate enough to be able to take a short trip into the country. In view of this, it is appropriate that a few words be recorded concerning the life of the farmer at this point.

To many people, the farmer is a member of one of the many minority groups, and like the Schoolman is rather to be pitied than envied. As every Toronto student is aware, the Schoolman is only too willing to defend himself and if we listen to his defense, we realize that our prejudice is based largely on misunderstanding.

Concerning those who form the very backbone of the country, the ones who produce our bread and butter, there is a great deal of misunderstanding. The common conception depicts the farmer as a very poorly clad, ill-housed, overworked individual, who has little pleasure from life apart from his sojourn with Morpheus each evening. Do we speak as a city man, born and bred? Is the common conception in error? Or is what we really saw in the country this weekend closer to the true picture?

We saw people on farms, not pretentious, who receive a monthly milk cheque almost twice as large as the monthly salary of one of our aforementioned Schoolmen who is a "chief engineer." We saw people on a farm with an orchard, not extraordinarily large, and their annual net earnings were six times that of the local doctor. We saw people on farms who admitted they received a wheat cheque of four times the amount our under-rated professional man receives in one year.

It is true that these are the ones on the bright side of the ledger, but they cannot be discounted. There is substantial evidence that common sense, ambition, the "Country Gentleman" and 1935 Ford coupe converted into a half-ton truck, will produce satisfactory results on a hundred acres of land, given a kindly bank manager in the neighbouring village. So what? you query.

Just this: these same farmers are happy, healthy men, raising more children than their superficial metropolitan brothers, and to boot they are doing a prime service to their country by producing the food whereby we exist.

There is a challenge here which we cannot ignore; for the boys coming back from the battlefields, farming is one of their best bets.

Correspondence

I Sing of Clothes and the Man

Oh, hark ye, undergraduates, attend to ye ed's wish,
Dust off the Eton jackets, bring out the soup-and-fish:

Hock all your foolish text books, ignore the prof's advice,
And use the dough to buy a suit, for you must all look "nice."

The illustrious stole of learning, oh Brothers, pass ye by;
Lay down the pen, and leave the lab, and go and buy a tie;

For the Warden's back from England, and really feels quite sore
That ye ape the Yankee morons, whose brains may win this war.

Alas for Donald Gordon! who told us "Make it do";
And sigh for poor Montgomery, at victory's rendezvous:

For Bernard wears a sweater, and Donald says "don't buy,"
And the Warden of the Campus just couldn't let them by!

Alas, ye brilliant students, whose brains have gained ye place
By bursary or other loan this sacred spot to grace!

Haste, tell your toil-worn mothers their knitting has been banned;
Tell them to sell the cow and buy a suit and four-in-hand.

Oh, shades of Keats and Curie, and shades of Edison,
Roll in your graves, your faces hide, for aught ye may have done!

For if ye came to join us, your laurels soon would fade;
For the Warden says you're sloppy so you couldn't make the grade!

WALTER J. MACNEILL, III S.P.S.

The clever reply to the editorial appearing in Tuesday's issue concerning dress on the campus printed above, expresses the views of many students if we may judge from the correspondence to which the article has given rise. The poem, amusing though it is, not only ridicules but makes no concrete statement. It does, however, bring out the point concerning old and patched clothes. Warden Bickersteth says that in England patched suits are a badge of honour, but that the people are always dressed neatly and in clean garments. They manage to clothe themselves in good taste even though clothes are rationed on that side of the Atlantic. The Varsity sticks to its guns and reiterates that a manner of dressing that offends good taste, if it can possibly be avoided, is inexcusable.—EDITOR.

Shirts Shrunk. Buttons Removed By One Long Pew and Father Before Him: Insanity Is Keynote

(NO TIEKKEE, NO SHIRTEE)

"Halt House Laundly never lose as many buttons in month allsame we lose in day," chirped One Long Pew, proprietor of The Varsity Hand Laundry in the basement of Convocation Hall.

He is well authorized to speak thus, for lost buttons shower from the shirts of the Pew family. Mr. Pew has been in the laundry business since the foundation of the University, and his father was a tiddlywink expert before him in the days of the Emperor Two Chin Chow.

"No tiekkee no socktee," he continued, adding that he had stripped the buttons from the President's shirts, "when Hank Sody allsame wild-eyed feshman."

Insanity is stressed above anything in the laundering processes used to clean the garters, shoe-laces, lip flasks, and other essential apparel turned in daily.

"Lots and lots Kleenex too," he added, referring to the paper shortage with a broad wink. "We wash him and iron him out allsame like new."

For Kleenex alone the procedure involves rubbing, scrubbing, and tubbing with three separate soap-flakes, and then the final drying in the office of the Registrar. The latter is a large cabinet in which are hung the Presidential drawers. On the framework of these drawers 100 moths have been feasting since 1736. "Allsame old Chinese custom," explained One Long Pew.

When the heat is turned on, over 1,060 students can be put out in a day.

Mr. Pew guarantees to return all shirts within three sizes of their former condition. Should the customer desire, he will take the most solemn oaths, burning a laundry ticket on the Altar of the Holy Sock.

Mr. Pew has proved the buttonless and sleeveless condition in which the articles leave his charge. A few years ago a debutation inspector visited his laundry and inserted a few fresh shirts, their fastenings sewn on with wire, into the first suds solution. A triumphant popping as they made their first trip over the wash-boards heralded their emergence with the buttons better than 99 per cent removed.

All this seems to support the motto that "If it Goes to the Varsity Hand Laundry it's Bound to Come Out."

the College, second floor. Here a few interested students gathered to relax to the world's classics or to gain instruction from them.

The range of records is great—from Palestrina to Prokofeff—for the University is fortunate enough to have at its disposal this wonderful Carnegie Collection. Music students have found this club of particular value to them. Of course there is no fee.

The club is run entirely by students with the guidance of Dr. Wynn of the Medical Faculty. Volunteers are needed to help run the machine each day, which is not difficult and can be very entertaining.

We believe that this is a worthwhile organization and there should be enough interest around the campus to keep it alive.

School Trounce Meds 8-0 In First Game Of Season

Meds Lost Through Fumbles and School Boosted Their Score By Three Consecutive End Runs

STRICKER AND BEAN STAR

The opening game of the rugby season saw Meds fumble their way to an 8-0 loss. The first quarter saw a see-saw affair around the centre of the field with both lines holding well. Meds fumbled with a half-minute to go in the first quarter, School recovering the ball on their 48-yard line.

In the second quarter Meds had an edge, due mostly to the plunging of Lewis. He got three successive first downs on plunges at the start of the quarter. Fumbles prevented Meds from getting far, and by half time the ball was still close to centre field.

Meds kicked off as the third quarter got under way, and School was nailed at its 4-yard line. S.P.S.'s kick was good for only 20 yards, as it went out of bounds, and it looked as though Meds were in for a score. However Meds fumbled again, and School got the ball on their own 30-yard line. Plunges by Jones and Booth, and an end run with Jones carrying the ball brought two successive first downs and carried the ball to the Meds' 35-yard line. Another end run netted yards, but School settled for a point, Lewis being rouged. Lewis and Baker came back with yards on plunges. Meds' kick was blocked on their 45-yard line. School again made yards on an end run and another put them in position for a placement. However this back-fired when Meds blocked the kick and rolled the ball back to School's 45-yard line to end the quarter.

The last quarter saw School pull three end runs that put them on the Meds' 3-yard line, from where Clare went over to make it 6-0. Stricker converted, making the score 7-0. The game saw then with Meds losing ground on off-sides and fumbles. S.P.S. recovered their own kick on the Meds' 20-yard line where, after two unsuccessful plunges, they kicked another single, making it 8-0. Play ceased on the School 45-yard line.

The game saw the return of Herb Stricker, who shared the honours with Jones. S.P.S. won out on their end runs. Meds showed strong plunging power, but their end runs ran for a loss and their off-sides and fumbles kept them off the score-sheet. Bean was a standout on Meds secondary defense.

Low Hurdle Heats To Be Held Today

The junior track meet will be given the official starting signal this afternoon at 1:30 at the Stadium when track coach Hec Phillips fires the opening gun for the heats in the low hurdles. The discuss event will coincide with these heats.

All athletes were eligible providing they had never placed first in a university track meet. Freshmen were especially invited to participate as this meet has, in the past, been considered as their own. Now, however, the year of the contestants is not taken into consideration. Entries closed last night at six o'clock.

A change in the point system will be inaugurated today as the first four men will be recorded and not only the first three, as in former years. This will not change the system of points for the T.A. Reed Trophy as only the first three will receive any recognition for their college or faculty.

The time-table for the events was published in yesterday's Varsity.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Jerry Ewins

PERSONALITIES . . .

The people who look after things in the Hart House Athletic Wing are well-deserving of an introduction to you freshmen who haven't as yet found your way over there. Any of the old and wise sophs who have already read this far are invited to stick around, as they may pick up a few scraps of information about these gentlemen which are well worth knowing. Every one of them is fast becoming a legend around the campus and is fitted for his job as well as anyone could be. So give a listen to what follows and we hope you are better acquainted when we're through.

The man who gets to meet most of you sooner or later and usually makes quite an impression on you when he does, is Hubert (much better known as Chesty) Martin. He holds down the official title of Supervisor of Physical Training and has been around Hart House for the past 22 years. This genial gentleman is also in charge of the combat activities (boxing, wrestling, etc.) and does a good job of looking after the various tournaments that come along. He was at his best last year in this capacity at the Athletic Nights (something that you fresh can really look forward to) and deserves a great deal of credit for his hard work. He's a Captain in the C.O.T.C. as well, and got nothing but praise from the officers at camp for his role as Messing Officer this summer. He'll be waiting for you when the P.T. classes start, so be prepared to meet a very colorful character.

His able assistant on the regular staff of Gym Instructors is a fellow by the name of Charlie Zwygand. This gentleman holds the position of Gymnastics coach, and well he should, as he is a former holder of the Canadian Gymnastic Championship. You'll probably sit up and take notice of him first when you see his race up that rope hanging from the ceiling in the upper gym in a brief demonstration of how it should be done. He complains about his bad leg holding him back, but will outdo the best of them when put to the test. Watch him at work and feel an interest in gym work developing inside you.

Then there's Bill Winterburn, the Swimming Instructor and general supervisor of the pool. You'll meet him at the "learn to swim" classes or see him ably directing his assistants in the other branches of the sport.

Burly Mel Glienna is the Boxing Instructor. He is a former pro boxer himself and it is rumoured that he did some fighting across the border this summer in Buffalo.

George Daley looks after the Wrestling. A former champion himself, he is very popular in the teaching capacity also.

Charlie Walters holds down the title of Fencing Master in "the house." He was formerly a champion in all weapons and is considered the foremost authority on fencing in Canada. He held the foil, sabre, and epee crowns at one time and also qualifies in the unrecognized class of quarterstaff fighting. So any of you fellows with interests along these lines should look him up.

Last, but possibly one of the best-known, is the Track Coach, Hec Phillips. He's the guy who is up at the Stadium working with his runners every night at four o'clock and will introduce himself to you at the forthcoming P.T. classes. His part of your training comes near the end of the period as you finish up the class with a half-mile run either indoors or out. He is looking after the Junior Track Meet which comes off today at the Stadium at 1:30, so go up there and get a preview of him in action. He possibly lays his claim to fame in your memory as being the coach of the famous track star, Larry O'Connor, but is also well thought of by the Toronto Police Force as the trainer of their track team. He's a really genuine fellow and worth numbering among your friends, so get over the tie Athletic Wing and meet him.

Well, there they are. They're as good a bunch of sportsmen as you'll find anywhere, so give them some co-operation in their activities and reap the benefits yourself. It's all yours for the asking.

ARCHERY PRACTICE

A practice period in Archery will be offered this year to women students in the University who have finished at least one term's instruction in archery. First practice Saturday morning, Oct. 14, from 10:30 to 11:30, at the Stadium. Further times announced later.

Survey, Postwar Plans Outlined to Foresters

Mr. A. H. Richardson, a conservation expert with the Department of Lands and Forests, addressed the Foresters' Club on "The Ganaraska Watershed Survey," at their opening meeting in Hart House last night. The survey was outlined, and the projected plans for Ontario's first post-war land-rehabilitation scheme were presented.

The Ganaraska watershed, situated in Durham County, is an area of 100 square miles. Smith's Creek, flowing into Lake Ontario at Port Hope, is the outlet of the entire drainage system.

Owing to intense lumber operations and the clearing of the land for agriculture since its first settlement in 1790, much of the area now presents a picture of abandoned roads, erratic streams, eroded hillsides and deserted farmhouses, stated Mr. Richardson. There are still some good wood-lots and excellent farms.

During the summer of 1942, every aspect of conditions in the watershed was investigated, said Mr. Richardson. The area was mapped in detail; river conditions, farm economies, vegetation, forest enemies, and wild-life were all included.

The need of rehabilitation here has been evident for over 40 years, said Mr. Richardson, and are best shown in the damaging floods which have occurred at Port Hope. Authorities hope that returned servicemen, and even war-workers, will be employed in this project.

Present plans include reforestation and the tending of existing wood-lots, the construction of fish dams and possibly of hatcheries, highway improvement, road and culvert construction, and the establishment of public parks.

" The Sportswoman "

By Janice Murray

AND UP AT LILLIAN MASSEY . . .

Freddie Baxter has a full life, or so she says. It seems that this year, since the swimming test has been made a compulsory thing, her classes for beginners and elementary swimmers have increased beyond all expectation. This year, says Freddie, they are either very good or very bad, nothing in between. Last year there were more average swimmers. She has 42 beginners in her classes, and 69 girls classed as elementary. This makes a really heavy schedule.

It seems to us, however, that these classes, even if they teach only the minimum swimming required by the test standard, are an excellent thing. In a country such as ours all people should learn to swim, and swim well. Although the classes at L.M. may not hope to make champions in a single year, they certainly should stimulate the girls in them to go on until they are in a position to feel confident in the water at any place. That perhaps is the main reason for such a requirement, as the test alone asks very little ability to pass it.

MISS FORSTER SAYS . . .

that she is still waiting for girls to turn up to her Modern Dancing and Fencing classes. These were organized for the girls who were in senior years, and when she planned them last year there were lots of girls ready and eager to enter both. Now these aspiring athletes have vanished as a cloud and the classes are running along with very few participants. (Statistics again show eight in Modern Dancing and one, a beginner, who has applied for Fencing). This, girls, is NOT good, really it isn't. We admit that W.N.S.T. work takes up a lot of time, but not as a general rule on Wednesdays and Fridays.

Also there are free-swimming periods every afternoon at 4:30 for all who wish to make use of them. In upper years and for Physio and O.T. the $3.00 fee must be paid, but for fitness it is well worth it, or perhaps if you are in the beginner class unofficially you might take the time for instruction and catch up with the Freshies. Freddie will be there to help.

RE THE UGLY RUMOUR . . .

that basketball and baseball may not be played by the same girl, we wish to reassure you. Although baseball is considered a major sport on the books, it is being revived after a slump of some years. The rule stands that a girl may not play two major sports at the same time, but this year, due to the shortness of notice, and of the schedule, and the few games planned for each team, the rule will be waived. The Directory will have to change the ruling or enforce it next year however. You can play both.

A LAST REMINDER . . .

Doctor Mulock would like all girls involved in any sport to have a medical by Friday. Freddie Baxter would like all first year girls to have their swimming test and she will set a deadline any old day now. Finally, don't forget to sign and pay your fees for the golf tournament at St. Andrew's Friday. Every College should have a good showing in this sport.

Any time's SHOPPING TIME!

"WHAT'S NEW for the College girl?" we asked Holt Renfrew's Antoine Salon. "Tell her this," we were instructed in Mrs. Head's honest-to-goodness practical way. "Tell her to get those lovely locks of hers reconditioned after their summer sun-drying. Tell her they're likely to be as crisp as tissue and badly in need of the softly soothing Antoine reconditioning treatment which is gentle and effective and beautifying as well as scalp-toning." Smart women the world over brighten at the mention of an Antoine Salon. Remember?

JUDGING BY the way things get snatched up under your very eyes these days it's wise to get in your shopping work early. In this column's trips around our favourite shopping haunts the moment we take out pencil and notebook to jot down this or that number, the department-head's just as likely as not to crack down. "We've plenty of those right now," is the usual comment, "but there's been a rush on that particular item and I'd hate to disappoint anyone. Better not mention it!" The moral is to do your shopping early and go to the Etcetera Shops for suit or match items which can always be substituted. They're geared to build up your costume in a pay-as-you-build way.

GILLESPIE'S for better fur coats... that's like saying Friday follows Thursday. Gillespie's name has been synonymous with quality in furs since Toronto was a pup and they're still at it. There's a certain importance about the trade name carried by your fur coat because as with other things the full quality of a good fur coat cannot be appreciated until years have proved it. Fur neck pieces are also a specialty at Gillespie's, and their custom tailored department is celebrated. 70 Wellington St. West.

NORTHWAY'S "FASHIONLAND" is a favourite haunt these days for girls with a wardrobe to build from the ground up. The whole Third Floor is devoted to just the sort of thing you expect to hunt hard for, cozy little two-piece woollens, glamour date-dresses, coats in the fine Northway manner, and in addition a smart hat-bar at which you can team up your millinery with coat and dress. You guess, you'll like the new metallic trims on yoke or belt, the jumper dresses, the "Shortie" coats, the swagger fur-lined coats designed for day by day debonaire comfort.

Does a certain law student remember the time during his hospital stay when he embarrassed the nurse before the doctor on the case?

"Well," breezed the doctor, swishing into the room. "Well, son, how are you today?"

"Miserable, Doc," moaned the styster.

"I took a turn for the nurse."

The Varsity is the hotbed of hombers. No nice man would date its co-ed correspondents, because they become hard, tough, and cynical. At least so ran the legend. But now we wonder.

The other night a timid young thing phoned the tired Night Editor at the Press and gave her story over the wires.

"But why," screamed the tired Night Editor, "why must I take all this down and type it? All good reporters come in with their stories in person. Besides, I am sick and tired and long for company. Why don't you come down here yourself?"

"Oh but I couldn't possibly do that," she protested. "I'm afraid of the dark."

AND OF THE NIGHT ED?

We are telling this story by way of a parallel. The world is not yet prepared to hear of what really happened on this our campus; though it may find out when it reads our posthumous memoirs. But we can give a little hint; we can tell of an off-campus happening that was as near as hangit the same.

It happened at a local Matric school, where Box Lunches (ugh!) are eaten in a second-floor classroom. Three not-so-hungry boys, wondering what to do with a left-over hard-boiled egg, succumbed to the Lure of the Opeo Window and tossed it through.

There would have been a perfect bull's eye and an awful uproar and the egg would not have bounced so lightly before it crashed IF the lady passing below had not had her umbrella up.

BUT WHEN IT HAPPENED ON OUR CAMPUS IT WASN'T RAINING.

Missing a parade is a dreadful thing; especially a naval parade. One class of U.N.T.D. rookies were being sternly jawed about the bloody cat and the brig and the bread-and-water and keel-hauling and all the dreadful things in store for parade defaulters.

"It is true," admitted the lecturer, working up to his climax, "it is true that they aren't so harsh in the U.S.A. They aren't so downright nasty with slackers even in the C.O.T.C. But between you men and the birds in those other two outfits there is a difference.

"A significant, a momentous, an overwhelming categorical difference.

"And the difference is THAT THEY AREN'T IN THE NAVY AND YOU ARE!"

How's that again?

Everybody, we maintain, reads the Cat. Even Sophs read the Cat, albeit with disgust. One of them was reading it over the shoulder of a convulsed freshman in the Map Room (towards morning, and finally felt moved to ask the frosh with disdain what on earth he was laughing at.

"At the Cat," gurgled the innocent.

"Oh, so you think the Cat's funny?"

"Of course I think it's funny."

"Well, don't. But I suppose it's O.K. for freshmen."

AH, INNOCENCE.

A Varsity staffer—in fact, us—was told that he had an irate note coming his way; a note that would burn him—would flay his tarnation hide.

He was told this by the deliverer (but not the writer) of the note; and being intrigued by the build-up he pressed for delivery.

"Well," quoth the emissary, "the truth is, I haven't got it."

"How come?"

"Well, it's a long story. You see, she wrote it in a restaurant. In Chinatown, in fact. And she had no paper handy when the spirit moved her. So she wrote it on a napkin."

"Well," the fact is, SOMEONE WIPED HIS MOUTH WITH IT."

And serve it right.

history—the events of today as they pass on become history. The writing of this history is often done by research workers in memoirs or theses. However, the most important factor concerning this subject is the dissemination of historical knowledge by means of books, magazine articles and teachings."

He continued by discussing how we could establish historical knowledge in schools. He said that in some cases the text books were deficient, in others the teachers were biased, and that these difficulties can be remedied.

The meeting was opened by the president, Muriel Chapman, who briefly outlined the activities for the year. She then called upon Dr. R. M. Saunders who introduced Abbe Maheux to the Modern History group. Jack Gillett, the clubs' vice-president, gave the speaker a vote of thanks.

NOTICE

Every University student is asked to make sure, at once, that his correct Toronto address and telephone number are entered upon his registration card in the office of the University Registrar, Simcoe Hall, and in the office of his College Registrar or Faculty Secretary. The University Directory is now being prepared for the press and it is of the greatest importance that all addresses and telephone numbers be correct.

he remarked; adding, however, that the co-operation of the faculties was needed. "We can't send a man to cover events we don't know about," he pointed out. "We should be notified well in advance of any function you would like to have photographed, so that we can assign a photographer."

The Varsity's representative was handed a list of absentee representatives, including University College, Wycliffe, Emmanuel, Forestry, Household Science, Teachers' Course, Occupational Therapy, and Physiotherapy; men's representatives from Victoria and Dentistry; the woman representative of St. Michael's College; and the men's and women's representatives of both graduating Medical classes.

Report F. O. Clerc Missing Overseas

Flying Officer J. O. Clerc of the R.C.A.F. was killed during a raid on August 16, according to a report received from Germany through the International Red Cross.

Dr. Clerc was an assistant during 1939-40 in the Department of Political Economy at the University of Toronto. He also worked with the members of the French Department in Trinity College.

Flying Officer Clerc is officially listed as missing, believed killed.

OPEN EVENINGS

Gruber Leaves To Join Army

Hanus Gruber, associate conductor of the University Symphony, has relinquished his duties with the orchestra to enlist in the Canadian Army. The post left vacant by Gruber will be filled temporarily by George Hurst, 19-year-old English war guest.

Hurst has already achieved recognition as a composer and is regarded as a valuable member of the orchestra.

Rehearsals are being held as usual on Monday evenings at 7:15 in the Women's Union. Old and new members are asked to turn out in full force.

Athletic Spirit Marks Field Day

Tuesday afternoon the Faculty of Dentistry—both fellows and girls—went through the usual antics of the Annual Field Day. All of which exercise whetted their appetites for the banquet that night.

Although no records were broken the sporting spirit of the Dents showed itself. The co-operation of the Dental Nurses provided some novel events. J. Ryan and Marg Lockie proved to be tied up best in the mixed three-legged race, and Vance Hart teamed well with P. Gelverson in the wheel-barrow event.

The special contests for the nurses showed the girls' athletic skill. M. Yorick and M. Scherer were best in the women's standing broad jump. I. Scherer and J. Leatherdale in the softball throw, and M. Scherer and Fern Halsey in the 50-yd. dash.

Cohen, Yulkevitch and McDonough carried off the honours in the men's 100-yd. dash, Yulkevitch and McDonough in the men's 220. J. Turner, Kennedy and McDonough won the men's half mile. The winners of the running broad jump were Ryan and Wallace, and of the high jump, J. Turner and Vandermark. Williams and Anderson were best in the shot put.

Fifth Year won the Year Relay—440 yards. The Frosh pulled hardest in the famed tug-of-war and thus procured the huge trophy given for that event.

Camera Club Will Hear Lecture on Photography

The Annual Open Meeting of the Hart House Camera Club will be held in the Music Room of Hart House on Tuesday, Oct. 17 at 7:30 p.m. Any member of Hart House who is interested in photography is invited to attend.

Mr. Stanley Harrod, well-known Toronto photographer, will be the guest speaker. His topic will be "The Elements of Composition." To illustrate the points of his talk, Mr. Harrod will use the Hart House permanent collection of photographs.

In addition, Mr. W. B. Burwell, Secretary of Hart House, will show a number of Kodachromes of the James Bay district. Prof. A. F. Coventry, Chairman of the Camera Committee, will outline the purpose and functions of the Club.

At the conclusion of the meeting, a tour of the club rooms will be conducted for those who are interested in seeing the club's equipment and facilities.

What's On Today

V.C.F.

Mr. Stacey Woods will tell of his tour of Central and South America at the Missionary Meeting today in Room 211 of the Anatomy Building. 12:45 sharp. Lunches will be available.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

The Christian Science Organization at the University of Toronto will hold its first meeting of this season at Wymilwood this evening at 8 p.m. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

BIOLOGY CLUB

The first regular meeting of the Biology Club will be held at 7:30 sharp tonight at Wymilwood, and later at the Museum. Prof. J. R. Dymond will take the club "behind the scenes" at the Museum. The annual election of officers will take place. Everyone welcome.

Wycliffe Lit. Draws Up Plans

Wycliffe Literary Society held its opening meeting Tuesday night in the college common room, with proceedings being started by the Speech from the Throne. It was delivered by Gordon Philipotts, president and governor-general.

This speech was replied to by George Doolan, prime minister, and C. B. Bourne, leader of the opposition. H. C. Murray, B.A., was named the new speaker of the house.

Special feature of the evening was an address by Miss D. Short, newly-appointed matron of the college, who outlined some of the difficulties in running a residence under war-time conditions.

Members of the cabinet outlined plans for the coming year and reports were received from the various committees. It was decided that the annual At-Home would be held Jan. 26. M. J. Walsh, minister of education, outlined the greatly-increased social program for the term.

Ukrainian Club Desires Increased Membership

The Ukrainian Students' Club hopes to have a membership of 50 or more this year, stated Paul Ochetswa, III, Dentistry, its president, yesterday afternoon. Last year's total was below this mark.

Ochetswa said that his greatest worry now is getting in touch with the Ukrainian students in the Arts faculty, particularly the freshmen. As soon as the University Directory is issued, he plans to track down all those eligible for membership. All prospective members will be welcomed by the executive now if they will get in touch with any of them.

The next general meeting of the club will be held on Sunday, Oct. 22, in Newman Hall.

The Ukrainian Club has numerous plans for the coming year. On the social side, there will be dances throughout the year.

There are other plans which concern seven concerts which will be given in the various Ukrainian societies and churches of this city. The club has its own concert orchestra which will be one of the features of the program, along with Ukrainian folk dances.

In addition to the musical functions discussions are held on matters of interest to the Ukrainians of the city.

Physios Show Juniors Campus Social Life

Last night at the Women's Union the Physiotherapy Seniors gave their Juniors a formal introduction to the men-about-the-campus when they held open house to great hordes of Schoolmen and Meds.

The entire Faculty of Physiotherapy encompasses about 120 girls and apparently the end of the manpower shortage must be in sight for the girls were greatly outnumbered. As one disgruntled man-from-School remarked, "Never saw so many Schoolmen as wall-flowers before!"

Dancing was interrupted by the odor of fresh doughnuts. Elsie, the Borden cow, was also represented in the form of liquid refreshment.

Dents Initiation Closed By Annual Banquet

Last night the Faculty of Dentistry held their annual Banquet in honor of the freshman year, at Hunt's Savarin Hotel, marking the end of freshman initiation in Dentistry. The Banquet was inaugurated 13 years ago to replace the more violent demonstrations then prevalent.

Dean A. D. A. Mason welcomed the freshmen to a profession "the keystone of which is co-operation." Ken Parks, first year president, responded.

Mr. K. I. Carroll and Dr. J. Sheldon presented cups to the winners in the field day held yesterday afternoon at the Stadium.

The program concluded with an address by Dr. R. J. Goffrey, honorary president of the graduating class.

The banquet was followed by dancing to the music of Harry Bennington and his band.

Everything as you like it! Honey Dew food fairly sparkles with fresh quality and taste-tempting flavour. It's properly prepared and attractively served. And always kind to the budget.

PRESIDENT H. J. CODY RESIGNS

Resignation Effective June, 1945; Dr. Sydney Smith, U.C. Principal, Confirmed As President-Elect

Pares Gives First Lecture

Russia is in the curious position of being between Asia and Europe and has therefore never been able to decide to which continent she belongs—this was the statement made by Sir Bernard Pares while speaking on Russia Before the Liberation of the Serfs, in the first of a series of lectures on Russia and her problems, held yesterday in U.C.

Russia in the early part of her history was settled by Vikings, an essentially European people, Pares stated, and they, serving as a bulwark, protected the young Europe from invasion by the Tartar tribes. When finally overcome by the Tartars, the Viking kings never ceased to encourage their people in resistance movements and finally they challenged the oppressors and pushed them back.

While under Tartar rule the Russians found an autocratic government the most suited to their needs and rule of that nature became ingrained. After the Tartars had been technically beaten they were still in the position to make costly raids and a large standing army, causing heavy taxation, was necessary.

Autocratic rule, though it did not originally grow out of any feeling of divine right, was hereditary and in the time of Queen Elizabeth of England, John the Terrible, came to the throne of Russia. At the beginning of his reign he established a form of local self-government but later changed it back to the former method. Because of an unpopular rule, he was deposed and a national assembly was appointed to choose a new ruler. A member of the Romanoff family was elected. Then quarrels broke out between the nobles and a confined period was followed by a return to the former autocratic rule.

Peter the Great, a later king, realized the need for contact with Europe. He conquered Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania from Sweden in order to facilitate communication with Europe. By means of a five-year plan, said to be the model of the five-year plans used by Stalin, (Continued on page 4)

Board of Governors Accept With Regret the Resignation of University Head. Scholar and Educationist; Has Had Many Honors Conferred Upon Him; Once Preached to King and Queen in Their Private Chapel

DR. SMITH TO CONTINUE AS U.C. PRINCIPAL TO 1945

The resignation of President H. J. Cody, to take effect June 30, 1945, has been accepted with regret by the Board of Governors of the University of Toronto, Dr. Bruce Macdonald, chairman of the board, announced last night. The appointment of Dr. Sydney Smith, new principal of University College, as president-elect was confirmed, to take effect July 1, 1945. Until that time Dr. Smith will continue as principal of University College.

C.C.F. Speakers Lead Discussion

Approximately 100 students attended the C.C.F. open forum panel held last night at the Women's Union when the subject under discussion was "C.C.F. Planning on Housing, Community Planning, Health Services and Natural Resources." Professor G. M. A. Grube, president of the C.C.F. Ontario Section, led the forum and in his opening remarks stated that the party which he represents realizes that there are many types of talent and experience in all walks of life which are as yet untapped.

The C.C.F. plans to pool and consolidate this knowledge so that party plans may be criticized in the light of that pooled experience. "C.C.F. members are a cross-section of the community," Prof. Grube stated.

Outlining Canada's position with regard to natural resources, Prof. D. N. Cass-Beggs, of the University's Electrical Engineering Department and the C.C.F. authority on natural resources, stated that the conditions are much worse than is generally realized. He traced the main cause to the rapid and unplanned development of Canadian economy which private enterprise has exploited.

Prof. Cass-Beggs suggested that through reforestation, proper irrigation facilities, flood control and improved farm methods the serious situation now existing might be remedied.

Dr. T. F. Nicholson, panel authority on Health Services, said that although (Continued on page 4)

President in Last Speech Before Resignation Was Announced Stresses Importance of Education to Future Citizens

Praising the University as "a firm foundation for Canada's future," President H. J. Cody, in the last speech made before the announcement of his resignation as President of the University, last night gave the address at the 16th annual dinner of the Hart House committees.

In the Great Hall of Hart House, lit by candles and with a fire in the big grate, more than 100 members of the nine Hart House committees sat before long dinner tables and listened as the President spoke of the University "which even during the war has been throbbing with creative life in medical, scientific and educational research."

"We are now at the end of a stage—a stage which marks the beginning of a new period," he said. "Now we begin to see the light at the end of the tunnel."

"As students in this Hall, you are a nucleus representing young men and young women of the University who some day will settle down and bring light and productive efforts for the welfare of Canada."

"Hart House is a gathering place for every college, every school, every faculty of the University; it is the centre of unity and it is the unifying force. Here art, music, literature, debating have been spread to far places."

"When students from every faculty leave this great University, I am sure they will be enriched and prepared for the life that is to be. Our university education is designed to help each man become as complete a human being as possible."

"Yet," asked the President, "do you not sometimes wonder why you have come here? When you leave, you will begin to earn a living, and that will be an honest living, I am sure. If the opportunity is offered you, seize that (Continued on page 4)

University Plans Post-War Changes

The imminent expansion of the University is being planned, according to literature recently published under the authority of the Board of Governors of the University of Toronto.

Plans have been formulated for the formation in the near future of Departments of Social Welfare, and Diplomatic Representation, as well as new branches of research in Political Science and Economics, in a constantly expanding University.

This year a course in Aeronautical Engineering was inaugurated in the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering.

The Board of Governors have also drafted a $7,000,000 building expansion project to be carried out in the immediate post-war years. At least $5,000,000 of this sum is expected to be subscribed by graduates of the University and prospective benefactors. The expansion program includes a $500,000 "Women's Hart House," a Chemical Engineering Building, a Men's Residence for University College, and a million dollar heating plant to replace the present 30-year-old, inadequate installation. A $950,000 addition to the Central Library, as well as additional "laboratory space" for the students of the humanities are also planned.

NEWSFRONTS

London—Allied progress reported in battle for Antwerp and siege of Aachen. 5,000 planes bomb German oil plant in the Ruhr, northeast of Essen. Russians capture rail hub of Oradea in drive toward East Prussia.

Rome—Six hundred Germans, guns and machinery captured in Albanian area.

Allied Headquarters, New Guinea—Jap oil refinery, producer of 15 per cent of her aviation gasoline, is destroyed in Borneo.

Paris—Eisenhower states intention to push war through winter or later to defeat Germany—victory certain.

Pearl Harbor—Formosa, north of the Philippines, attacked by U.S. planes.

Booklet Outlines Expansion Project

In a brochure entitled "The University of Toronto, Its Functions and Its Needs," the Board of Governors of the University of Toronto has appealed to tens of thousands of graduates for the funds to assist in the post-war expansion program.

The booklet was prepared last spring by the Bursar of the University in collaboration with the University Solicitor, published under the authority of the Board of Governors and distributed to the alumni by mail this summer. A minimum of $5,000,000 of the $7,000,000 project must be raised by subscription. This marks the first public appeal by the University for money.

The work includes a comprehensive account of the accomplishments of the departments of science, medicine, mathematics, and psychology, and stresses the importance of the extension of this work to maintain the position of leadership in scientific research the University has held thus far. It concludes with an outline of the present trend of public financing of educational institutions which tends to supply sufficient fund to maintain the University teaching staff but does not provide for ambitious expansion projects.

EDITORIAL

"Things do not happen at all: or if they do, then they do not happen at the moment when they would have given us the fullness of delight."

Coming at a time of comparative tranquility, the resignation of Dr. H. J. Cody would have been accepted as no more than the fitting and inevitable completion of a long and glorious career. It is unfortunate that instead, the University must meet the added trial of having to change leaders in the midst of history's most turbulent stream.

Had circumstances permitted it, Dr. Cody would have been well fitted to lead us into the calmer days (we hope not too far distant) when the reconstruction of the University may be begun with undisturbed attention.

Now that that is impossible, we must congratulate ourselves on the advent of a new president whose forward-looking mind is compatible with the tide of progress that is bearing the University aggressively forward.

In the midst of the storm we have dropped a pilot who has imposed an unrelenting unity. And we will pick up a helmsman fitted to guide us through the perilous waters that lie on our course ahead.

Quo Vadis?

A poll of 300 students on what they conceive to be their business at University would likely produce 300 contrary replies. That is a gentle way of saying that students as a whole do not know where they are going, except in the sense in which Bernard Shaw knew where Rotary was going: "To Lunch."

Many of us know where we are heading as individuals: to desks, factories, farms, laboratories, libraries, and seats of learning; we are out after jobs, and have a fair idea of what kind. But the thousands of Canadian youth who have never seen a university are equally certain of their aims, though they may not be shooting quite so high. All we know, and all they know, is how we hope to earn our bread and butter.

We know one other thing; that copious blood is being spilt at this moment to purchase for us one further opportunity of saving our culture from total collapse. In a few years it will be our job to preserve the culture of the West not from external foes, but from the danger of its own inward diseases. And as university students, our minds supposedly trained, we have not reached the faintest agreement on how we ought to set about it. We are not even agreed—that is to say, as a group we are not certain—about what our culture is: in what it consists.

We should be inclined to harbour some faint distrust of a doctor preparing for a delicate life-saving operation, who not only was woolly about the technique to follow, but also about the nature of the patient's disease, and even about who the patient was. It would be more alarming still to find him engrossed in tortuous doubts as to even what a doctor was supposed to be. Yet that is our own position as surgeons of the new Europe.

Who's To Blame?

Though our case is bad, we need not altogether blame ourselves. Nor can we blame the spiritually bankrupt thirties, or the dollar-grubbing twenties. Our ancestors who landed us in the present mess were no better than we who seem unlikely to be capable of getting ourselves out. We may plead the hereditary disease of the 300 years during which our culture was made: the disease of not knowing the direction of our own drive or drift. For all that time we have been certain of only one thing; that it was to our good to increase our control over nature. Beyond that, we have suffered a fog of philosophical disagreement that threatens to stifle the culture it has so long sickened.

These are hard words for university students, who are supposed to be drinking at the very well-springs of our civilization. We have always imagined that we, at least, could be counted upon to supply the world with idealists. One might think that out of our undisturbed studies and steady debates should come the principles of civilized living. But it is obvious that we are not agreed, as we ought to be agreed. The mere fact of our constant debating—not upon external but upon fundamentals—underlines our disagreement. We are reaching a detailed knowledge of phenomena, of how one may split an atom, or peel an apple, or of what Descartes and Milton wrote, but we have not reached any bedrock of ultimate truth. If we had we should be agreed upon it. For Truth is one, error disparate and many.

It is the most desperate symptom of our peril, that many debate whether Truth exist or no.

A Possible Solution?

We have just been reading an attack on the university system, which impugns this fundamental weakness of trifling with bedrock things. Since presumably what we never learn we are not properly taught, it is phrased as an attack on professors: on the learned mind. Being a professor himself, the author at least deserves a hearing; he is Mortimer J. Adler, a foremost protagonist of the Thomistic philosophy, professor of the philosophy of law at the University of Chicago, a close friend and adviser of Chicago's militant President Hutchins, and author of the best-selling "How to Read a Book" and "How to Think about War and Peace."

It is Prof. Adler's thesis, as it is ours, that "cultural disorder is a cause and not an effect of the political and economic disturbances which affect the world today." It is his further thesis that "The structure of a modern university, with its departmental separations, and its total lack of order among specialized disciplines, represents perfectly the disunity and chaos of modern culture."

Prof. Adler's attack was first delivered as a lecture to a large and distinguished conference of his learned confreres, and most thoroughly did he scatter grapeshot among them. Roughly, he charged that professors fail through an excess of misguided tolerance: the characteristic modern virtue.

Now no one really acts as though tolerance deserved enthronement: we mean, intellectual tolerance—tolerance of ideas. When we find a man whose ideas about the rights of property are more elastic than ours, we do not parade our tolerance. We jail him for a thief. But laziness and exaggerated individualism have so ordered it that each of 320 varieties of philosophic disagreement will each one secure a polite and tolerant hearing; but no debate ensues, no active disagreement on real issues. In the academic atmosphere there is no swordplay, as there should be. "Professors," thundered Dr. Adler, "come to a conference of this sort with the intention of speaking their minds but not of changing them, with a willingness to listen but not to learn, with the kind of tolerance which delights in a variety of opinions and abominates the unanimity of agreement."

"They do not like," he went on, "to acknowledge the existence of clear-cut issues, with truth on one side and error on the other; if there were such issues, then anyone who undertook to think about them might be obliged to risk his academic reputation by coming to a definite conclusion. For another thing, the professors do not like to feel that they share even a common majority opinion with one another. The sacred individuality of each professor can be preserved only by differing. When one is in substantial agreement with what a colleague has to say, he still safeguards his freedom of opinion by saying the same thing in some other way. Most professors seem to feel that agreement, even if freely reached, violates their personal integrity."

All that was merely by way of preliminary for Dr. Adler's main issues, for which we hope to find space in a later issue. But in itself it is enough to bear thinking about.

We Think . . .

As to our own view: we agree with Dr. Adler's main contention, that in institutions dedicated to the nourishment of our culture, the roots of that culture are permitted to remain in doubt, free from the especially acrimonious debate that prefaces decision. We have not the temerity to press home his charges of exaggerated individualism and condescending tolerance among the learned, but we note at least the plausibility of his case.

Of one thing we are certain. Whether or not professors are open to conviction at the hands of their fellows, more than a few make a custom of throwing challenges to their students. It is in the heat of such debate that we students have the opportunity of making up our minds on fundamentals. And if we continue refusing to believe that fundamentals matter, if we reject the opportunity thus offered us in favour of activities more obviously germane to the post-graduation filling of our stomachs, then in a very few years what is left of our Western culture will be lost beyond snatching back.

RAZBRY WILL RUN!

Nonchalantly tossing his wind-machine into the ring, Hank Razbry, veteran Varsity staffer, last night announced his intention of running for the now-vacant principalship of University College.

"What this college needs," he stated in an early-morning interview, "is a young up-and-going principal—one who understands youth, who is hip to jive, who is alive enough to the upward current of the times to be blown whither it leads him."

As the first "Razbry for Principal" posters went up in the grey dawn, the candidate continued his epochal pronouncement. "This is no time for stagnation. U. C. needs a new head before senility sets in. Look at those old gaffers plodding about the campus—" (here he indicated a forlorn professor untangling his flapping gown on the way to prepare his 8:30 lectures). "They're out of date. Antediluvian. Too old. And I'm the one to startle them!"

Interviewed as he was draping a huge "Give Razbry the Razbry" banner from the Hart House Bell Tower, Tangent McSlidrool, Mech. IV, President of the Engineering Society, announced that he too would be in the running.

"U.C.'s principalship is the plum of any man's life," he stated. "Why not of mine? After all, it is only fair that everyone affiliated with this University, in whatever capacity, should have his turn."

An emergency meeting of the Board of Governors last night considered the proposal to permit every undergraduate to have his turn in the Principal's chair. It was understood that a minority stood out for restricting the coveted office to freshmen.

"We must have a young man—young—YOUNG—YOUNG. We cannot overdo this, gentlemen. Youth is in the air and will stay there," stated Chairman Grotz McCasche. "My proposal is to begin with the letter 'A' and install every U.C. freshman in turn for a four-hour term, in alphabetical order. Only so can we be equitable."

At press-time no word of the outcome had reached The Varsity, though rasping snores coming through the oak-paneled door persuaded reporters that the raucous caucus had not yet adjourned.

In another quarter it was suggested that more rapid change of principals might be secured by making the office tenable by, say, five people at once.

The guardians of the Dionne Quintuplets could not be reached for comment.

In this scientific age when Astronomy fathoms the far reaches of the Universe and Physics explodes the atom, when the Biologist studies organisms too small to be seen by light, and the Psychologist explores the depths of mind and soul, what is the place of Religion? Is it, as some would have it, outmoded and superfluous? Or does Religion still have a useful place in our lives?

Meds Snatch Jr. Track Title, New High Of 412 Entries

Giles and Thornton Shine in Jumping; Goering Stars in Javelin Throw; Races Keen Though Not Fast

SCHOOL A CLOSE SECOND

Sprinting, high jumping and the javelin toss highlighted the junior intramural track meet held at Varsity Stadium yesterday afternoon. Track coach Hec Phillips, assisted by Chesty Martin and Charlie Dentburn, conducted the meet in which a new record of 412 individual entries was set. This record, combined with some stylish sprinting and keen competition in all events, made the meet a successful one.

In the high jump, Giles of Forestry and Thornton of School put on a smooth show. Only after an extended chance to clear the five and a half foot cane, did Thornton win out. His winning leap climaxed the event in which six tracksters beat the 5 ft. 5 in. mark.

Goering, of Trinity, came through in the javelin event. A near-record toss of 162 feet did the trick, and if he is able to repeat this, the javelin honours should be ours in the teltrack meet with McGill next Wednesday.

In the running events, times were not very fast, but the races were keen, especially in the 100-yd., 220-yd. and the two-mile races. Buckley of St. Moke's, Parker of School, Matthews of U.C. and Harte of Vic sparked the 100-yd. show with an almost side-by-side finish. The start decided this race, as it did the 200, where Antoni of Meds just edged out Yeates of School. In the long distance events, Moull of S.P.S.

INTRAMURAL TENNIS DRAW

Times for the remaining tennis matches in both singles and doubles must be arranged by the competing players. Players will pick up balls at Athletic Office and return same along with results.

Fifth round matches in singles must be completed by Sat., Oct. 14. Fourth round matches in doubles must be completed by Mon., Oct. 16.

was top man with firsts in the half and one-mile races, and a second for the two-miler, in which James of Meds was first.

Faculty standing was obtained by awarding five, three, two and one points to the top four men in each event. Meds walked away with 47 points, taking the junior track title from School. S.P.S. was the only other high point winner, with a total of 36. Other faculties and colleges placed as follows: 3rd—Victoria, 14½ points; 4th—St. Mike's, 12 points; 5th—Trinity, 11½ points; 6th—Forestry and U.C. with P.H.E., 9 points; 8th—Dents, 4 points.

Complete results are as follows:

120-yard Hurdles—Antoni, Meds; Giles, For; Davies, Meds; Hikiichi, Vic. Time—1:59 secs.

Two-Mile — James, Meds; Moull, S.P.S.; Goering, Trin; McDonough, St. M. Time—11:13.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Phil Shackleton

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Today's column is penned by the sports editor of last year who is now known as K7307. During his sojourn here, he established himself not only as an editor, but also as a track star.)

SPORTSEDS DON'T LAST . . .

That's right, dear readers, we unfortunate hacks who fill and have filled page three, just can't stand up to the vast demands made upon our persons. One by one we fade and pass from the view of The Varsity's readers. And, of late, we're really fading fast. Of course, Selective Service isn't making the task before us any easier, and we of the sporting world are now laying siege to their Ottawa offices. But as yet the red tape-encumbered officials have given little heed to our petition that sportswriters be considered essential students.

Now there was a time when the sportswriter was believed to be a sure bet as an ex-copete. The nerve and body-wracking tension of the job, you know. But, strange to say, there are a surprising number of us who have been classified 1-A. So watch yourself, Michasiw. Don't shiver too long beneath those drizzling skies which always appear for those intramural games. Believe me, it's a toughening process. And the Mobilization Board loves it.

But let's look into the fates of the sportseeds of the last few seasons. Take 1940 for a start. Dave McIntosh slipped into the sports editor's chair. But comes springtime in '42 and what happens to Dave? That's right, he had to retire from active life and take up flying. Filling this column proved too tough for him. He's settled with the R.C.A.F. now in England.

When September stumbled into the cluttered office of The Varsity it found Dental student Bill Quigley pouring his heart's blood and local anaesthesia into page three. But Bill was wise; within a few weeks he retired to the clinic down College Street way and the job or position, whichever you chose to call it, fell on the frail shoulders of one Roger Conant.

Well, Roger did a pretty fair job at the press. I remember seeing him turning out his columns at two and three in the morning. What a faithful editor he was. "I can't let lectures interfere with my true duties to the sports fans," was his motto. But Roger lasted only a year. He was absorbed by the army and now Lieut. Conant is recovering from wounds received in France.

In the fall of '43 I became sportseeds. Only because I was the only sportswriter to return for more punishment. And, like my predecessors, did not survive the year. I, too, have gone the way of all sportseeds. (Mr. Ralston has my address if you should care to drop me a line.)

Yes, Michasiw, the position is jinxed. And we're waiting for you now. We'll expect to see you, come next examination season.

TRACKMEN—ATTENTION

All participants, and especially winners, in yesterday's junior meet are urged to turn out for the senior meet next Wednesday, which will also be a telegraphed track match between the U. of T. and McGill. Hec Phillips will give instruction each afternoon until then at Varsity Stadium. All men are eligible to enter in this coming meet.

Remember, Wednesday, Oct. 18, the senior track meet. Turn out and massacre McGill.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

Charming Beauty

Beautiful to see and to hear was the young soprano, Jarmila Novotna, guest artist at the Prom Concert last night. Andre Kostelanetz was the conductor of the orchestra.

Miss Novotna sang with sparkling case. In her group after intermission, Chere Nuit, by Bachelet, and With all my heart, from "The Great Waltz" by Strauss, her control and artistry was shown to best advantage.

Most interesting of the orchestral numbers was a group of three dances from Gayne, a ballet by Aram Khatchaturian. The first two, Dance of the Rose Girls, and Lullaby, suffered from lack of polish, but the spectacular Dance of the Sabres finished with a fine flourish.

Three movements from the familiar Grand Canyon Suite by Ferde Grofe, capably handled, concluded the program.

"The Sportswoman"

By Janice Murray

AS WE HAVE SEEN IT . . .

The baseball should be more than anyone dared to dream. St. Mike's team was out for a practice t'other day and they will have a really flashy gang by the time their first game comes up. U.C. and St. Hilda's came out right after for a practice against each other, and the results surprised even U.C., or especially U.C. There were enough girls out to make an "A" and a "B" team of the Royal College, and the new "B" team was there and then incorporated into the schedule to replace the defunct School team. School just couldn't raise enough players and even a joint baseball team with Meds is a feat for them in view of heavy time-tables and few girls. So on the schedule all places reading "School" should now read U.C. B. The meeting tomorrow of baseball reps is really important as it seems the schedule may need slight revision, and practice sheets must be handed to the managers.

It's at St. Hilda's, in the Common Room, at 4:30 p.m.

RUMOURS AND MORE RUMOURS . . .

Up at the Medical Office again (that again) between being pushed and pounded by doctors and more doctors we found out something that should relieve a number of minds. Some gals have been saying that A-1 is the only category allowed to play basketball. This is NOT true. A little thought, we were told, would tell us that there are very few people in this A-1 group. So if you get an A-2 you may still play the game unless a physical defect, like a busted knee-cap or some other little flaw in your make-up, is such as to stop you by the laws of common sense. In any case, girls, the doctors will tell you if you can't play. If they didn't say anything it is fairly certain that you can go out with your team—even for rugby.

A ROBIN HOOD IN OUR MIDST?

The little notice re archery which appeared in yesterday's Varsity should be very acceptable to those who know any little thing about the sport. Remember it starts Saturday, Oct. 14 at 10:30, in the Stadium.

ROUND-UP . . .

Tennis seems to be getting into the final stages at all the Colleges. U.C. reports that they are in the finals of their bout, while action around Vic and St. Hilda's looks the same.

The basketball practice schedule is now appearing, so that you girls who are playing will have to go in training, and plan to cut out that extra flag, and get to sleep early. This advice, if followed, would be a manager's dream, but as far as it goes it's just a suggestion! . . . We know.

SPORTS NOTICE

U.C. SOCCER—

All those interested should meet at 4 p.m. today in the Junior Common Room in U.C. Practice to be held following meeting. The following must attend: H. Kreisel, C. Harris, J. Blackstone, L. Fox, R. Pershad, L. Sachs, H. Fingold, S. Jourard, E. Kruh, S. Sone, K. Rothfels, J. Rafelman, S. Campbell, J. Biciweiss.

COMING EVENTS

SUNDAY, OCT. 15—

10 a.m.—Rev. Wilfred Dwyer, C.S.B., will speak Sunday at the 10 a.m. mass on some phase of Cardinal Newman's life. There will be Exposition all day and Benediction at 8 p.m. Sunday night.

TUESDAY, OCT. 17—

8:30 p.m.—The opening meeting of the Victoria College Classics Club to be held in Wynilwood. Professor DeWitt will speak on "The Purple Monkey."

TUESDAY, OCT. 17—

Be sure to attend the hard-time party at Newman Club Tuesday evening.

Great Demand Shown For Evening Classes

Evening classes this year are definitely popular, if enrolment gives any indication, according to the Department of University Extension. Approximately 5,000 students are enrolled in Extension Courses and hundreds of late applicants were turned away.

The majority of classes were filled long before the opening lecture. So great was the demand that second groups were required for the courses in Music Appreciation, Interior Decorating, and English Voice, Speech and Diction.

The courses which filled up the quickest were Journalism, Authorship, Private Secretaries, Industrial and Business Organization, Psychology and Spanish.

Fine Art, Russian Literature and Sociology are among the new courses being given this year. The Department names Chinese as the most interesting subject. A full speaking knowledge of the language is not the goal set by the instruction.

SUNDAY, OCT. 15

Forestry Faculty
For UBC Students

Vancouver—(CUP)—Approval of a proposed motion to establish a Faculty of Forestry at the University of British Columbia has been given by the university's Forestry Club. A committee has been set up by the club for the purpose of investigating the possibilities of the creation of such a faculty.

Although courses in Forestry may be taken in combination with other subjects no straight Forestry course is given. In an editorial written by members of the Forestry Club and published in The Ubyesey, the University of British Columbia's bi-weekly newspaper, the Forestry curriculum is said to be inadequate.

"The present curriculum and number of instructors at the University of B.C.," it states, "are inadequate to maintain the high standard of qualification in the science of forestry which is appropriate to graduation in the University of a province whose most important natural resource is the forest."

McGill Begins Course
In Local Government

Montreal—(CUP)—Principal James announced last Friday that a new course in "Municipal Government in Canada" has been inaugurated at McGill with lectures starting this week.

The course is open to undergraduate students in the third and fourth years and also to municipal officers and others from the business community who wish to take it as part-time students.

Dr. James said that we have not in the past paid enough attention to problems of local government which have too often been overshadowed by those of national politics. It is vitally important, he said, for all citizens as well as for the elected officers of municipalities and counties to recognize that local government is the basic foundation of economic and social welfare throughout the Dominion.

opportunity to enter into the service of the state."

The President pointed at the gilt-lettered words on top of the oak paneling in Great Hall, and he declared: "These words were written 300 years ago this coming November by John Milton, and they were taken from his 'Areopagitica' declaring for freedom of speech."

"It is heart-warming to know," the President said, "that here in the heart of the University we have this classical eulogy on a freedom which we are all prepared to preserve at any cost."

He extended a welcome to Warden J. B. Bickerstaff, returning to Hart House after working in England with General A. G. L. McNaughton since May, 1940.

Chinese Lectures
Inaugurated Today

Starting today, a series of lectures on the subject, China Past and Present, open to the public, will be given in the Royal Ontario Museum. Bishop William C. White, Director of the School of Chinese Studies, will give the lectures.

The School of Chinese Studies was begun only last year and although the attendance is small, it ranges from high school graduates to prospective Ph.D.'s.

The lectures will be given every Friday from 4 to 4:50 p.m. until April 13. The course is divided into two sections, the first on "The Ancient Past" which ends December 8, and the second on "The Present Era" which begins January 5. Most of the lectures are illustrated with lantern slides.

Today's lecture, "The Birth of China," deals with the earliest known man in China, his physical type, his life, and probable contacts with other peoples.

in comparison to other countries the situation of Canadian health is good, in many respects there is room for vast improvement with regard to tuberculosis, venereal disease and maternal death rates. A survey of available medical facilities and areas where the services of doctors are most needed seems to be the logical solution to the existing conditions.

P. A. Deacon, panel authority on architecture, discussing the housing situation, stated that the recent amendment to the Housing Act was entirely unsatisfactory and that there was a vital need for 320,000 houses for those in the lower income brackets, while only 25,000 are available.

He states that the C.C.F. realizes that the job of the Dominion Government is to co-ordinate and financially assist the provincial housing plans which are developed by the individual communities.

Stacey Woods
Addresses V.C.F.

Mr. Stacey Woods, guest speaker of the V.C.F., opened his address yesterday with the quotation, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not, shall be damned." Mr. Woods, who is the General Secretary of the Intervarsity Christian Fellowship for North America, has recently returned from a trip to Latin America. His lecture was the first of those scheduled for this year's program.

Mr. Woods described some of the scholastic conditions in Central America. The high schools continue until what would correspond to our first and second years of university, while any further training is in vocation, medicine, engineering and so on. The students there are extremely poor and most have burdensome business positions to handle while going to school, he said.

They are very interested in politics and economics, and although they are nominally Roman Catholic, they have no vital connection with the church, he stated.

In conclusion, Mr. Woods expressed the belief that this lack of religious desire is caused by lack of conviction on the part of Christians as a whole, and that the only way that a change in this attitude could be effected would be for several of our students to enrol in their universities each year and live among them. It is hoped that in the near future, hostels will be opened to carry on as residences for our students, he said.

Aykroyd Stresses
Demand for Donors

At the first meeting of the Blood Donor Committee, held in U.C. yesterday, President Peter Aykroyd, IV S.P.S., stressed the importance of the committee's work in the 1944-45 drive. He pointed out that the clinic at 99 St. George was capable of taking 180 people a day, and that enrolment was not complete.

There are 4,000 students on the campus, he said, and if 1,000 of this number could be organized into an effective body of donors, an objective would be obtained.

Blood is still urgently needed by the armed forces and although most students are willing to give blood, they adopt a shiftless attitude to their appointment, Aykroyd said. This year the committee hopes to obtain the full co-operation of the student body in the setting-up of an efficient group to perform this war service.

Trinity Concerts
To Recommence

The Trinity Sunday Evening Concerts will recommence this week for the new season. The first of the series of new seven musicals will be held in Strachan Hall, Sunday, Oct. 15, at 9 p.m. Students and friends of Trinity and St. Hilda's are invited to attend.

This Sunday evening the Hart House String Quartet will present a program of Chamber Music. The artists are: James Levey, first violin; Henry Milligan, second violin; Cyril Glyde, viola; Boris Hambourg, cello. The concert will begin with Schubert's Quartet in E Flat, Opus 125, No. 1, including the Allegro Moderato, Scherzo (prestissimo), Adagio, and Allegro. This will be followed by Suite in the Olden Style by Waldo Warner, composed of Bourée and Chorale, and the Introduction and Gigue. The last number is McEwen's Dhn Loch and Red Murdoch.

Outlines Plans

The Christian Science Organization held its first meeting Thursday night at Wymilwood. The visitors were received by Ken Young, the president, and Ann Annhenson, the vice-president. Mary Jane Tress, secretary, and Bob Whitton, treasurer, helped officiate.

"Of course we have quite a few social activities too during the year. We had an opening tea last week," said Ken Young. "The main emphasis is naturally on our testimonial meetings that we shall hold every second Thursday of the month. We don't know where yet, but presumably they will be held here in Wymilwood."

Anybody interested in the Christian Science Organization is asked by the executive to watch for announcements in the churches or The Varsity. Freshmen are doubly welcome.

Peter inaugurated many European reforms. Before his death he made a law saying that the monarchy was not hereditary and that every ruler should nominate his successor. He died before he could name his heir.

Years later a descendant of Peter's came to the throne in the person of Catherine the Great. In her rule the final partition of Poland took place. The Polish constitution was undoubtedly the worst ever seen in Europe. Only the nobles had rights and the Polish state carried on feudalism longer than any other country in Europe.

Russian serfs were tied to the land and were barterable goods. Their freedom was not accomplished until a relatively late date.

McNaughton Stresses
Postwar Education

Montreal—(CUP)—Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton, speaking over a nationwide radio network at the McGill Founder's Day dinner given by the Graduate Society, stressed the value of education in the postwar period.

"The young men and women in our armed forces today," said Gen. McNaughton, "are conscious of their need for education—they are very serious in their intent to equip themselves for their careers in the postwar world and they are looking to the schools and universities in Canada to give them what they need."

"Thus opens up before us the most wonderful opportunity for progress in education and opportunity not only to serve the men and women who have served us, but also to build up the organization and facilities to serve the generations which will come after."

In an interview with the McGill Daily later, Gen. McNaughton, himself a McGill graduate, stated that people who were trained at McGill were quite prepared to put down the pen and take up the sword whenever their country or civilization was challenged.

Referring to McGill's recent fall convocation, he said that he had been glad to see so many graduates in Medicine and Dentistry.

"They will find an urgent need and we can use them all," he stated.

OPEN EVENINGS

Past And Present

When The University of King's College was opened in 1843, its founders expressed the hope that the institution would pattern itself after the European Halls of Learning, under the guidance of successive generations. Intellectual, rather than material enterprise, was the keynote emphasized by these fathers of The University. Intellectual pre-eminence was not to be merely a transient episode in institutional growth; it was to be a veritable blueprint, subject to change only when the whole academic structure was altered.

The passage of a century, however, has evidenced the sound maturity of The University of Toronto in this respect. While other Universities have succumbed to the era of beneficence in stressing the erection of buildings rather than the quality of their content, our campus has to the present time followed a comparatively wise course. It is commendable that public sentiment, which seems to notice the physical rather than the intellectual wants of man, has not maintained sway over the administration of The University.

Adam Smith, the great economist, has asked "Have public endowments contributed to encourage the diligence and to improve the abilities of the teachers? Have they contributed in general to promote the end of their institutions?" Such a query implies that the proper province of endowments should be the intellectual interests of the student.

In the matter of endowments, a statement of Dr. Johnson's is extremely relevant. He said that the decision of the present must be based on past experience and future probability. A founder should realize that his gift will last forever. Very often the future is sure to manifest fundamental social changes which will affect the donation. Elasticity in the stipulations of such a philanthropic foundation will provide for the future rather than causing the present to be perpetuated.

Future

Much student discussion has been heard recently regarding the demand for a Women's Hart House on the post-war campus. That adequate facilities must be provided for women's athletics and recreation passes without dispute, but the advisability of a Women's Hart House is questionable.

In recent years progressive colleges have moved steadily toward co-education. This movement is based on sound knowledge of human relationships and has led steadily toward an improved social structure. Both McGill University and the University of Chicago have adopted co-educational recreation centres.

To our knowledge, the only places on this campus where students of both sexes may gather to talk are the restaurants. And when co-educational meetings are to be held, a search has to be made for special facilities, a women's residence usually being the solution.

To have a co-educational campus centre may seem a radical move that cannot be made at this time. Yet this is an institution founded for the dissemination of human knowledge so that people may become finer and more useful citizens. What could be more sound than to promote a better and fuller understanding between men and women? The University of Toronto can help accomplish this end by establishing a co-educational recreation centre, either in conjunction with the existing facilities or apart from them in the post-war construction.

Tantalum, Skull-Patching Metal, Owes Much to Toronto Research

Dr. Eric Linell, Professor of Neuro-pathology at the Banting Institute, said in a recent interview, "Tantalum has recently proved fairly successful in surgery in replacing lost portions of the skull, ears, nose and other parts of the body."

He stated that for some time doctors have been looking for a material which would cause less irritation to the tissues than silver, platinum and steel previously used.

This heavy grey material causes no bodily harm and is easily moulded. It can be drawn into fine wire and formed into shapes corresponding to and replacing bony substances lost from the human head and other parts of the body. The wires can be drawn so fine that the surgeon feels for them rather than sees them.

Tantalum owes some of its success to research by Toronto University staff members, Capt. Norman C. De-larue, now overseas, Dr. Eric A. Linell and Dr. Kenneth G. McKenzie. The three Toronto doctors made their first report on tantalum in the August issue of the Journal of Neurosurgery.

They first experimented with 12 dogs to see if they were justified in using it on man to prevent meningo-cerebral adhesions which means the dangerous sticking together of brain tissues after an operation. "The results," said Dr. Linell, "were satisfactory in only seven out of twelve cases. And the search for the ideal material is still going on."

The coal black ore from which tantalum is obtained comes mostly from Brazil and Western Australia. It is used extensively in aircraft construction and has only recently been released for civilian use. It was discovered by Anders Ekeberg, a Swede, in 1802 and is valued at several times the price of silver.

Cody Shuns Chancellor Position

Free wish of Senate rather than law stipulated by retiring president as basis for Chancellorship.

REGULATION QUASHED

At a meeting of the Senate of the University of Toronto last Friday, Doctor H. J. Cody, retiring President, announced that he would be unwilling to accept the Chancellorship of the University, made vacant by the death of Sir William Mulock, on the pro tem basis established by an ordinance passed in 1939.

According to a statute passed by the Senate in 1939, if a Chancellor should die during his quadriennial term of office, that term is to be automatically completed by the University President.

Dr. Cody, who is retiring from the Presidency, to be succeeded by Dr. Sidney Smith, explained that he did not feel he could accept the office unless it were offered fully and freely by the wish of the Senate rather than by the law by which it had previously bound itself.

Following considerable discussion, the Senate made the almost unanimous decision to rescind the 1939 statute and unanimous endorsement was given to the three readings necessary for its quashing.

By the Senate regulations the nearest possible date at which the Chancellorship could be considered was at the end of thirty days following this action.

It was announced that formal notices regarding a meeting for this purpose would be issued immediately.

Cody Supports Orthodox Garb

Support of the statement made by J. B. Bickersteth, Warden of Hart House, that all students appearing in Hart House ought to wear ties and suit coats, was voiced Thursday by President H. J. Cody, speaking at the 16th annual dinner of Hart House committees.

"We owe it to the name of a university, known as great, across Canada that all students appearing on the campus will keep themselves in dignified and proper attire," Pres. Cody said, declaring that reports had come to the University Caput that male undergraduates at the University had been seen "wearing only a portion of their clothes."

The President said: "I give my support to the statement of the Warden when he urged students to appear in Hart House dressed in a presentable fashion."

(In a lead editorial published Tuesday of last week, The Varsity quoted Warden Bickersteth as "protesting against the appalling decline in the choice of clothes of the male undergraduates of this university.")

Victoria Upperclassmen Trek to Yonge St. Wilds

The combined classes of Vic. '45 and '46 met on Saturday, October 14, for their annual class hike, which took place in the "wilds" of that area north of the Yonge Street city limits.

A scavenger hunt was the main entertainment along with the usual games. A Weiner roast and refreshments followed.

Later, a dance took place at Wymilwood, the music being in the form of recorded dance selections.

Smarten Up, Men

Poll on "Walking Sunset" Shirts vs. Fashion Plates Suggests Opinion Mainly Conservative

By Loggie Klaus

Always ready to take a challenge, this Varsity representative sallied forth to uncover undergraduate ideas on the clothes question—with the following results:

The female portion of the student body exhibited their usual interest in all things pertaining to the other sex. The majority said they wanted the men on the Campus to look like MEN and not like exuberant high-school boys or refugees from a sideshow.

"Only Bing Crosby can get away with those sloppy 'walking sunsets' he calls shirts," put in Gwen Reid, a Senior in Arts.

"At the same time we don't want the men to go around looking like Fall-bearers," said Nancy Irvine, III Pass, admitting that she "rather liked men in plaid shirts."

Alice Brady of Arts believes, like Margaret Bowman of IV Physiology and Biochemistry, that men should wear what they please. "As long as they shave," said Marg and Alice—"A man's a man for 'at'."

Jean Cleak, IV Household Science, laughed and said, "Women have taken off their girdles and stockings—why shouldn't the men take off their ties?"

Josephine Burwash, a sophomore, disagrees and states, "In these serious times if a man cannot be in uniform, the least he can do is to look neat and tidy."

"Since the University is judged by outsiders mainly through its students," adds Barbara Colman, III Arts, "they should do their utmost to look presentable and preserve the dignity of this seat."

Higher War-Time Costs Cut Down 'The Varsity' Monday, Tuesday Issues

Ex-Varsity Prof Criticizes Arts

New York—Arnold S. Nash, former Professor of Political Economy at the University of Toronto, asks in the American Scholar that the colleges recognize their duty to train their students to make a living.

In an open forum discussion of "The Function of the Liberal Arts College in a Democratic Society," he asks for a rejection of the theory "which regards liberal arts as real education, and dismisses explicit training for the professions as merely vocational education."

Mr. Nash, who wants "vocational education with a difference," says, "The study of the humanities should be carried on not as an addendum to, but within the context of, and giving meaning to a student's professional studies."

John Dewey, Ernst Earnest, and Kenneth Sils, three other members in the discussion, side with Mr. Nash in demanding that the "vocational" become a part of the liberal arts curriculum. The remaining two members, Scott Buchanan and Alexander McLejolin, support an unvarying arts education for everyone.

Mr. Nash now is visiting Professor of Christian Ethics at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, Berkeley, California.

NEWSFRONTS

London—The Hungarian Government under Regent Horthy used for peace last night, as Russian armies drove across the country. The Nazis have seized control of Budapest.

Aachen—German armoured reserves were tossed back at Aachen, northeast of Aachen, in the bitter fighting since the battle for the city began.

London—Soviet troops have driven into East Prussia in Memel territory. Soviet forces have captured the port of Petsamo, cutting the Nazi sea escape route from Northern Finland.

London—More than 6,500 Allied planes raided Germany, smashing at the main supply bases back of the Siegfried Line. Duisburg and Cologne were blasted with nearly 20,000 tons of explosives.

London—The Germans announced that "The Desert Fox," Field Marshal Erwin Rommel has "died of his wounds," received when his car was strafed by Allied planes some time ago.

Universal Peace Chief Russian Wish, Sir Bernard Pares Tells Reporter

A universal peace is what Russia wants most in the post-war world, said Sir Bernard Pares, expert on Russian problems, when interviewed by The Varsity.

"It's been clear for a very long while that what Russia wants is peace," said Sir Bernard. The reason is also clear, he said. For 15 years Russia concentrated on the development of her resources. It was when she saw she was going to be attacked, and she saw it before anybody else, that she turned her attention to armaments, said Sir Bernard.

Before that the Russians, under Stalin, and through Five Year plans, set up masses of new constructions and on these things depend the living conditions of the people, he stated. During the war they have been torn down and Russia needs peace and prosperity in order to build them up again. The damage has been so great that total reconstruction will not be accomplished until long after Stalin's death.

Pares added that even if Russia wanted it, it would be virtually impossible for her to engage in further warfare. "They lost millions," he said. When questioned on what he thought would be Russia's attitude at the peace conference, Sir Bernard reiterated his remark that Russia wanted a peaceful world. "Stalin doesn't want Polish population," he stated. "It would only be an embarrassment to him and put him in wrong with other people."

He added that the Russians have always known they would be better off without the Polish minority. "The Russians see that it's senseless," he said. "It was stated in one of the most reactionary papers under the Tsar, and Stalin knows it today."

Asked about the Russo-German pact, Pares stated that it was a game of poker. "Just a poker game from start to finish," he said. "The silliest thing the Germans ever did was to invade Russia. Their idea of relations with Russia was that Russia should be completely dominated by them. We aim at partnership."

The Russians will have had more to do with the victory in Europe when it

Press costs force Students' Council to decree single-sheet paper bi-weekly; will reconsider at Christmas.

TABLOID MOOTED

Today The Varsity comes out for the first time as a two-page issue, in accordance with a decision forced upon the Students' Administrative Council Sept. 16 by its inability to meet increased printing costs on its present budget. The terms of the recommendation of the finance committee of the S.A.C. are to the effect that The Varsity be cut down to two days each week, with the possibility that the matter may be opened for further consideration at the end of December.

The Varsity budget was passed by the S.A.C. last spring, and no allowance for increased expenses could be made after the decision of the University Press was announced.

It was decided in view of the lighter volume of advertising in the Monday and Tuesday issues in the past, to try out the single sheet issue on those days.

Before the final decision to publish single sheet issues was made, two alternatives were considered by Betsy Mosbaugh, Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity, and Miss A. E. M. Parkes, Business and Advertising Manager. The first of these was to publish The Varsity as a tabloid size newspaper, but this suggestion was considered impractical because of changes that would be needed in make-up facilities.

The second alternative was to restrict publication to either three or four days a week, but it was felt that this would not provide adequate news coverage for campus events.

It is estimated that with single sheet issues two days a week from now on the total printing expenses for the year will be reduced to approximately the required sum.

According to Dr. W. J. Dunlop, Head of the University Press, the increased cost of printing is the result of generally increased expenses which took place at the Press during the 1943-44 session. This caused the Press to print The Varsity at a loss last year, he explained.

Announcement of the increase in price was made to The Varsity during the second week in August.

Blue Monday ushers the intramural athletic set into its first week of running at high gear. The preceding week saw the initial football and soccer tests but the real bulk of the schedule does not swing into action until today. Football, soccer, volleyball and the senior track meet are on the agenda. . . . Tennis enters its final stages. With a break from the weatherman, the finals in both singles and doubles should be reached by the end of the week. In singles, all seeded players have successfully dealt with any opposition and will now battle for the honours. The quarter finals places Feyerer against Lau, Bob Bell-Irving tag teaming with Morrison, Patzelak and Wade and finally Dimock and Young. Thus UC leads the field with three men in the event. . . . At last basketball practices have started gas and thus begin another and even more successful season than last year. Practices for today are: U.C. Freshies 4.30, Dental Nurses 5.30 at Lillian Massey; School-Meds 6.30, Physio 7.30 and Nurses 8.30 at O.C.E.; St. Hilda's Jrs. 7.00 and O.T. 8.00 at Little Vie. Now is your chance, you basketball enthusiasts to show your Faculty what you can do in the world of Sports—so keep this schedule in mind and COME ON OUT.

The first tournament of the year is now a thing of the past. We are speaking of the Golf tournament held last Friday on St. Andrew's links. Jean Haig, third year P.H.E., won out again with her very professional style of play although the entrants numbered (Continued on page 2) opening soccer game of the season pitted School's second squad against Wycliffe and after a hectic struggle the players walked off the field with the scoreboard reading 0-0. . . . The St. Mike's football team only accented the soft touch they received when they were placed in the weakest group. The Gauls handily trounced Trinity by the score of 17-5. In a league where scores never reach into double figures and seldom above one touchdown, the Irish far outclass anything bracketed with them. However, here it is not the case of the luck of the Irish but rather the ease of fast talking of committee member Mancini. . . . In a Saturday morning scrimmage, UC swamped Vic by an 18-5 score. The football machine from the Royal College found no opposition in the flashily-clad team and hemmed them inside their forty-yard line for almost the complete game. Here the case was of one team being too weak rather than the winner being too strong.

33—the largest turnout ever! All those who played in the tournament should plan to be at the Golf Tea to be held at 4.30 today in the Women's Union. The rest of the gang will be there so you can talk over your shots, enjoy the tea, hear the announcement about the runners-up and see the presentation of the Cup and the other awards. Betty Rolfs, curator of Golf, has asked us to convey her thanks for a marvelous tournament. Thanks, gals!

All U.C. city bowlers please note: Come to Mulock House between 1-5 today, with a dollar, to buy your cards for the Midtown Alleys. Judy Henderson will be there to see that you are taken care of and started on the trail of fun at Bowling.

The final Baseball meeting was held on Friday and Jan Murray has informed us that unfortunately the schedule must stand and no new entries will be accepted.

Baseball, that all-important fall activity, begins today also. The first round will be played at 4.30 p.m. P.H.E. A team vs. Vic A at Trinity Field, and P.H.E. B team vs. Vic B at Little Vic. Further games will be listed in the next issue. Don't miss this important schedule.

H. H. Art Classes Begin Thursday

Beginning this Thursday, a weekly art class will be held at Hart House for male undergraduates who are interested in taking instruction in drawing and painting. The classes will be under the direction of Mr. Cavin Atkins, who is a member of the staff of the Fine Art department.

In an interview with The Varsity Mr. Atkins expressed the hope of enrolling 35 to 40 students in the initial class, with a view of retaining a percentage. Mr. Atkins also mentioned the possibility of starting craft classes at some later date. Work at these classes would include carving, etching, linoleum engraving, and perhaps some modelling in clay.

All male undergraduates interested in this course should turn out this Thursday at 7.30 p.m. at the Hart House Art Gallery. Classes will be held weekly at the same time and place.

SPORTS NOTICE

A practice of the UC soccer team will be held today at 4 p.m. Boots and sweaters will be issued to the players chosen after the practice. Everyone out.

out saying, the biggest thing in the world's economic aid for the next 50 years, Sir Bernard believes, will be the development of Siberia.

Questioned on the socialistic legislation passed by the British Parliament recently, Sir Bernard stated that the corporate way of life for people living among conditions of war comes almost of necessity. "England," he said, "has had more casualties on the inside than she has on the front. You couldn't let all the people starve in order that competition should be free and nothing has been handled better in England than the settlement of the two most important questions—taxes and food. England cannot return to open competition immediately. She has to get up again, and the same corporate effort that was put into the making of shells will now be put into the production of necessities for community life."

This does not mean that England is no longer an individualistic country, Sir Bernard added. "No nation is more individualistic than the English," he stated with emphasis.

"I entirely disagree," he said, "with the theory that Russia is all communistic and that the rest of us are all capitalistic. What is going on all over the world in different ways is the grafting of socialism onto a capitalistic world."

More About Clothes

The editorial appearing in The Varsity of Tuesday last concerning the dress of male students on the Toronto campus has roused considerable controversy. For the past week The Varsity has been deluged with correspondence on the subject, stating opinions both pro and con. Perhaps too much importance has been placed on such a trivial question, especially in this time of national crisis, but the interest to which the matter has given rise seems to indicate that the students do continue to think about such things.

Today we are publishing two letters, each expressing a different shade of opinion. Most of our correspondents have taken a great deal of trouble to point out that they always dress in the manner approved of by the Caput of the University, and Mr. Bickersteth, i.e. in collar, tie, and suit coat, but are taking up the quarrel as a matter of principle. They infer that the fundamental right of man to say, do, and dress as he pleases within the law is at stake. The Varsity did not intend any such inference, but merely wished to bring the matter to the attention of the students.

Many of the men writing letters condemning The Varsity for its stand, place the question, "Who decides what is good taste and what is not?" As in most other times, popular opinion holds sway in this case. It must be remembered that a university is not just a glorified high school, but is an elemental part of the mature life of the country. By virtue of this fact, we should conform to its standards.

Correspondence

Editor, The Varsity.

Dear Sir,

AN ANSWER TO WALTER J. MACNEILL

Emily Post is all washed up,
And chivalry is through,
What's good enough for Hobo Joe
Is good enough for you.

Roll up your sleeves, take off your coat.
You can't be a square!
My man, don't have brains and manners, too;
Eat in your underwear!

Down with Tip Top, down with Provan!
Down with coats and vests!
Do we prefer such icky things
To broad and hairy chests?

Don't wash, don't shave, don't comb your hair;
Look well on no account.
What matters it what others think?
For brains are all that count.

So here's the Hart House order;
Confirm it if you feel.
As for me, I'll wear a collar—
And nuts to you, MacNeill!!

Ross Davidson, III S.P.S.

Editor, The Varsity.

Dear Sir,

The title of your editorial, "Clothes Make the Man," led me to believe that the article would contain material of a humorous nature. As I commenced to read it, it seemed to me more deserving of space in the third column of page two* than in the position of leading editorial. However, when I had finished my examination of its contents, my amusement had turned to amazement that The Varsity, supposed to be the "undergraduate" newspaper, could be so out of touch with student opinion on this campus.

Several grave charges are made. Sweater-wearing students are placed in the position of being either financial fools or selfish snooty alics "ugly in the sight of other people." Such a sweeping generalization is open to question on both counts.

It seems to me that we need no Gauleiter in charge of clothes. It is also my opinion that the wearing of sweaters at this University is not in poor taste. I must admit that I wear a tie and suit-coat myself, but I refuse to admit the right of The Varsity to tell—or advise—me to do so. Nor do I like the suggestion that one reason for doing so is to increase my prestige.

Did The Varsity campaign against short hair for women? Does it realize that the bicycle is here to stay? The only thing that is certain in this world is change. Such an occurrence would be welcome if the editorial writers intend to persist in acting as a balm to those who are not undergraduates.

Gil Wakely (IV Trinity).

*We resent that.—Cattor.

Sons O' Fun

Royal Alexandra

Commencing with the antics and bull-dozing of Head Usher, Al Ganz, and continuing until the curtain dropped on the romantic Finlay, Olsen and Johnson's laughed-packed "Sons O' Fun" kept a capacity house rocking with mirth and madness at the Royal Alexandra Theatre last night.

The skits and musical interludes were entertaining in themselves, but the high spots of the evening were lurid forth both literally and figuratively not only by Fitchmen but also by volunteers and draftees from the audience. These hilarious moments overshadowed by far the conventional and more precise stagings.

As action skipped from stage to balcony and from aisle to gallery, suspense became the keynote, coupled with slap-

Don Cossacks

Massey Hall

With but a flick of his finger or an expressive lift of his eyebrow, Serge Jaroff, diminutive and dynamic leader of the Don Cossack Male Chorus, conducted his twenty-six giants through an exceptionally brilliant programme of sacred and secular Russian music.

The songs varied from the difficult, yet tremendously impressive Gospody Pomiluy of Lvovsky, a religious chant, to the humorous folk-song In Praise of Raspberries arranged by Shvedoff. The audience liked best the sentimental robber song of Stenka Razin. But sentimentality did not predominate. There were laughing songs, the merry song of the Russian Fair, rhythmic soldier songs with all the punch of hard-fighting men. There were imitative songs realistically suggesting

Political Experts
Invited to Address
Local Organization

Political science club meets tonight to plan year's program. Ferguson, Plumptre and Parkinson definitely lined up.

PLAN PROJECT

The Political Science Club is holding its opening meeting tonight in Wymwood at 7.30 p.m. This meeting is to be devoted to the discussion of plans for the coming year.

Dave Goldberg, IV Pol. Sci. and Econ., and President of the Club, will explain the tentative programme for the 1944-45 session. Already, he reports, three speakers have been lined up definitely to address the club at intervals during the term.

These speakers are George Ferguson, Editor of the Winnipeg Free Press, Prof. A. F. W. Plumptre, Economic Adviser to the Canadian Legation at Washington, and Prof. J. S. Parkinson, Economic Adviser to the Wartime Prices and Trade Board.

It is planned to hold the meetings at approximately monthly intervals. The speakers will talk briefly on some aspect connected with the interests of the club members, and then answer questions on their present work.

The primary purpose of the Club, Goldberg explained, is to give the students in Political Science a clearer idea of the types of work open to them upon graduation.

A. E. Safarian and K. D. McRae, members of the executive, are to outline to the members plans for a project to be carried out during the term on a topic dealing with development possibilities of Northern Ontario.

"If the calibre of the work carried out comes up to expectations, there is every possibility that the project may prove of sufficient value to find its way to publication," he concluded.

NOTICE

Every University student is asked to make sure, at once, that his correct Toronto address and telephone number are entered upon his registration card in the office of the University Registrar, Simcoe Hall, and in the office of his College Registrar or Faculty Secretary. The University Directory is now being prepared for the press and it is of the greatest importance that all addresses and telephone numbers be correct.

NEWSFRONTS

Western Front—American forces have taken Wurzburg, completing the chain surrounding Aachen. Heavy fighting has begun north of Antwerp following the capture by Canadians of Woensdrecht on the line of escape from Walcheren Island.

Eastern Front—Bulgaria has entered actively into the war against Germany. Bulgar troops assisted in the capture of the important railroad junction of Nis, south of Belgrade. Russian forces are within 50 miles of Budapest and in Northern Finland are pursuing the German forces into Norway.

London—A new government, headed by Ferenc Szalasi, has taken over Hungary. The country is in a chaotic state. Some troops are fighting with the Germans, some continue to fight the Russians, some are fighting the anti-Nazi Partisans, and some have joined with the Partisan forces.

Pearl Harbor—Carrier-borne aircraft of the 3rd American Fleet completed two raids on Luzon and destroyed more than 100 Japanese aircraft.

Stadium New Hangar
For Exhibit Bomber

To be Studied by Navy, Engineers and Students in Aeronautical Course

The space under the bleachers at Varsity stadium may have served a variety of purposes in the past, but its present use as an airplane hangar is reported to be causing no small wonder among the students around that part of the campus. The tail of the plane's fuselage protrudes above the wall at the north-east corner of the stadium, and the wings are there too, though detached from the fuselage.

The plane is a Fairey Battle Bomber, and it has been brought to its present location largely through the efforts of Prof. Loudon, Head of the new Aeronautical Engineering course.

Primarily the plane has been obtained for use by the Navy Engineers, who will take a course in aircraft maintenance some time in the near future. But in securing the aircraft, Prof. Loudon said he had more in mind than that; the plane will remain there long after the Navy course has gone, and the students in the Aeronautical course will have the opportunity to study its structure.

To make winter work on the plane a little more pleasant, the immediate area surrounding it will be enclosed on all sides, and the room will be supplied with adequate light and heating facilities.

The Fairey Battle has been antiquated as far as the Air Force is concerned. The plane was first designed in 1933 and at the time was considered an outstanding success. But when the war started, it was found that the Battle had many blind spots in its defence, and as a result fared rather poorly in action against enemy aircraft.

Some were still in use at the Battle of Dunkirk in 1940, but soon after they were replaced by newer and faster planes. However, the Fairey Battle has been designed along modern lines, and will be used to illustrate construction problems to those in third and fourth year aeronautics.

Prof. Loudon stated that it is most important for an aeronautical engineer actually to see how construction plans are carried out and wrestle with some of the problems which cannot be foreseen during the blueprint stage. Particular attention will be paid to hydraulic design and to the operation of flaps, controls, and to their installation.

The engine mount will also be studied, as this usually presents numerous difficulties in construction and assembly.

Prof. Loudon also mentioned that a Rolls Royce Merlin and a Jacobs engine will be at the disposal of Aero students.

Birth of China
Director's Topic

Bishop Wm. C. White, Director of the School of Chinese Studies at the University, gave his first address in a series of lectures entitled "China, Past and Present," at the Royal Ontario Museum last Friday.

The Bishop dealt with three aspects of "The Birth of China," namely, life on the Asian continent, the physical environment of China, and its ancient culture.

Regarding the physical environment of China, Bishop White pointed out that China was actually shut off from the rest of the world during the early period of her history, and, said the Bishop, "This is the reason why China has carried on so permanently without having the great gaps that other civilizations, countries and peoples have had." He explained that on the east she was protected by the ocean since she had no strong naval rivals; on the north the desert and steppe regions made human life unattractive; while on the west the mountains were impassable except at certain passes familiar to us today as the humps of the Burma Road, and on the south were situated the swamp-infested jungles.

The lecture was illustrated with maps showing graphically physical, cultural and racial data.

R.C.I. Continues
Under E. Moore

The Royal Canadian Institute will continue to operate this year in a manner similar to previous years, under the presidency of E. S. Moore, M.A., Ph.D., F.R.S.C., head of the Department of Geology at the University of Toronto, and Director of the Royal Ontario Museum of Geology, it has been announced. The main purpose of the Institute is to inform the layman on scientific knowledge and research.

The fall schedule of lectures is as follows: Oct. 28, "Ontario Through Two Billion Years" (illustrated with lantern slides), by President Moore; Nov. 4, "Wings West from Florida" (with a colour film), by John H. Storer; Nov. 11, "Scientists at War," by Sir Robert Watson Watt, F.R.S.C., M.I.E.E., F.R.A.S., F.R.Met.Soc., scientific adviser to the Air Ministry in London; Nov. 18, "Paracutin, Mexico's Newest Volcano," illustrated by Frederick H. Pough, B.Sc., M.Sc., Ph.D.; Nov. 25, "The Ancient and the New in Chinese Medicine," illustrated by Leslie G. Kilborn, M.A., M.D., Ph.D.; Dec. 2, "Electronics, Television, and Frequency Modulation Radio," illustrated by H. L. Sheen, B.Sc.; Dec. 9, "Plant Life in a Botanical Garden," illustrated by William J. Robbins, A.B., Sc.D., Ph.D.; the last one before Christmas, on Dec. 16, will be "The Rubber and Tire Situation—Present and Future."

Hectic Future Anticipated
By Victoria's 'Bob' Director

John Speers, Vic's Bob Director, in an interview with The Varsity yesterday confessed that he was "leaving Toronto after Wednesday night's show at the U.T.S. Auditorium, probably followed by mobs of enraged professors, sophs, freshmen and critics."

Some seventy-two years ago Robert Beare, of Victoria College, was appalled at the blood-thirsty customs of initiation, and devised a more friendly way of introducing "the green ones" into the college by organizing an evening consisting of friendly antics and even friendlier cider.

The cider has disappeared in the dim antiquity of the Bob's embryonic existence, but "the show must go on" and so, once again, this year the cast of the Bob promise an artistic treat. It will follow the traditional pattern, including burlesques on current Victoria professors, sophs, and even freshmen, songs by the Bob Quartet, and a "phenomenal Third Act."

The Bob Committee, which consists of John Speers and eight members whose names have been withheld for security reasons, have gone through a special course of "How to be funny and stay clean." They promise to present a "side-splitting, enchanting, artistic and aesthetic masterpiece."

Campus Thespians
Busy Rehearsing;
Expect Big Season

Victoria, St. Michael's and U.C. are rehearsing dramatic productions as Hart House is made available.

BIGGER, BETTER FOLLIES

There are a number of dramatic productions scheduled for the near future on the Campus that should prove a treat for all those interested in drama.

The Victoria College Dramatic Society is presenting "She Stoops to Conquer," a period play by Oliver Goldsmith. It will be staged in Hart House Nov. 10 and 11 and is being directed by Mrs. Mavor Moore.

St. Michael's is producing a comedy entitled "Murder in the Nursery," which is to be directed by Father O'Donnell and produced in Hart House late in November.

The U.C. Lit is producing its annual Follies which this year promises to be the best yet. It is to be directed by Alex Seigel and Joan Ebbels. The music, skits and novelty numbers are being taken care of by James S. MacDonald, Ben Ornstein and Alex Seigel. The Follies this year, according to Seigel, will have a bigger cast than in previous years, a bigger stage to work on and consequently bigger production numbers and will be the biggest and most entertaining show on the Campus.

The Players' Guild is presenting a modern play, "Thunder Rock," which had successful runs in London and New York and was also an English motion picture which played a short while ago in Toronto. It is to be produced and directed by Ken Peck and will be put on on Nov. 23, 24 and 25 in Hart House.

The French Club of U.C. will put on Moliere's comedy, "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme" on Nov. 11. It will be directed by Professor Anderson of the French staff.

Pares Interprets
Russian Policy

Sir Bernard Pares, historian and authority on Russia, supported Russia's territorial claims to the areas under dispute between Poland and Russia, in an address to the Canadian Club here last night. Sir Bernard is in Toronto to deliver a series of lectures on Modern Russia to University of Toronto students.

In his review of Soviet boundary questions, he supported Russian claims to Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, although he ridiculed the idea that the Soviet Union wanted to communize the outside world. Sir Bernard stated his belief that it was this solution that our government is forwarding in Moscow, referring to Churchill's current discussions with Stalin. Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania were never independent before in history, he said, and were unable to defend themselves.

Discussing Russia's interest in Asia, he said: "Russia will most certainly come into the picture before the war with Japan is over. They have more bones to pick with the Japanese than ever we have, and they will want to be at the peace table when the question is being settled."

In advocating that the great powers should have the primary responsibility of maintaining peace in the post-war world, Sir Bernard concluded that "the only way to have a permanent peace is to confine the keeping of it to those who can see that it is kept. . . . It is going to be just as big a job to keep the peace as to win the war."

"I haven't a doubt that this war has promoted individual initiative among the Russians, and that Stalin is more and more passing from a dictator to a leader of the people."

Champus Kitten

"Dammit. Where is that Cat!" shrieked Etacoin Shrdlu, Varsity linotypist at four a.m. this morning.

The night staff, in desperation, overturned tables, peeked into the linotype machines and dismantled the coke-dispensers, but there was no Cat.

"Champus, Champus, Aw, pulesse, Champus," screeched the weary nite-editor, his voice echoing across the empty campus.

In five minutes, after frantic searching, the place was a shambles. Then there was a rustling and up the slippery stairs scuttled a tiny coal black form followed by a proud and purring Cat. A dozen bleary eyes above half-a-dozen gaping jaws looked in amazement. It was Champus.

"Well, folks," Champus said, arching his back, "I heard about the small issue, so I tipped and done it."

"And who's this?" asked the night-staff, gazing at the small edition of the Cat.

"This is &*λ†β." Champus said with the fluttering of long, curling eyelashes. (Funny nobody ever noticed them before.)

"And how is Missus Champus?" the onlookers asked in chorus.

"You must mean Mister Champus," she purred cooly.

The night staff collapsed into each others' arms. "All this time and we never knew!"

MEDITABLE AND WOO

Finding &*λ†β unpronounceable, The Varsity has turned to its readers for a suitable name for the Champus Kitten.

All entries must be left in the Varsity News Room, room 42-A University College before five p.m. Wednesday.

A valuable prize will be awarded.

Music in Medicine Urged by McInnes

The first meeting for the 1944-45 season of the Medical Arts and Letters Club will be held in Wymillwood tonight from 6.45 to 8.00 p.m. The speaker, J. Campbell McInnes, will address the Club on the topic "Music in Medicine."

John Toogood, President of the Club, explained that the title is deceptive, as the substance of the talk is planned to deal with psychiatry done in the last war and in this one.

Mr. McInnes, Toogood continued, was connected with many prominent men in the last war when the psychiatric branch of the Medical Corps was just beginning.

At the time, McInnes was an officer in the Royal Flying Corps.

At present, Mr. McInnes is connected with the Department of University Extension, teaching voice culture to prospective radio announcers.

stick humour. As the house-lights dimmed, ghostly apparitions floated about the orchestra in an indescribably eerie manner.

For the second time in recent theatrical seasons, the indifferent populace of dignified Toronto were given the opportunity to loosen their collars and become one big happy family. This was especially apparent in the Mad Auction in which riot was linked with sentiment.

To say that the evening was a success would be a gross understatement after viewing the smiling, friendly faces that crowded out of the lobby after the show.

ANNE NICHOLSON

the accompaniment of the "harmushta," a Russian accordion, and a clever arrangement of Two Guitars by Shvedoff which was taken in more sensuously rubato tempo than we are accustomed to hear from an orchestral arrangement.

The ever-popular Cosack Song of the Steppes showed unexpected potentialities as an opella piece differing in harmonies from Kostelnetz's popular orchestral arrangement. The Russian use of the minor seventh instead of the major gave it a definitely Eastern flavour. Perhaps the most outstanding choral composition was one by Shvedoff based on actual texts in Ukrainian of the famous exchange of diplomatic notes in 1674 between the Turkish Sultan and the Zaporozhy Cossacks.

The clever interweaving of harmonies and rhythms made a gossamer cloak of sound, with all the richness of a four-octave range from a lyric falsetto to a throbbing bass.

The audience's enthusiasm reached its peak as the chorus accompanied two of the most agile Russian dancers Toronto has seen. Their phenomenal karzushkah made us feel actually exhausted!

The entire performance was marked by military precision and split-second timing of conductor and chorus. Their complete control of dynamics, together with their vast range of tonal colour, made a vivid impression on all their hearers.

Another abbreviated sport page. . . . Yesterday's programme pitted the football team from Junior School against that of University College. After countless delays before and during the game, the contestants walked off the gridiron with the score reading 2-1 in favour of the men from the south end of the campus. . . . The rugby displayed was fair considering the conditioning of the players and the early season but the facts surrounding the actual playing carried more than the odd beef from the spectators. The game was some thirty-five minutes late in starting due to the innocent oversight on the part of some innocent Schoolman. The helmets had been left in Hart House. School certainly do not need to employ any delaying tactics to emerge victorious from games. If this were part of the team's strategy, well, the less said the better. . . . Hec Phillips was observed doggedly pushing his athletes through his training programme. Trouble was encountered with fans at the game who insisted on crowding the cinder paths in face of approaching runners. While this adds greatly to Hec's worries, it gains the by-stander nothing. The remedy for this is very simple if only some people opened their eyes wide enough to see it. . . . Hec took time out to issue a call for participants in the forthcoming senior track meet. Everyone is eligible to enter, and the fact that results will be corresponded to McGill need not deter tracksters from entering. More about this tomorrow when the schedule will appear.

Senior Matric May be Needed

Kingston, Oct. 16.—Dr. R. C. Wallace, vice-chancellor and principal of Queen's University, told the student body at a University Day convocation marking the 103rd anniversary, that it was possible that the university would insist on senior matriculation next year as an entrance requirement.

"Today," said Dr. Wallace, "entrance is greatly restricted as compared to pre-war years. Both the science and the medical faculties are limited to only top-ranking students. A pass mark is not sufficient. There is no desire to expand the numbers; however, there is a definite need for a considerable building programme when the war is over."

Dr. Wallace continued: "Education today is on a massive scale with whole governments participating. It is imperative that you be able to think things through and come to your own conclusions. At Queen's we try to produce the tools with which you can do this."

The principal discussed the various buildings that will be erected in the near future. He particularly stressed the need for a new students' union on a co-ed basis as well as a large theatre, the latter having been requested by the department of Drama, Arts and English.

Yesterday the Baseball season opened with two hotly-contested games between P.H.E. and Vic. The Physical Edders pulled out with a win in both cases—the A team with a score of 23-22 and the B team 25-21. The games were just as close as the score indicates, which is close. By all accounts the series has started with a bang, and bids fair to be a Major sport in the years to come.

Up at St. Hilda's the University Tennis Tournament started in the sunny morn and went on till late in the still-sunny afternoon. We only saw some of the tail end of the skirmishes, but from this fleeting glance, we can recommend that all of you go up and see more. The tennis exhibited is of top-notch quality. One of the best games was that between St. Hilda's Kay Bliss and Norma Correll of Vic. After two solid hours of play Kay won the third set, and ended it all. Games such as this shouldn't be missed.

Tomorrow's tennis draw is elsewhere in this issue.

Royal College femmes are warned that there is a Baseball practice tonight at 3.00 p.m., if you can make it. Only excuse accepted will be labs, or other trifles such as a broken leg. All out, please!

For 75 Years providing LOW-COST LIFE INSURANCE

... to Canadians in all walks of life

Just 75 years ago the first Mutual Life representative began assisting his neighbours to gain the benefits of low-cost life insurance protection afforded by his Company.

Since then the Mutual Life has grown steadily and surely. Insurance protection provided for Canadians has advanced from $500,000 in 1869 to over $700,000,000 in 1944; and in the intervening years over $85,000,000 have been paid in death and disability claims, $120,000,000 in matured endowments, annuity payments, etc., and an additional $89,000,000 in dividends to Mutual Life policyholders.

At the present time 180,000 Canadian families are enjoying the benefits of low-cost life insurance in this "mutual" company.

Call a Mutual Life representative today . . . and let him help you select a policy adapted to your particular circumstances.

Professor Matthiesson To Discuss Henry James

Author of works on T. S. Eliot, professor of Harvard University, will be the guest at Alexander Lectures.

LECTURES OPEN TO PUBLIC

Professor F. O. Matthiessen of the department of Literature and History at Harvard University will be the guest speaker at the University College Alexander Lectures next week in the Hart House Theatre.

The subject this year is the principal novels of Henry James. There will be four lectures: Tuesday, October 24, "The Ambassador"; October 25, "The Wings of the Dove"; October 26, "The Golden Bowl"; October 27, "The Ivory Tower." The lectures are at 5.00 p.m., and are open to the public.

Professor Matthiessen has written one of the best-known works on T. S. Eliot, said Professor Woodhouse, of U.C. He has recently written a book on the renaissance of American literature.

The Alexander Lectureship was founded in honour of the late Professor W. J. Alexander shortly after his retirement, in 1926, from the chair of English in University College. The purpose of the lectureship is to bring to this University each year, well-known critics and scholars, said Professor Woodhouse. Some of those who have been here are Sir Herbert Grierson of the University of Edinburgh, Professor Irving Babbitt of Oxford, and Professor Garrod of Oxford.

NEWSFRONTS

London—British 2nd Army pushed forward into Vennay, eight miles from the German frontier.

Ottawa—A fleet of 200 German U-boats again menace the North Atlantic convoy lanes as two freighters were recently sunk by enemy submarines off the coast of Nova Scotia.

Pearl Harbor—The Japanese fleet, after challenging the American fleet, retired without damage.

Ottawa—Canadian and Russian governments discuss ownership of the Petsamo nickel mines. The property will likely be taken over by Russia, and compensation paid to the International Nickel Company.

Once Sports Editor of The Varsity; Now Heroically Downs Nazi Planes

Word has been received that F. O. McIntosh, former Sports Editor of The Varsity, navigated an R.C.A.F. Mosquito which destroyed eight German planes and damaged five more on an offensive patrol to the German Baltic coast on Oct. 15.

The plane ran into a flock of birds on its return from the mission, causing the only casualties during the entire trip. The Germans didn't fire a single shot at the Mosquito as it cruised over German landing fields in search of enemy aircraft.

"We went off to the German Baltic coast and visited a few airfields to try to find some Jerry aircraft to shoot up," said McIntosh. "After paying unsuccessful calls at a number of deserted airfields we came to Stargard. There were a number of aircraft dispersed about the field in tight little bunches and we made two runs across, firing our cannon as we went."

"An ME-110 and a JU-87 went up in flames and two ME-109's and an unidentified twin-engined aircraft were

Queens Campus Sets Precedent

Kingston, Oct. 16—(CUP)—Officials of the three faculty societies—Arts, Medicine, and Science—at Queen's University have announced no discharged servicemen will be compelled to undergo traditional freshmen regulations and have thereby set a precedent for Canadian camps.

The question of whether or not to exclude from the fresh regulations servicemen who are attending the university since the beginning of the present season. The problem was unique, since the number of discharged military personnel at Queen's had always been negligible. The three faculties finally decided, independently of each other, that it would be indiscreet to compel these students to undergo the usual initiation rigors.

The problem is one which is undoubtedly being faced on all other major Canadian camps, but as yet no decision in the matter has been announced. Queen's thus becomes the first university to take action in this matter.

Literary Appreciation Assisted by Classics

The first meeting of the Victoria College Classics Club was held in Wymilwood last night. President Eve Roots introduced the speaker, Professor N. W. DeWitt, honorary president of the club, who based his talk on the comic poem, "The Purple Monkey."

During the course of his speech, Prof. DeWitt pointed out the benefits of a classical education in the appreciation of literature. He mentioned also that his method of appraising "The Purple Monkey" could be applied to many of the Latin poets and illustrated his remarks with several anecdotes.

Giving a word-by-word analysis of the poem, Prof. DeWitt showed the appropriateness of each phrase and illustrated how it conformed to the poetic ideals of Aristotle.

Games and charades by the fourth, third, and second years were included in the rest of the evening's entertainment. The minutes for last spring's closing banquet were read in Latin by the former secretary, Marg. Reesor, and the meeting closed with the serving of refreshments.

badly damaged.

"Then we came to Kolberg where a whole flock of JU-88's were dispersed around the place. We went in at them with our cannon and six of them went up with terrific internal explosions and sheets of flame. Another couple were pretty badly damaged before we left."

"Not a single shot was fired at us during all these attacks, but shortly after we left Kolberg we ran into a flock of big birds. The wings and tail of the aircraft got badly knocked about and the wind-screen was covered in blood and feathers."

Graduating from Victoria College in '42, F. O. McIntosh signed up with the R.C.A.F. He received his basic training in Toronto and Malton, and arrived in England, April, 1943. After taking a course in Mosquito navigation, McIntosh went into operations last spring. He is now stationed near London.

Mary McIntosh, sister of the Canadian navigator, is in her second year at University College, and is the Assistant Managing Editor of The Varsity.

U.C. Principal Will be Speaker

Principal Sidney Smith will be the main speaker at the University College Soph-Fresh Banquet which is to be held tomorrow night at the King Edward Hotel, Ralph Shepherd, Publicity Director of the U.C. Lit., announced yesterday.

In an interview, Principal Smith said that his theme would be the singular position of University College in the furtherance of the democratic education of the undergraduate. Drawing upon his experiences in the educational field in the Maritimes, Ontario and Western Canada, Principal Smith observed that the University College student was provided with an unique opportunity "to contribute to and prepare themselves for the promotion of the national unity of Canada. There are to be found in University College various racial groups which offer each and every student the privilege of mutual education in those differing cultural heritages which eventually we hope to integrate into a colourful Canadian mosaic," he said.

"The Austrian Hitler craved for his so-called pure Germanic blood strain—he was mistaken on biological grounds and on cultural grounds. Out of the diversity of the Canadian people there can be developed a stronger Canadian national unity," emphasized Dr. Smith.

The Banquet will be held in the Crystal Ballroom of the King Edward Hotel at 6.30 p.m. tomorrow night. Tickets may be secured between 11.30 a.m. and 1.30 p.m. in the rotunda or from members of the Lit. and W.U.A. The price is 50 cents and members of all years of U.C. are invited.

Dr. Arnold Addresses Meeting of German Club

The German Study Club of the University of Toronto held its initial meeting this evening in the theatre of the Women's Union. Frances Richardson, acting President, welcomed new members to the club and explained the wonderful opportunity it gave for practice in speaking German.

Honorary President Dr. Arnold of Victoria spoke to the club, advising all members to contribute freely their musical, dramatic and literary talents to the organization. The primary purpose of the club is to foster fluency in the German tongue but its secondary purpose of entertainment is also important. In order that the responsibility and leadership should not rest on a few shoulders alone, Dr. Arnold stressed the importance of everyone's joining in.

The lighter part of the program consisted of a sing-song led by Otto Butz, a short and lively skit "The Facts of Life" by Kurt Levy, and four German songs rendered by Gwen Mihalko.

The club members elected Frances Richardson as their president, to replace Dick Jaques who is now in the army, and then adjourned for refreshments and dancing.

SCM 'Hard Time' Party Combines Plans and Fun

At the S.C.M. "Hard Times" party held at Victoria last evening Morley Clarke, the president, outlined the plans for the year. The program includes study groups and noon-hour discussions that will be held at Alumni Hall.

Lewis Walmesley spoke briefly of his group that will study Sherman's records of the life of Christ.

A rousing sing-song, a novelty Paul Jones and refreshments were features of the party.

Ridout Heads Vic Operetta

Arrangements have been completed and rehearsals are under way for the presentation of Gilbert and Sullivan's "H.M.S. Pinafore" by the Victoria College Music Club on Dec. 8 and 9, in the Hart House Theatre. This is the club's main presentation of the year.

The musical direction is under Mr. Godfrey Ridout, of the C.B.C., and the stage manager is Mr. Geoffrey Hutton, of the Eaton Operatic Society.

Lead roles have been selected as follows: Sir Joseph Porter: Doug Thomas; Captain Corcoran: Doug Spry; Ralph: Charles Boyd; Dick Deadeye: Bill Hosack; Bos'n: Helge Hongista; Bos'n's mate: Roy Watson; Josephine: Lois Bovek; Buttercup: Betty Capes; Hebe: Gwen Mihalko.

Those selected for the chorus thus far are: Sopranos: Bobbie Clarke, Mary Curtis, Dot Dobbin, Mary Middleton, Ben MacDonald, Ruth Rackham, Phyllis Denike, Marion Cook, Ruth Vanderlip, Ingelore Wallace, Jean Seifert, Ruth Crocker, Dorothy Mansell, Betty Barr, Lois Lloyd, and Marion Patterson.

Altos: Eleanor Campbell, Isabel Morrison, Evelyn Scroggie, Grace Smith, Jean McMurchy, Sylvia Brown, Frances Richardson, Kathleen Morrison, Betty McGowan, Virginia Boske, Doris Black, Dorothy Whyte, Nancy Boyd, Carole Stone, Muriel Lawrence, Jean Gardiner, Edith Walker, Esther Burson, June Marsden, Muriel Stevenson, Isabel Scott, Gloria Smith, and Marjorie Smith.

President Doug Thomas stated that there were still many parts open for males, and urged all male students of Vie to turn out for the next rehearsal in the Chapel at 7.30 p.m. next Monday.

Hart House Sunday Concert

The first Hart House Sunday Evening Concert of the season will take place on Sunday, 22nd October, at 9 p.m. in the Great Hall. The following program will be presented by the Hart House Quartet, composed of James Levey, first violin, Henry Milligan, second violin, Cyril Glyde, viola, and Boris Hambourg, cello.

I
Quartet in D Minor, Kochel 421

II
Irish Melody (Loudonerry Air)

III
Quartet in F Major ("American")

Allotments of tickets for this concert have been given to the presidents of the various college and faculty societies for distribution. Some single tickets, admitting men only, will be available at the hall porter's desk at noon on Thursday.

Jewish Student Meeting To be Held at Union

The opening meeting of the Jewish Student Fellowship will be held tonight at 8 o'clock in the theatre of the Women's Union.

"This is the first meeting of our organization, which was formed last year to unify the contribution of Jewish students to campus life," said President Ben Orenstein, IV Political Science and Economics. "We hope that everyone will turn out to endorse our program of the coming year."

The first part of the meeting will be devoted to program plans. After members of the Executive have been introduced, reports will be given by the chairmen of the various committees. Dancing and refreshments will follow the business part of the meeting.

'Intercollegiate Sports' To Be Argued At S.P.S.

Guest Speaker Is Dr. K. Gray

The first meeting of the Law Club was called to order by the club's new president, Charles Bourne. After extending a welcome to the first year members he introduced the executive to the club: vice-president, Royce Frith; secretary-treasurer, Fred Kelsch; second year representative, Telford Georges; first year representative, Ka Jeffries. Gordon Shulberg was chosen to head the committee to arrange the annual Bar and Business Ball.

The guest speaker, K. G. Gray, Esq., K.C., M.D., introduced by Dean Kennedy, discussed "The Application of Medicine to the Treatment of the Criminal." He stressed the difference between the legal and medical approach in the treatment of the criminal. This was illustrated by the speaker when he cited the new approach the legal profession has adopted with the help of the medical profession in regard to insanity cases. The over-all standards of punishment as set out by the Criminal Code have been greatly modified due to the help of the medical profession in the treatment of the individual concerned, he said. This development in the treatment of the criminal coincided with the growth of psychiatry, he added.

Dr. Gray, at the end of his address, was questioned by his audience. He was thanked by Jim McGuinness on behalf of the Law Club. The meeting was then adjourned by the president.

Music's Powers Aid Medicine

"Music in Medicine" was the subject of Mr. J. Campbell McInnes, guest speaker at the first meeting of the Arts and Letters Club, held last night in Wymilwood. He was introduced by Jack Toogood, president of the club.

Mr. McInnes compared the doctor of today to a skilled musician, who keeps the most wonderful mechanism of all in tune. Speaking of his experiences in the last war, especially in regard to shellshock victims, he emphasized the role played by music in aiding the doctor to help these victims regain mental health.

Mr. McInnes praised the medical profession for the manner in which it pooled its information in order that the health of the country might be benefited.

The next meeting of the club on Oct. 31 will take the form of a Student Night.

Final meeting of debates club to feature the pros and cons of resumption of intercollegiate sport.

ALL STUDENTS ADMITTED

"Resolved that Intercollegiate sport should be resumed this fall," is the topic of the first S.P.S. debate to be held on Thursday at 4.30 in room 25 at the School of Practical Science.

Chairman Sally Macdonald, IV Engineering Physics, stated that the parliamentary form of debating will be utilized for the first time at School. The motion will be supported by Prime Minister Bruce Taylor, IV Mining Geology, and Don Mulholland, III Civil. The leaders of the Opposition will be Harold Wardell, III Mechanical Engineering, and Cyril Fry, II Metallurgy.

The topic was selected with a view towards stimulating thought among those interested in sport as well as debating. Sally Macdonald told The Varsity. "Although it's an old bone of contention," she said, "enough interest has been manifested on this campus to warrant its resurrection."

The debates club is to continue last year's policy of making the society a centre of discussion rather than a straight debate, she stated. It is also to represent the opinion of School on controversial campus topics.

The club plans to meet every week until April. It is the hope of the chairman that the meetings will not be confined entirely to S.P.S. but that other faculties will exchange ideas with them in interfaculty debates.

C.O.T.C. Training Hours Reduced

The following ruling regarding Military Training in the University has been issued by the Joint Services University Training Board:

"There shall be a minimum of 110 hours of intramural training during the academic year and two weeks of camp in the summer vacation. After 220 hours of intramural training in the unit in which the student is enrolled and attendance at two summer camps have been satisfactorily completed, the hours of intramural training shall be reduced by the Joint Services University Training Committees to 60 hours of intramural compulsory training in each year, but two weeks' summer camp will still be required."

Each student who considers himself to be eligible for the reduced intramural training is directed to apply to the Headquarters of the unit in which he is taking his training.

Local Campus Cannon Remain Silent; Yet Symbolize Adventurous History

There may be two vicious-looking cannon near the Observatory but that's no reason to be afraid for Hart House has never mapped out any organized plan of defence as yet. Nor has the University a military campaign in view.

According to the plaques on the guns, these cannon were on vessels sunk in Louisbourg Harbour in 1758 and were recovered from the depths in 1900.

But their history is one of high adventure. In 1899 the steamer Fabiola was engaged in salvaging a steamship sunk at the mouth of Louisbourg Harbour, Cape Breton Island, when the captain saw what appeared to be a cannon lying in a few feet of water. On searching the area, divers found several cannon and the remains of an old ship.

Later explorations revealed three more guns in that district and several more imbedded in the mud in front of the old Louisbourg fortress.

A. E. Shipley, an S.P.S. graduate, there on professional work, heard of the discovery and suggested to the University of Toronto Alumni Association that some of the cannon be purchased for the University. The Arts and S.P.S. classes of the year 1901 were enthusiastic over the idea and the plan was carried out.

In the war between England and France in 1756 only one of a French force of 12 ships escaped destruction. The frigate Prudent was set afire while aground at low tide and 140 years later her guns were found. Two of them now guard the campus.

Civilization And Us

People never tire of pointing out that, since we live in a democracy, we are entitled to the rights of democracy. Only rarely do they think of the inevitable corollary that since we live in a democracy we are obligated to perform the duties that citizenship in a democracy implies. If you were to ask the average man what his obligations to his country are, he would probably mumble hazily about casting his vote, paying his taxes as they fall due, and obeying the law of the land. In other words, he has a completely passive attitude towards the state.

If an active attitude exists at all, it is usually found only when the government adopts a measure hitting people in their most sensitive spot, their incomes. Sometimes people gather and discuss foreign policy, but all too often talk of this sort degenerates to the level of an inquiry into the ways and means by which someone of some country can get a larger share of the material things of the world. Never does one hear of a group of mature citizens gathering to consider such a topic as what is wrong with our present civilization, and what means could be employed to remedy the defects.

Yet this is one of the urgent questions of our time, as the occurrence in the past 25 years of two of the greatest slaughters in the history of mankind have conclusively proved. It is a question which no university student can shrug aside with the comment, "It doesn't concern me." With a form of government like our own, no citizen who has the capacity for intelligent thought can be excused from taking thought upon the world's problems, as well as his own.

Perhaps it is optimism and unwillingness to face the facts that leads people to think that everything will turn out perfectly in the end, yet in coming to that conclusion, they are disregarding all the evidence of recent years. Certainly it seems likely now that civilization, albeit somewhat crippled, will survive the present conflict, and the gloomy prognostications that were heard before the war of a reversion to the dark ages will not be fulfilled as a result of this war. But that does not mean that a new millennium of darkness cannot return, for science will undoubtedly continue and even accelerate its relentless advance in the construction of weapons of destruction.

As Professor C. E. M. Joad points out, perhaps in a satiric vein, but with grim truth nevertheless, as soon as mankind succeeds in unlocking the secrets of the atom, the first use it will make of the discovery will be to exterminate itself.

Cyclic Theory of Civilization

One of the most thought-provoking books to come out of the twilight years before the war was Stanley Cason's Progress and Catastrophe, which traces the story of man from the point of view of the historian-archaeologist from earliest archaeological time down to the decade before the war. Mr. Cason, in simple, factual language, runs lightly through several prehistoric periods of man, and then goes on to describe the civilizations of Sumeria, Egypt, Crete, Greece and Rome.

In proposing a theory of alternating periods of advance and eventual retrogression, Mr. Cason is not advocating anything new. Indeed, he himself shows how short and transitory has been the acceptance of the theory of continuous progress. It appeared briefly at the height of the Roman Empire, and reached another climax during the nineteenth century. Like Spengler, Mr. Cason believes we are now in a civilization in which the evidences of decline have been apparent for some time, even if we still refuse to recognize them.

Our present chaos is attributed to the perversion of science, the devoting of each new invention to purposes of war. The remedy? Mr. Cason suggests that the people who can ameliorate the situation are the educated classes—"the despised student, researcher, professor the non-political worker in science, the arts and literature.

"There," he writes, "lies the slender hope for humanity. To increase intellectual and cultural interests and to promote international rivalry in the achievements of knowledge cannot fail in the end to bring lunacy toppling to the ground, unless lunacy first brings the material world to catastrophe."

How Does This Affect Us?

This sort of theorizing is all very well, but what is to be done about it? Undoubtedly the charge of the perversion of science is true, but it would be the height of folly to conclude from this that invention must cease. By all means let science and scientific education come to their full growth, and additional measures can be taken at the same time to insure that science can be kept the slave, and not allowed to become the master, of mankind.

In our opinion it is the function of a university to perform this task by two methods. The first is to encourage young people to study the humanities and the social sciences, that a wider knowledge may result of these two fields which in many ways are practically untouched. The second is to give the scientists a general background of the Western heritage of culture, of which their specialized fields form small and sometimes isolated parts.

What is the outlook for these aims on the campus of the University of Toronto? First of all, it is obvious that scientific teaching after the war is not only going on its present scale, but will be vastly increased by the expansion program, to take care of the needs of the returning service men. Moreover, the Faculties of Medicine and Applied Science have instituted courses in the humanities and social sciences which compare roughly with those the science students have always enjoyed.

The proportional increase in the concentrated study of the humanities and social sciences is by no means assured. It is significant that of the $5,000,000 earmarked for specific expansion, not one cent is to be devoted, for example, to the construction of a new building to house the Department of Political Economy, comprising Economics, Political Science and Sociology, even though the upper floors of the present building have been condemned and are not in use.

If the subjects studied in the arts courses are going to have to fight for their very existence in the post-war world, then it is the task of every student of the humanities and social sciences to pursue his course of action with vigour, making no apologies for studying them in wartime, as long as each one can satisfy his conscience that he is justifying his absence from the battlefield in Europe by the all-out intensity of his pursuit of education. It is the further task of each student to act as a source of information on what these courses have to offer, particularly in the sphere of human understanding, reconstruction and world order, for the benefit of his fellow students in the scientific courses and the public at large.

Optical Delusion Reforms Stray Cat

"Dr. Tent, call surgery. Dr. Tent, call surgery. Important patient has just been admitted to the emergency ward. Patient in great pain. Operation is the only alternative. Report at once. Calling Dr. Tent, calling Dr. Tent..."

Down in the operating room, half-an-hour later, the patient lay beneath the white lights, writhing in agony. Her glazed eyes followed the consulting doctors, who ran in all directions around the room. The Chief-Consultant finally caught up with them and scooped them up with a butterfly net.

"Just what I wanted for my pin-ball machine," he burbled in his beard. Hastily Dr. Perry to pulled out his own personal agate collection and after a lively game the poor patient's eyes were returned to their rightful owner.

Arising from his knees, Dr. Perry barked at the nurse (she had pretty legs): "Leave us commence with the excavation."

"Tractors and scalpels, nurse... alcohol," he burped.

Another white-clad form waddled into the forum. "Who's got the dice?"

"Shhh! Please, Dr. Tent, let us remember the dignity of the medical profession. Have you your vest on or are you wearing your sunset shirt again? We are operating on the first acute-jealousy case this hospital has ever admitted."

"But where do we start cutting up?"

"It is a sad story," said Dr. Perry, gravely. "The case history shows that the patient became mentally deranged when her off-spring became phenomenally successful. Twice this week already, & $7499 has received top billing in the Half-Pint Rag. After years of starring on the editorial page (plug) the shock of playing second fiddle proved too much. Poor Champus!"

"Is her condition serious?" burped one of the nurses as she handed the doctor the alcohol.

As if in answer, Champus grunted, groaned and wheezed. "More alcohol, Doctor, please," she begged.

"The patient is improving," Dr. To whooped. "There must be some reason for this." As more alcohol was poured down her throat, the long, curling eyelashes fluttered and a spark of recognition flickered in her large blue eyes.

"Blue eyes!" shrieked the operating staff in one voice. "They were green before!"

Dr. Perry to stroked his beard with satisfaction. "That explains the amazing recovery," he said. "The green eyes are gone. No doubt the rather rough game of marbles had some effect on the Cat's eyes. You are well, Champus!"

Champus sat up, then rose and staggered happily out the door.

Interfaculty Track Meet Scheduled For Today

The annual senior interfaculty track meet is scheduled to be run off today at the Stadium commencing at 1.30. Events are to be run off every ten minutes, continuing through the afternoon.

According to track coach Hec Phillips, the expected entry will be one of the largest in recent years. He cited the record-breaking entry list in the junior event staged last week in which more than four hundred eager and aspiring athletes participated.

All medically fit men are eligible for this meet, providing that the eligibility list has been signed in the Athletic Office in Hart House.

All competitors must wear jerseys and shorts and are requested to report at the Stadium at least half an hour before their event is scheduled so that numbers may be issued to them by track attendants.

The times of the events are as follows:

- 1.30—Discus; 100 yard-heats.
- 1.50—880 yards.
- 2.10—100 yards—final.
- 2.20—High jump.
- 2.30—Low hurdles—heats.
- 2.50—Low hurdles—finals.
- 3.00—One mile; 12 pound shot.
- 3.10—220 yards—heats.
- 3.20—Broad jump.
- 3.30—220 yards—final; pole vault.
- 3.40—Javelin.
- 3.45—440 yards—heats.
- 4.00—Two miles.
- 4.15—440 yards—final.

S.P.S. Gridders Trounce Victoria

School III, with little practice but plenty of zip and fight, surprised themselves by beating Vic 16-8 in a hard-fought game at the Stadium yesterday. An unknown quantity before the game, even to their supporters, the engineers stand a good chance of making the playoffs when their players are introduced to each other.

Neither team was able to register a score in the first quarter. Hendricks of School had a decided edge in the kicking and gradually drove the Arsmen back to their own end. After the start of the second quarter, an end run by Phelan and plunges by Boyle and Evans brought play to Vic's 23-yard line. From here Hendricks kicked to W. Scott who was roused, giving School a 1-0 lead.

Vic put on a determined drive after this and passes from O'Malley to Wheeler, MacDonald and Scott gave Vic the ball on School's one-yard line. Here the engineers tightened up and held for three downs. The half-time score was still School 1—Vic 0.

Vic tightened the game on the kick-off after half-time when Hendricks was tackled behind his line. Butko intercepted a Vic forward and ran it back to Vic's 17-yard line. A plunge by Evans and a Vic offside took the ball to the three, from where Evans went over for an unconverted major, making the score 6-1. Hamilton again kicked off to Hendricks behind School's goal, and he was downed for another Vic point. The third quarter ended with the score remaining 6-2 for School.

Hendricks intercepted a Vic forward to open the third quarter and ran to the Vic 15. Plunges by Phelan and (Continued on page 4)

THE TENNIS TOURNAMENT

This year's University Tennis Tournament is rapidly drawing to a successful conclusion due to the good weather it has been getting. The semifinals should take place today, with the finals on Thursday, if all goes well. U.C. has come up with three of the four men in the singles of bringing the McEachern Cup to the Royal College this time. Last year saw it among Trinity's trophies as Mel Jones copped the coveted award and it may go there this year again by way of Lau, who is the other semifinalist.

The seeded players have lasted out well in the singles department. Feyer of Meds was number one but he dropped his match to Lau, an unseeded player, on Monday. Morrison was number two, Patzalek of Dents number three, and Young four. Wade was not seeded, but proceeded to show them their mistake yesterday by disposing of Patzalek in one of the best matches of the tournament. They played from five o'clock till dusk in three torrid sets in which both men seemed to be "on" with their shots. The sets went 6-4 for Wade, then 7-5 for Patzalek, after he was down to Wade 4-5 on games, and then 6-4 for Wade again in their last set. It was a real exhibition of tennis, and if the semifinals or final are as good, they'll make some thrilling watching for any who can get up to the St. Hilda's courts to see them. The schedule will come out on this page as soon as we can get it, or those enterprising women in the Athletic Office will give you the latest if you drop in there.

AN OLD FRIEND

Those of you who can remember the years of plenty when there was Intercollegiate Rugby to be had in the fall of each semester will no doubt be interested in this item about the whereabouts of that grand guy who used to handle the coaching of the Blues, Warren Stevens. In a chat with Mr. Griffiths the other day we found out that he is a Flight Lieutenant in the Royal Canadian Air Force attached to the medical services and is stationed in Ottawa. He is primarily concerned with the development and organization program of the convalescent training for the men of the R.C.A.F., and is doing his job well, as only he could. It was only the year before last that he was here on the campus with his conditioning classes for those taking part in the Mulock Cup games. He'll be back some day soon we hope.

A PLUG . . .

There's a debate coming off down at the south end of the campus on Thursday in Room S25 at 4:30 p.m. which we would like to see get some publicity. It is being run by the S.P.S. Debating Society under the convensorship of Chairman Sally MacDonald, and is titled "Resolved that Intercollegiate Sport should be resumed this fall." This is something in which we are all interested and is a very controversial subject around the Ontario Universities these days. Let's give them a good turnout for their tackling of this difficult topic and hear the pros and cons of what they have to offer tomorrow at 4:30.

of the tennis tournament is coming up any old day now, and the final game should be played off on Friday or Saturday, if all goes well. In today's play the field was narrowed down to eight players. Betsy Mosbaugh, U.C., defeated Vera Gilchrist, P.H.E., 8-6, 8-6; Nancy Faver defeated Rowena Smith, Vic, 6-3, 6-3; D. J. Sanders, St. H's., defeated Sally Fox, P.H.E., 4-6, 6-3, 6-3; Janet Hughes, U.C., defeated Gwen Earle, P.H.E., 6-4, 6-4; Rose Marie Cunningham defeated Cay Fowler, Vic, 6-2, 6-2; Kay Jefferies, Vic, defeated Kay McMillan, P.H.E., 6-2, 6-2; Marg Alexander, St. H's., defeated Ruth Margeson, Vic, 6-4, 6-2; and Kay Bliss, St. H's., defeated Marj Chandler, Vic, 7-5, 6-0. The games continue tomorrow.

made your appointment, and kept it, for a swimming test? Freddie Baxter has set her deadline for Friday at 5 p.m. and after that the tests are out. All of you must have had a test to gain your first year, so maybe you'd better hustle up to L.M. and make an appointment, huh? Freddie says that she may be caught at any hour in the afternoon up till 2.30 and between classes, and from 4.30 till 5.00. On Thursday morning she will be up there, too. If you can't make an appointment for this week, go up and see her, anyway, but she must see you sometime, before Friday.

From the couple of teams we have seen practising we are not going to commit ourselves about the season this year. All we will say is that the teams show promise. Vague, isn't it? This year it seems that there is a great dearth of coaches, of any kind. (Continued on page 4)

Physical Training---Men

By order of the Board of Governors each man proceeding to a Bachelor's Degree must take Physical Training during the first and second years of his attendance at the University.

First and second year students taking Military Training with the U.N.T.D., the C.O.T.C. and the U.A.S. are required to take Physical Training at regular Physical Training classes in the Gymnasium. These classes are held from 16th October to the 30th April according to the subjoined time-table. A minimum of 20 attendances is required. No more than one P.T. credit per week will be granted.

Physical Training credits not to exceed 5 in the term in which the sport operates may be obtained by participation in the following intramural team sports:

Football	Hockey
Soccer	Basketball
Lacrosse	Water Polo
Swimming League

Men exempt from Military Training and who are placed by the Health Service in University categories A, B, or D, must secure a minimum attendance of 36 Physical Training periods or 2 per week.

SWIM TEST

The Physical Training requirements include a swimming test which must be taken by all first year men, by men admitted to the second year from other universities, and by those repeating first year. If unable to swim at least 50 yards satisfactorily the student must enrol in a learn-to-swim class. Failure to observe this regulation shall prevent a student from securing standing in Physical Training.

Fall Term—P.T. classes start Oct. 16, and Dec. 16.
Spring Term—P.T. classes start Jan. 4, and Apr. 30.
Forestry students enrol in Arts classes.

NOTE.—To avoid duplication of the physical training requirements, the Athletic Association acts as the co-ordinating agency and provides facilities, equipment and a trained physical education staff to instruct and supervise the war-time physical training programme. The number of physical training credits outlined in the regulations are the minimum requirements and all men are encouraged to take daily advantage of the instructional and recreational opportunities offered in the athletic and physical training programmes.

Finally, as the Baseball schedule for the next couple of weeks appears on this page. If it should rain, the managers should get in touch with each other and call off the game. This, they tell us, is the usual procedure. Then they should break it gently to us that it has rained and the schedule will be retraced. If it should rain on Monday, and two games should be called off, well, we won't think of it. For each game there should be a report of the game handed in to the S.A.C. office. Have you all handed in a list of the players on your team?

Varsity Messenger Killed

The Varsity learned last night of the death of Gordon Robinson, former messenger boy for the Students' Administrative Council. He was in the Canadian Section, R.A.C.T.D., and went overseas exactly one year ago. He died at the age of twenty-one from wounds received in Italy.

Evans carried the ball to the 3-yard line, and from here Evans went over on a quarter sneak. Bromley failed to convert.

Vic then got back in the game. O'Malley passed to MacDonald, and he ran to School's 10-yard line. O'Malley then passed to MacDonald for a touch which W. Scott converted, making the score 11-8 for "the engineers." With two minutes to play, Butko sewed it up for School by intercepting a Vic forward and running 60 yards for a touchdown. Again School failed to convert. The game ended with the score 16-8 for School.

Evans, Hendricks, Butko and Bromley starred for the winners. For Vic, O'Malley, Scott and Peterson turned in good efforts.

Montreal, as the Great Poet once said, is a quaint place. And besides being a city where the UNNRA people and night club proprietors set up their household gods, it's also a place bristling with Hither items.

Visiting there last weekend, for instance, we heard one from an undergrad, who claims he doesn't know whether the story befell at McGill or U. de Montreal or Sir George William College, but he's sure it did happen.

Well, it seems that at one of the above colleges, whichever your choice is, it's a rule that if the professor doesn't arrive 15 minutes after the lecture was supposed to have begun, then the students are permitted to leave en masse—assuming that the prof is abiding by the absent-mindedness usually accredited to the professional gene, Montrealeish or otherwise.

One day IT happened. The pupils found the prof's mortar-board sitting on his desk, but no sign of the prof. Fifteen minutes. Still no prof. So they all walked out, muttering deprecating remarks.

When the prof arrived next day on time, he sternly admonished his 50 students for walking out on him, to which his loving pupils protested: "But you, sir, were 15 minutes late."

"But," he said with dignity, "I left my hat behind as a sign you should wait. In future, whenever you see my hat lying on the desk, you'll know I have been detained."

Next day the prof arrived in time again but was astonished to find none of his pupils there. On each of the 50 desks, though, he could see a student's hat.

Despite what the nasty politicians say, we found that Montreal women are not one whit different from the Toronto breed. While on a street-car there, (which, incidentally, have signs on the wall warning: Défense de cracher), we observed two French-Canadian girls reading the poor man's New Yorker magazine, True Confessions.

Finally, one black-haired beauty leaned over from her copy and asked her companion, "Comment est-ce que votre romance finit?"

"Ah," exulted the other, "Okay et merveilleux. L'homme se marie à la femme et toute la chose finit avec une wonderful marriage."

TOUSJOURS LA FEMME TOUSJOURS

Like a decent and law-abiding visiting fireman, we dropped into an English lecture at Sir George William College, and after being introduced to the professor, a genial gen, listened to his spiel.

Speaking of Miltonian literature, he suddenly broke off from his theme and said: "You know, I never did like the edicts of Oliver Cromwell. He was the sort of man who expected all the children to wear gloomy faces and gloomy minds on Sunday . . ."

At this point a voice sounded from the class-room, and to this day we are not sure whether it came from the prof or one of the students but we are sure that it declared: "... Yeah! Just like the Sundays in Toronto."

Too true. True, too.

Omitted letter dept.:

We don't know whether the good burghers of the bailiwick of Montreal have a chronic distaste for Toronto, but hanging on St. Catherine Street before a building which looked like a bank was a battered old sign which read: "The Ban of Toronto."

Montreal has its domestic servant shortage, too. A male student from one of the colleges there complained that the maid at his home was so independent that she was beginning to lay down the law, saying she would do no more laundry if the above-mentioned student continued to leave LIPSTICK ON HIS HANDKERCHIEF.

Jewish Student Fellowship To Unite Student Groups

Organization is the result of much felt need for a non-partisan representation of the Jewish students on campus.

EXTENSIVE PROGRAM

Over two hundred students were present at the first meeting of the newly organized Jewish Student Fellowship. The meeting was officially opened by President Ben Orenstein, who outlined the aims of the organization.

"The Fellowship was organized to provide a central, non-partisan group representative of the large Jewish student body on the campus. With such a variety of courses, personal opinion, political outlook and individual belief in the make-up of the Jewish student body, the need was felt last year for more unification, and the fellowship is the result."

"An extensive program of activities is planned, which, it is hoped, will be influential in uniting the students, not only of the Jewish faith, but of every other group on the campus. Our organization will be working in conjunction with the Ontario Youth Commission, which has been formed to receive, develop, and support the aims of all youth in the country."

"Regardless of the ethnic or religious cults from which the young people come," President Orenstein continued, "what they all want to see in their mature life is security, both financial and cultural, mutual understanding, and a chance to express themselves to the limit of their capabilities without the stigmas of discrimination to retard all of this."

Mr. Orenstein concluded his occupation of the chair with an adaptation on Principal Sidney Smith's views, stated in yesterday's Varsity: "From the various racial groups to be found throughout the University as a whole, the Jewish Student Fellowship will devote itself to the integration of a colourful mosaic."

Miss Phyllis Cohen, on the educational and cultural committee, outlined the planned program which her department is going to promote. "There will be musicals, literary evenings, and political discussions with prominent speakers and artists which will prove of interest and benefit to all the music-lovers, and lovers of discussion on the campus. By holding such meetings, we hope to encourage understanding among the diverse peoples, standing with mutual appreciation of interests common to us all," Miss Cohen said.

Harold Minden, one of the social convener, told of three main social events to be held. They include a dance on Dec. 8, a Talent Revue at a later date, which will utilize the abilities of students in every faculty, and then, on March 10, there will be a "Spring Formal."

The other committees are being kept busy performing their respective functions—the Public Relations Committee is busy arranging inter-organization meetings to help unify the campus as a whole, and the Publicity Department notifies members not only of meetings, but also of the progress that has been effected by every other Youth Organization with which the Fellowship has contact.

The meeting concluded with refreshments and music provided for dancing.

VARSITY REPORTERS

There will be a news lecture on Friday at 12:30 in room 37 U.C. All those interested in learning the fundamentals of news writing are asked to come.

Prof. C. R. Myers Back at U. of T.

President H. J. Cody announces that Professor C. R. Myers has been released from his appointment in the Air Ministry in order to resume his duties with the University. The Secretary of Air Ministry in Whitehall, London, England, has written to President Cody as follows: "The Council desires me to say that during his service with the Air Ministry Professor Myers has made a most valuable scientific contribution to the work of selecting and training Royal Air Force personnel, particularly in the air-craft field, and I am to convey to you an expression of the Council's warm appreciation of your generosity in placing his services at their disposal for so long a period."

On his return to the University, Dr. Myers was immediately taken over by the Ontario Department of Health, where he is to render special service during the present session.

Ex-Servicemen's Club To be Formed at M'Gill

Montreal—(CUP)—A club for ex-servicemen is being formed on the McGill campus, the McGill Daily reports.

The purpose of the club, the committee responsible for its formation has announced, is to aid the veterans of the present war who "are being seen in ever-increasing numbers on the McGill campus."

"Their problems are unique," states the committee, "and there has been a growing desire to get together for mutual benefit. It is felt that with the prospect of return to the university of other ex-servicemen, a group already acquainted with their problems will be of assistance to them."

Medical Faculty Planned for U.B.C.

Vancouver—(CUP)—Further support for the founding of a medical faculty at the University of British Columbia has come from Dr. Harris McPhedran, President of the Canadian Medical Association and assistant professor of Medicine at the University of Toronto. Speaking at the annual convention of the B.C. Medical Association, he said that there was no need for students to go away to study medicine. "You have the men and materials here for a faculty of medicine and I hope to hear one is started shortly," he said.

The Association discussed establishment of a medical faculty at U.B.C. and members all agreed that one was necessary. British Columbia is one of the few provinces without a medical faculty. Dr. McPhedran said he understands that Saskatchewan is planning one for its university.

Research Head Is New Governor

Lt. Col. W. E. Phillips, a graduate of the University of Toronto in 1913, has been appointed by the Ontario government to the Board of Governors of the University.

Recently appointed Director of the Turbo Research by Ottawa, Colonel Phillips is now engaged in planning the manufacture of the jet-propulsion plane in Canada. He is also in charge of the government-owned war plant, Research Enterprises, and is associated with the Engineering Institution of Canada and the Canadian Institute of Chemistry.

His appointment to the Board of Governors fills the vacancy caused by the death of E. Gordon Osler.

Lieut. H. Pedlar Is Killed in Action

Lieut. Hugh Pedlar, U.C. '42, has been reported killed in action in France on July 28. Commissioned in the Royal Canadian Signals Corps, he went overseas in March, 1943.

Lieut. Pedlar graduated with honours in Modern History and was a member of the Historical and Modern History Clubs. In his graduating year he was literary director of the U.C. Literary and Athletic Society.

The only son of Mr. and Mrs. Ross Pedlar of Swansea, Hugh attended Swansea Public School and Runnymede Collegiate, and completed his education at University College. After graduation in '42 he trained as a signals officer with the Black Watch, and was sent overseas nearly a year later.

art, music and drama

Varsity Goes to a Party

The Vic Bob Committee, whose chief slave-driver has been John Speers, knew what it was doing when its 72nd annual performance was named Na Greater Din or The Magnificent Babesession. The show that included art, music and drama rocked the U.T.S. auditorium to its very foundation last night.

The Victorian version of Hellzapoppin had as much action off the stage as on. But scheduled performances were in true Bob tradition.

They included an extremely punny skit Draft Board Save My Child. The theme of this touching interlude was "Every Vic Man is a Man." And in it, the "Big Gun" outlined the Health Prevention Clinic's four freedoms—freedom from work, thought, exams and fitness.

Following this was a one-act, one-man-disguised-as-a-woman floor show featuring a plaintive ballad "It must be jelly cause jam don't shake like this."

Came the ballet—a distraught and frantic Dance of Women, consoling by Plato, an elusive idea which he pursued, and several frustrated students. The setting—Pietry Row; the theme—separation of the sexes; the barrier—a Platonic one; the result—a portentous arrangement; the warning—"always shut the platonic barrier behind you."

The Bob Quartet, in exceptionally fine voice, subtly harmonized choice bits of College gossip. According to the raucous songs and yells of both Sophs and Frosh between acts, soap sales will soon be on the up-grade at Vic.

From a dramatic point of view, the standard of the performance was somewhat lowered by the too-impromptu first act. But this was easily overlooked when we remembered the priceless ballet and free-for-all burlesque of leading lights around the College. All in all, we assure you that the last laugh was a hoarse one indeed!

Dean Young's Son Recovering in Italy

Capt. Harold R. Young, son of Dean C. R. Young, of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, is recovering in a Canadian hospital in Italy from wounds received during a patrol action on Oct. 6.

He attended the University of Toronto Schools and then entered Victoria College to study law, graduating from the University of Toronto in 1937. He studied at Osgoode Hall and was called to the bar in 1940. Capt. Young went overseas as a reinforcement officer for the Lincoln and Welland Regiment in May, 1943. After being transferred to the Irish Regiment he was sent to Italy. Shortly before he was wounded he was promoted to the rank of captain.

According to a letter received by his parents the wounds, caused by grenade fragments, are not serious, and although he is injured in his right hand, right eyelid and right knee, his sight and his walking will not be impaired.

HART HOUSE ART CLASSES

Tonight the first meeting of the art classes for the season 1944-1945 will be held in the art gallery of Hart House at 7:30 p.m. These classes will be under the direction of Mr. Caven Atkins, well-known artist and teacher of art. Mr. Atkins will give instruction in drawing and painting in a number of different media. He is anxious to meet men tonight who are interested in clay modelling, wood-carving, etching and lino cuts to arrange a suitable hour for work of this type.

Versatility

Organ Recital
Last night in Metropolitan Church the noted organist, John Reymes-King, played a brilliant and diversified program. The four movements of the Handel Concerto 2 in B flat opened the recital; the majestic chords of the Audite were followed by the Allegro movement whose dainty theme was, Bach-like, repetitive. The sombre colour of the Adagio, with slower tempo, provided a contrasting interlude between the two Allegro movements, this fourth movement being a repeat on the theme of the second movement.

The familiar Largo was a masterpiece in delicate shading and tone and concluded the group by Handel.

The tranquil Dream Pastime and Evening Prayer by Humperdinck was exquisite in perfection and had the added benefit of being performed to advantage following as it did a group by the English composer, Purcell. The Randau and Haydn's Dance was precise and sprightly; the Two Trumpet Tunes and Air was forceful and crescendoed to a great climax.

Miss Freda Antrobus, L.T.C.M., guest soloist, sang with a minimum of effort and clear, fluent tones. A group of three numbers—a selection from The Messiah, "How Beautiful are the Feet," which was well rendered, and a 16th century tune which showed a marked depth of feeling, and the Take Me to a Green Islet by the Toronto composer, Walter McNutt.

The majesty of the Bach Toccata and Fugue in D Minor was perhaps the climax of the evening. This selection enabled Mr. Reymes-King to display to the best advantage the tremendous range of the organ, and his own ability. The serene and placid Nun Danket Alle Gott by Karg Elert with its euphonious passages made a fitting finish to the program.

New York Trip For Western Coed

London, Ont.—(CUP)—The University of Western Ontario has issued a challenge to all other Canadian universities with the statement that the most beautiful girls in the world pass through Western's portals.

On the strength of this assertion, the Western Gazette, in conjunction with one Bill Barrett, "London authority on photographic beauty," is offering a contest to discover the loveliest co-ed. The selection will be made from a series of eighteen pictures to appear in the Gazette weekly until March.

Mr. Barrett, who is sponsoring the contest, will finance a trip to New York for the winner, who is also to be given a letter of introduction to John Powers, of model fame.

With the complete co-ed class in Western eligible, the basis of selection will be on photographic qualities. The story goes on to say that the number of "lovelies" is limited to eighteen merely because of the number of Gazettes. "Otherwise there would be no end to the list of entries, since this university has more beautiful girls than any other campus in Canada."

NOTICE

Every University student is asked to make sure, at once, that his correct Toronto address and telephone number are entered upon his registration card in the office of the University Registrar, Simcoe Hall, and in the office of his College Registrar or Faculty Secretary. The University Directory is now being prepared for the press and it is of the greatest importance that all addresses and telephone numbers be correct.

Status of student on entering service not affected by this new ruling which comes into force immediately.

NO CHANGE IN MEDS

A new government ruling is the reason for the cut in hours of training for certain students, said Lt.-Col. H. H. Madill, Commanding Officer of the C.O.T.C., when interviewed by The Varsity yesterday.

Training periods will be carried on as they are at present, until a total of 60 hours have been completed. Although this will cut the amount of work covered, it should not affect the status of the student when he joins active service.

According to Col. Madill credit for training is never given automatically, but is based on what the student has learned and remembered. If he knows his work will still be given credit.

Students in an already accelerated plan of training, as in Medicine, are unaffected by this ruling.

As explained in The Varsity yesterday, students who have completed 220 hours of training, plus attendance at two summer camps, are eligible to apply for reduction of intramural training to 60 hours a year.

Col. Madill stated that they are required to go to their unit headquarters and fill in a card. These applications are then investigated, and if the student has completed the required training satisfactorily he is granted the reduction. "We are not trying to hold anyone back, or give them any extra work," he said.

Just how many students will not be affected by the new ruling will not be known until all the forms are filled out.

Precedent At Queen's

The officials at Queen's University should be warmly commended on their decision that no discharged servicemen would be subjected to the traditional freshman regulations and initiation rigors. By their official announcement to this effect Queen's set a precedent and became the first Canadian campus to take action in this matter. The announcement came as a result of the independent decisions of the executive of each of the three faculty societies on that campus.

Apparently, the student societies at the University of Toronto have not deemed this question of sufficient importance to make a similar decision on it. The freshmen receptions are now all over here, and many a returned soldier, most of whom are considerably older and certainly more mature and serious-minded than their classmates fresh from high school, have been subjected to undignified humiliations at the hands of the sophomores. For a man who has spent two, three, four, or five years of fighting and hardship, and who is now attending university for the first time, this must have indeed been a bitter dose. Those men who are or have been attending university while these men were sacrificing their youth for their country owe the utmost respect to the returned heroes.

The students of this University are guilty of an injury for which there can be no recompense save apology. They can, however, profit by the precedent set at Queen's and come to a decision on this vital question. Perhaps we are taking a rather serious view of a comparatively trifling matter but next fall there will be many more discharged service personnel arriving at the University for the first time and the matter will be of prime importance. We must make our decision and publicly commit ourselves now.

The Busy Squirrel

Have you noticed the great activity of the squirrels in Queen's Park lately? Have you watched them in their great industry, gathering acorns and chestnuts, and busily storing them in secret places and convenient crannies? Well, it is going on every day right now, and the surprising thing is that it is very early for the furry fellows to be worrying about their winter preserves.

Up in the Yukon, the rabbits were moulting in early August this year, much sooner than usual, and the Indians were saying then, "It will be an early winter and a hard one."

Is it not amazing that the little creatures who are generally supposed to be so much inferior to man, have a sense of which we have no comprehension? They need no isotherms, isobars, thermometers, barometers, barographs, or weather bulletins. They can sense the need, and it cannot be mass psychology because certainly the Yukon rabbit and the Queen's Park squirrel do not communicate by the underground grapevine.

There is a lesson here for the University student in the Autumn, 1944. The lesson is not that we should dig out our ear-muffs and snow shovels, or that we should join the Ski Club at the reduced rate early to make up for last year's poor investment. No, the lesson that we should take from our four-footed friends is a simple one, but is like a tree which we look past, seeing only the forest. The animals, with wisdom, sense a necessity for food in the future. Acting upon this, they start early to prepare, so that when the emergency is upon them, they will be able to meet it and come through victorious.

The examinations next spring seem far away, but the nuts that you can gather are lined up in the library ready to be garnered right now, one by one. Remember Nature's way, the natural way, is to gather them one by one, well in advance. And notwithstanding, you had better get your ear-muffs out, just in case.

Beauty At Western

In a recent front page story, The University of Western Ontario's Gazette printed the very challenging and controversial statements, "Through Western's portals pass the most beautiful girls in the world," and "This university (Western) has more beautiful girls than any other campus in Canada." In support of their statements, The Gazette, in conjunction with a local photographer, one Bill Barrett, is sponsoring a contest to find the most photogenic beauty on the campus.

We have no philanthropic photographers here, but we feel that when The Gazette challenges, "Canadian universities, whom have you to compare with these Western beauties?" we must take up the cudgel in support of Toronto's pulchritude.

Very obviously, the writer of the above sentiments has never been on the Toronto campus where many an engineer detours through the halls of our Arts Colleges on his way to lectures in order to lave his weary soul in the seas of glamour pouring from the emptying classrooms. Obviously, too, The Gazette has not been present at the contests held here when the judges have had to return to the stage again and again before coming to the almost impossible decision as to which of the contestants was the most beautiful.

We at the University of Toronto are justly proud of our girls, and stand shocked at these sweeping statements from Western.

Summertime

Summertime, despite its heats and doldrums, is a changeable and stimulating period for the university student. It is a season of pale blue skies, warm sunshine, and long delightful days; of sailing, camping, fishing, and swimming. Children are packed away to summer camps; office workers take their two weeks' vacations at summer resorts and return to their routine tasks physically tired but mentally rested. However, it is to the student that the widest field of selection of summer activity is open.

Canada is a vast new country, and now, due to the war, its factories, shipyards, and mines are running at top speed, and are crying for help, help, and more help. There is a very great deal to do, to learn, to find out, to ascertain. The student habitually works with his head rather than with his hands; he may take a job where he does hard physical labour, thereby increasing his experience and knowledge. He may enter a war plant and become, in the course of time, a skilled machinist; he may drive a truck, operate a steam shovel, or wield an axe. Should he desire to increase his knowledge of the practical aspects of his academic course, he may, if he is in medicine, work in a research laboratory, or if in engineering, engage in any one of a number of pursuits in which specialized knowledge is required.

These are only standard occupations; there are many others, more diverse and more interesting. Last summer, for instance, a group of University of Toronto students toured Canada with a circus, acting as roustabouts, barkers, and side show attendants. They saw aspects of Canadian life that only a circusman can see. This fall, many universities returned to the campus with interesting and exciting tales of their adventures on active service with Canada's escort navy.

No matter what occupation a student chooses, he will return to his academic life with new ideas, new skills, and a keener appreciation of people. These thoughts are common enough in the autumn; next spring, when we go out to seek employment, let us keep in mind the wealth of thought diversity of experience can bring.

"Such grace" breathes Sparkes as Conga Beat Invades Armories. C.R.C.C. Revision of Drill Manual Speed-up Predicted.

HOT STUFF!

"Beautiful, isn't it?" gurgled Miss Sparkes to the Cat. The scene was the University Avenue Armouries, at the first parade of the grey-uniformed C.R.C.C. girls.

"Isn't it a bit irregular?" said Cat, stroking her whiskers.

"Right now, yes, but it won't be. That's why I called you for an interview. Last year I announced a revision of the Drill Manual. Things will be different. They will look up. Der Tag has arrived."

"Er, so I see," said the Cat drily.

"Yes. This is the beginning, only the beginning. Look, I'll show you." Miss Sparkes led the Cat out on the floor, to where a group of shivering girls, in grey garb, shook.

"Orphans?" said the Cat questioningly.

"No, that is the official uniform of the detachment."

The Cat looked round. With a gasp he saw that the girls were not shivering; it was a hula. Miss Sparkes spoke. "Position number 2!" The effect was sudden, even to the hardened Cat. The girls linked arms and started a high-kick number. Music swelled from a raised dais at the other end of the building.

"That is the C.O.T.C. band," Miss Sparkes added to the Cat's lifted eyebrow. "We have the boys blindfolded; it is a high stepping drill, you know."

"Yes, I know. It's lucky I'm a girl," said the Cat.

"We are fortunate in that we have a number of girls from the U.C. tall and short choruses, and also from the School tall choruses."

"Oh!" murmured the Cat.

"Yes, and such beautiful legs, haven't they, the dears."

Miss Sparkes again said the magic words. "Position number 3!" The girls right-faced, spread out in a straight line, and slowly congaed down the hall.

"So rhythmic, so charming, such life, and vitality."

Miss Sparkes ran forward a few steps and took her place at the head of the column. The sergeant took over. "Hip, hip, hip, kick; hip, hip, hip, kick! C'mon, shake a leg, girls. Hip, hip, hip, kick!" The Cat winced. She gasped. She rubbed her eyes, then she turned and faced for the entrance. On her way she went head over heels over a prostrate figure lying in the entrance. Stop.

hither and yon

with frank tasky

While the movies often present newspaper offices glamorously as madhouses of pounding typewriters, buzzing telephones, and bawling city editors—which to a degree is true—newsrooms also are just like any other business office.

At the Star, for instance, it was the practice, as in any insurance office, say, to pass around a list, asking the employees to indicate contributions they would offer to buy a gift for reporters who were leaving to enlist and go off to the wars.

Well, this happened so often that it became almost a mechanical sort of thing to write your name down and promise that two bits would be taken off your pay envelope for the departing warrior. In fact, it became so mechanical that a group of wags at the office argued that nobody even looked to see who they were shelling out their hard-earned dough for.

To test their theory, they one day passed out a sheet with a false name on it. Sure enough the paper went the rounds from desk to desk and netted a grand total of $10.31.

Later, the wags pinned the bogus note on the notice board, and the pay-off came when it was revealed that the phony name was that of . . . a horse called Hot Legs running at Dufferin Race Track.

No, they didn't keep the money. It was sent to the Aid to Russia Fund.

Another theory nursed by the movie people and propagated in cinema houses throughout the land is that all newshawks are tough, romantic Lotharios, whose swaggering appearance would appear almost nude unless a cigarette were dangling casually from their lips.

Well, to shatter this illusion, we might say we found them most ordinary fellows, who might easily be mistaken for plumbers or Schoolmen.

In fact we found them even too ordinary—all happily married men. When we got our job there this summer, the word soon got around that we were the only single reporter on the staff, and before you could say "Stop the press!" we were immediately besieged by 20 hardboiled newsmen, each fighting to show us PHOTOGRAPHS OF THEIR LITTLE CHILDREN.

AH, HUMPHREY BOGART, WHERE ART THOU?

As any student from the Faculty of Law will tell you, men of the bar are strange people. We found we were assigned to cover the city police court, which is a place peopled with all sorts of queer characters, but the most eccentric character we found there was a lawyer.

This lawyer was supposed to be defence counsel, but instead of paying attention to his client in the witness box, he was deeply intent in playing with a pencil. Sitting at the attorney's bench, he was engrossed in jutting a pencil from his table, slamming his finger down, and so flipping the pencil up in the air.

This digital exercise was so enthralling that soon the attention of everybody—the visitor's box, the criminal's box, and even the magistrate—wandered away from the criminal in the witness stand and to this playful lawyer.

Then it happened. The defence counsel gave one final big thwack. The pencil went ping! Up, up, it rose. And with all the courtroom watching, went down, down, until everybody gasped to see that it landed on the desk of the magistrate himself.

There was one minute's awed silence.

Then as though out of a dream, the grave magistrate picked up the errant pencil; balanced it on his own desk; thwacked it; watched it float through the air and land ON THE SAME LAWYER'S DESK.

The moral is, though, that the lawyer, for breach of court decorum, naturally wasn't allowed to continue with his case. So, law students, heed this story, and never, never, play with pencils or you will land in court.

ping out of curiosity, the Cat prodded it over and gazed unwillingly on the face of Sgt.-Maj. Sandrows. A fearful sight before, the face was almost unrecognizable. The Cat pulled out her hip flask, now, since her reform under Dr. Glatz' tutelage, used only for medicinal purposes and forced some of the life-giving liquid between the Sgt.-Major's teeth. A flicker of life—then an ear-splitting shriek, "Tell me it isn't true," and the venerable Sandrows in his outmoded khaki uniform sank again into oblivion.

"Poor fellow," mourned the Cat. "No wonder when this comes so fast upon the new rookies in the 2nd Battalion, it's enough to make even me crazy." The Cat went out into the night and boarded a Bay car. As he entered he muttered to the conductor, "I wonder if Miss Sparkes knows that the School tall chorus is men!—should be interesting."

"Very," said the conductor. "Move right along, please."

"He thinks I'm crazy," thought Champus. "Now, I wonder!"

New World Markets for Canadian Nickel
Made Plant Expansion Necessary

When the Canadian Nickel industry was faced with the loss of ninety per cent of its markets at the close of the first World War, the men who managed this industry set themselves resolutely to the task of finding new peacetime markets for Canadian Nickel.

By intensive research, new Nickel alloys were developed for specific uses. A corps of engineers was employed to demonstrate to peacetime industries throughout the world the superiority of Nickel alloys for scores of uses.

Step by step, new markets were built up. By 1926 the demand for Canadian Nickel had increased to such an extent that work was commenced on the construction of great new plants in Canada.

Between 1926 and 1930 the Canadian Nickel industry paid out fifty millions of dollars for Canadian labor and materials. Expansion has continued up to the present.

Today Canadian Nickel is again devoted to war purposes and again the industry looks to the future with confidence. Plans are ready to develop and expand old and new peacetime markets, so that the Nickel industry may continue, through its own initiative and enterprise, to make still greater contributions to Canada's welfare.

Varsity Tracksters Conquer In Intercollegiate Meet Held With McGill Wed.

First track encounter with off-campus teams, since 1940 C.I.A.U. ruling.

CORRESPONDENCE CONTEST

The Varsity track team emerged victorious from the Intercollegiate Correspondence Track Meet held with McGill Wednesday afternoon. It was the first track encounter with any outside teams since the C.I.A.U. ruling of 1940, but it did not scrap the ruling as the meets coincided at Varsity Stadium in Toronto and Molson Stadium in Montreal. The last Intercollegiate Track Meet was in 1939 between Western, Queen's, McGill and Varsity. McMaster dropped out in 1938.

The usually prominent intercollegiate spirit was lacking at the Stadium as the crowd was an unusually small one, but the Blues went full out for the victory. The final score read: Varsity 79½, McGill 63½. Points were awarded on a 5-3-2-1 basis for the first four at our meet but only the first two were corresponded with McGill. This system held true in each of the thirteen scheduled events.

Veteran track coach and former Olympic star, Hec Phillips, was especially jubilant over the results. He had special mention for Bill Kerr, who tied the intercollegiate high jump record with his five feet ten mark. Fordyce and Fielding turned in excellent efforts in the quarter and half mile events. Fordyce just shading his opponent each time. Burgess and Myers did very well in the mile with 10.5 and 10.6 seconds respectively. McGill's best being 11 seconds flat by Forse. James of Meads made a nice effort in winning the two mile, and Hec is looking to him to make a real distance man in time.

Mehitabel, 1912 Jalopy To Advertise Dentantics

Heed the warning. Woe betide the student who dares to venture onto the campus roads between the hours of 4 and 5 in the afternoons of any school day. It seems that those are the hours during which Ross Richardson, III Dents, takes his newly acquired 1912 Ford for its daily exercise.

Although it looks perfectly harmless to the casual passer-by, its appearance shouldn't be allowed to deceive anyone. This antique has been definitely known to go as fast as 50 miles per hour. This was proven when its owner, and five of his Denvisen friends, brought it to Toronto from Campbellford, a trip of over 125 miles, and the little buggy didn't even purr.

To describe it is a difficult task indeed. Its front window bends in the middle so that on a warm day it is possible to fold it right down; two of its front lights are run by kerosene and have to be lit with a match; two of its other front lights (which seems to infer that there are roughly four front lights) are run by Prest-o-Lite from a gas pressure tank on the side. The horn makes a sound that would frighten any unwary pedestrian or fellow traveller with its tiny awoooah. Although the top is collapsible (as is probably the whole car), Ross confided that it cannot be put

Youth Forum Holds Meeting

The Joint Youth Forum Committee held a meeting last night at the Central Y.M.C.A. with 27 delegates from various Toronto Youth Groups present. The University was well represented by members from the Victoria Debating Parliament, Chemistry Club, Maths and Physics Society, S.C.M., Law Club, Modern History Club, Trinity Men, Victoria Women's Lit, Forestry, Progressive-Conservative Club, Jewish Youth Federation, St. Michael's Senate Club. This committee is an action group supported by the Canadian Youth Commission.

In view of the coming Federal election a Forum has been organized to be held in Harbor Collegiate, Wednesday, Nov. 15. A representative from each of the four political parties will be present to a questionnaire submitted to them by the committee.

The topics open for discussion are: Post-War Employment, Family Life, Education, Citizenship, Health, Recreation and Foreign Policy. Each delegate will be expected to present his party's policy regarding these questions.

Bishop White Continues Chinese Lecture Series

Bishop W. C. White will give his second lecture in the series "China: Past and Present" at 4:00 p.m. today in the Museum.

Bishop White will discuss the discoveries brought to light by the Oracle Bones of Honan made thirty-five centuries ago. These bones have both pictographic and stylistic writing inscribed on them and reveal the life of the people of that age clearer than that in the time of Confucius, 800 years later, said Bishop White.

The discovery of a bone containing records of a lunar eclipse 1311 B.C. brings into the realm of authentic history what was before considered traditional or legendary, he added.

Intercollegiate Sport Must Reappear Verdict of Yesterday's S.P.S. Debate

"Resolved that intercollegiate sports be resumed this fall" was the topic of the S.P.S. debate held yesterday afternoon, in which the decision was awarded almost unanimously to the affirmative.

The motion was supported by Bruce Taylor, IV Mining Geology, and John Mulholland, III Civil. The opposition was headed by Harold Wardel, III Mechanical, and Cyril Fry, II Metallurgy.

Bruce Taylor opened the discussion by remarking on the popularity acquired by intercollegiate sport since the termination of intercollegiate sport. Competition is less keen however, he said, because the players are dispersed among many teams. He continued by saying that intercollegiate sport would make for greater unity among the faculties since they would interperse to form the major team.

Harold Wardel of the opposition asked why sports were stopped. "In order to prosecute the war to the fullest extent," said Wardel, "and therefore all resources should be used for the war alone." He went on to say that the transportation of teams and spectators was against government regulations being in the category of travel for pleasure. "Imagine having soldiers compete for seats on a train with rugby players," He continued by stating that the morale of a soldier on active service was far more important than the morale of a University student.

John Mulholland, of the affirmative, in answer to the arguments that rugby would clash with the C.O.T.C. drill on Saturday afternoons, pointed out that since the C.O.T.C. does not need any more officers the C.O.T.C. training need not take so much time. He went on to say that the C.O.T.C. has lost its original meaning—"It is now just a front for the public."

Cyril Fry took up the argument for the opposition by saying: "Possibly the C.O.T.C. doesn't need any more officers, but it does want us. What is important is not the time that you spend but what you get out of the sixty hours." He continued by saying that intercollegiate sports would take too much time away from academic work and failure might be the result. "Which headline would the boys on the front line rather read—that we beat Queen's 20-0 or that we had the highest number of graduates ready to give their services to the prosecution of the war?"

Sydney Smith Urges Loyalty To University And College At U.C. Soph-Frosh Banquet

Vic Parliament Debates Tuesday

"Resolved that Canada can maintain itself as a nation half French, half English," will be the topic of the first debate at the Victoria College Debating Parliament to be held next Tuesday evening.

In an interview with The Varsity, John Speers, premier, stated that he was still not happy about the final wording of the topic, but it seemed to raise more significant issues of an inextricably complex problem.

Speers also said that the policy for the present session of the House was debating on live, current issues, generally political in tone but varied from local to world-wide theatres of action.

Amidst the ups and downs of wartime college activities the role of the Victoria College Parliament is relatively unchanged, attracting great numbers without resort to advertising gags, the premier told The Varsity. Decisions are reached by a vote taken on the floor of the House and the merits of the issue rather than the eloquence of the speakers are considered, Speers said.

I stand in awe of my brilliant and efficient leader of the Opposition, Miss Margaret Albright, who wends between debates to give splendid co-operation, admitted the premier.

When approached by The Varsity for a statement concerning the first debate, the leader of the Opposition said that she and her colleague are going to maintain their side of the discussion by showing what has been lacking in the attainment of Canada's objective since 1867.

St. Mike's Man Wins D.F.C.

FO. D. E. Smith, 24, navigator, has been awarded the D.F.C., according to information released by Ottawa.

FO Smith enlisted in 1944 after completing one year in Mathematics and Physics at St. Mike's, where he won an athletic letter. In 1942, after receiving his navigator's wing, he went overseas.

No information as to why the decoration was awarded has been received, his mother, Mrs. Florence Smith, Edith Ave., said last night.

'Varsity' Work Valuable To Aspiring Journalists

Opinion from ex-Varsity staff members stresses the fact that the Undergraduate Newspaper for more than 60 years has become its own school of modern journalism, but the graduate newspapermen seem convinced of need for an individual Faculty of Journalism at the University.

Many a well-known reporter of today got his first taste of printer's ink on The Varsity staff. One Canadian Press Staff-writer, now working in England, began his military writing by covering the notorious University residence "Bed Race," as it looked from one of the combatant's camps. Another who handled the Sirosi report conferences came to grips with first principles of writing in covering Hart House debates. Numbers of Press Gallery writers in Ottawa and in the Provincial Legislatures learned how to navigate in political circles while covering Mock Parliaments for The Varsity.

BOB BELL IS TOASTMASTER

Dr. Sydney Smith, Principal of University College, in his reply to the toast to University College made by Mickey Michasiw, II year president, at the Soph-Frosh banquet last night told the frosh that he believed there should be no incompatibility between their loyalty to University College and their loyalty to the University of Toronto.

Dr. H. J. Cody, who reiterated this sentiment, replied to the toast to the University of Toronto made by Katherine Weir, W.U.A. First Year President.

Bob Bell, President of the U.C. "Lit," introduced the various speakers in his capacity as toastmaster of the banquet, which took place for the first time in recent years, downtown in the Crystal Ballroom of the King Edward Hotel.

Dr. Smith, who referred to himself as a relatively newcomer to U.C., just as the frosh are, denied the veracity of the adage that it is "better to have come to university and loafed, than never to have come at all." In this, the sixth year of war, such feelings would be somewhat less than patriotic. No one should be allowed to abuse the privilege of coming to university which has been afforded to students by our government.

"I am proud to be a member of University College," he declared, "and it is well that you take pride in your college as well. Exhibit that pride. I beseech you to be loyal to U.C. and the standards of excellence which prevail in it. However, if your reasons for coming here are not worthy, then you are not entitled to enrolment, and you should see the University Bursar about it tomorrow morning, for he would be glad to facilitate your withdrawal."

"It has been declared," continued Dr. Smith, "that there are three kinds of students. The low and lazy students, and the broad and hazy student—these two I agree with. We all know the lazy (Continued on page 4)

Professor D. Creighton On Leave of Absence

Professor D. G. Creighton of the Department of History, is now on leave of absence from the University while he is preparing a biography of Sir John A. Macdonald. He has been recently visiting at Toronto.

In an interview with The Varsity, Dr. Creighton said, "The Rockefeller Foundation was kind enough to grant me $6,500 to assist me in the research on the biography of Sir John A. Macdonald. I was also given a leave of absence from my teaching duties as long as I should need."

Dr. Creighton is at present in Ottawa and he intends to remain there for some time. He then expects to travel to other libraries throughout Canada. "I think it may take all of next year and maybe more to gather all the facts on the life of Sir John A. Macdonald," he said.

Dr. Creighton remarked that he did not want any publicity as his book has only been started. "Nobody knows the outcome of it yet," he added.

Hubert Cook V.C.F. Speaker

At the regular noon meeting of the V.C.F., held yesterday, Rev. Hubert Cook, present general secretary of the North American branch of the Evangelical Union, spoke on the missionary outlook in South America.

Rev. Cook, speaking of the history of missions there, stated that although as early as 1820, when James Thompson was preaching in the field, even during the Edinburgh Conference of 1910, South America was not considered a legitimate field of evangelism.

Missionaries sent to South America face the task of preaching to both the highly educated citizen in his native Spanish or Portuguese, or to the superstitious native of the hinterland whose obscure dialects present the greatest difficulties, said Rev. Cook. This is only one contrast in a country of contrasts he pointed out. To the tourist S.A. shows an ultra-modern facade—the veneer of modern cities and growing industrialism, but the missionary goes far up the Amazon to into the highlands of the Andes to combat ignorance and intolerance, continued Rev. Cook.

Rev. Cook stressed the vastness of South America. "There is nothing small in South America," he said, in telling of the mountains and river systems of the country. "And just so, the problems we face are immense," he added. At present, in addition to coping with the problems of illiteracy (embracing 85 per cent of the population) and of indifference to all religious teaching, there has arisen the problem of aggressive nationalism, and real opposition to missionary efforts, Rev. Cook pointed out.

Rev. Cook stressed the vastness of South America. "There is nothing small in South America," he said, in telling of the mountains and river systems of the country. "And just so, the problems we face are immense," he added. At present, in addition to coping with the problems of illiteracy (embracing 85 per cent of the population) and of indifference to all religious teaching, there has arisen the problem of aggressive nationalism, and real opposition to missionary efforts, Rev. Cook pointed out.

A Journalistic Course

A survey of knowledge from the Greeks to the moderns would show that an era of specialization has succeeded an era of generalization. In early times the pool of knowledge flowed without guidance. Today it flows in directed channels. According to Greek thought, philosophy encompassed the special sciences of mathematics and physics as well as those subjects which we call psychology, sociology and political science. In our age, these subjects are distinct from and antithetical to philosophy.

Thus human thought has passed from undifferentiated ramifications to particularized fields, with the result that the average student of today finds it impossible to prepare a career without specialization.

At the University of Toronto this year there are over forty students who intend to go into journalism. They devote many hours to working on The Varsity in order to glean what training they can from news lectures and experience. They attempt to integrate what they learn with their academic work, in preparation for their career. Such a method of acquiring journalistic knowledge is pitiful. A system of instruction in journalism would not only save time and labour but also would much more adequately equip the aspirant.

A Profession?

This condition is not limited to our campus alone. It is a national failing, for there is no recognized school of journalism in Canada. In the United States schools of journalism are almost accepted on the same basis as the medical, engineering or legal professions. And journalism may well be classed among the professions. It requires a training just as stringent and detailed as that of the doctor or the chemist. Objection to journalistic education may be made on the basis that the present condition of that field does not warrant intensive study. It is just such objections that cause the degeneration of the newspaper or literary publications. A trained student would effect a higher standard. Practical training received on an undergraduate newspaper in combination with theoretical knowledge would provide experience as well as improved thought content.

Most newspapermen are not gifted with a reporting bent. Joseph Pulitzer, founder of the school of journalism at Columbia, points out that all intelligence requires training. Self education may be utilized in journalism but special preparation develops to the last possible limit the latent accomplishments in man. The "born" newspaperman is merely a man who has learned discrimination and originality at the hands of experience and teaching.

Past history has proven the inadvisability of apprenticeship. The structure of our present society does not permit the waste of time and money involved in teaching the raw recruit fundamentals while he is engaged at that particular work. Many industrialists have learned, since the beginning of the war, of the blunders wrought by incompetent help. Education in journalism would merely be a step compatible with the tendency towards specialization in knowledge and consequently in careers.

Need of a Specific Course

Some people maintain that the pass arts course adequately prepares the student for a journalistic field. The subjects found in this course are generalized. The future journalist needs certain aspects of law, history and economics emphasized according to their relevance to his career. In Canada he is forced to select such angles himself from a mass of unessential details. He must also fill in the gaps and integrate these general courses.

What subjects should be taught for such a course? Under the domain of the English department come style, bibliography and literature. The teaching of each would necessitate emphasis on journalistic aspects. A course in law would make the student familiar with court procedure. Sociology, history, economics, statistics, language and science are other essential subjects for the young journalist. The principles of journalism and the gathering of news could find practical exposition in an undergraduate paper run in correlation with the course.

Vigorous plans are being made in this University for post-war expansion. What is more necessary to the future than well trained and equipped journalists to wield public opinion? The press disseminates various views, innocuous, powerful or harmful, as the case may be. Is it not wise to prepare now for future editorial influence?

Correspondence

The Editor:

This article is not meant to paint a pessimistic picture of the life of a farmer, but as a suggestion to those to whom we owe so much that they investigate thoroughly the life of the Country Gentleman before attempting to farm.

The article in the Oct. 12 issue was very cleverly written, however it is quite evident that the author had had no experience as a farmer. Those attractive facts about milk checks and wheat checks are ambiguous. Since the profits were collected by a group called "people on a farm" and contrasted with one man's income. Reference was also made to the "kindly bank manager," for the most part an imaginative character. As a rule, no encouraging facts will be obtained from those farmers who were forced to call upon the "kindly bank manager."

I speak as one who has had a little experience with the problems of the farmer, and believe me, you can't get along with only a 1935 Ford truck!! You will require a tractor (with light if you are going to work the land yourself), plows, and many other implements, the prices of which you will find are far above what they should be. Should you have a fruit farm, you will find that in many cases you are unable to purchase suitable machinery at any price!!

However, if some co-operative farming system were inaugurated whereby each man owned his own land, and had access to a pool of modern machinery, help, and advice, until able to carry on by himself with no debts, success would result.

The last part of this article does sound fantastic, but not more so than the poor lad struggling to compete with a seasoned farmer, when the lad has nothing but the land and a 1935 Ford truck! The aeroplane has solved the transportation problem, and since our agricultural scientists are developing new varieties of wheat and fruit which will grow successfully in different climates, a crusade to open up our country, and part of the Great Clay Belt would be recognized in history as a step in the development of Canada comparable with that of the immigration of the United Empire Loyalists.

He deserves a chance! Let's give him access to use of a 1944 Ford truck, suitable machinery and scientific advice. It is our duty.

ALAN MORRIS, 1 Year S.P.S.

P.S.—Even though whoever reads this should consign it to the wastepaper basket, don't let your friends who are inexperienced farmers be bluffed by propaganda of this nature.

FIRE! FIRE!

Kitten's first words repeated to anxious fugitives in Varsity Arena.

The screaming sirens faded in the distance, unconscious firemen were carted off to 44 Hoskin Street and the crowd dispersed. The Economics Building was burned to the ground. It was rumoured that the job had been done by the dreaded arsonist, Dean Raffles of the Sociology Department. The reason, according to the whispering campaign, was that Raffles, in collaboration with Yehudi, famous town planner, was trying to abolish all unsightly edifices in the city of Toronto.

Dr. Tiffy Gaylor, armed with sextet and graphog, stood before the smoking ruins and weeping copiously, directed students to Varsity Stadium.

"Geography classes will be held at ten p.m. tonight," he sobbed. "It's really a wonderful idea, burning this place down. Now I can get in the practical side of meteorology to my classes. Tonight we will observe the moon."

There was a mad rush as Skulemen scrambled to register with Dr. Gaylor.

Dean Raffles led his students down to the open spaces of Queen's Park in hopes of finding some space to continue with his class. But the newly painted handstand was packed with skule frosh who were receiving a lecture on "How to Dress and Where." The grassy green was swarming with the weary members of the Hart House Road Gang, convicted by Corporal B. Lickerbreth for insubordination and over-dressing.

Various wandering groups of ambitious Artsmen and women found their way back to Varsity Arena where a Prom rehearsal was in progress. The Cat, perched atop the fuselage of a night-fighter plane, viewed the confusion with clasp-clicking satisfaction. "What an atmosphere in which to write my column," he purred. "Lots of noise, lots of smoke and plenty of local colour." (She was referring to the multicoloured shirts worn by the musicians.)

So the Cat wrote her column and the lectures proceeded with a background of not too soft music.

Dean Dody rushed upon the scene and announced in an excited voice, "A phone call for Mrs. Champus Cat. Champus, Mr. Champus is calling."

The sleek, supple feline, in her haste, tumbled off her ringside seat and raced to the phone. In a few minutes she returned to the hushed Arena and announced to the waiting multitudes, "The kitten has spoken. For a dubious posterity I am pleased to state that his first words were: 'Gimme a swig, Pop!' I consider this obvious proof for Dr. Glatz' theory of maternal heredity." The Cat made a dramatic exit after this profound statement and the tragedy of the razed Economics Building was forgotten as the orchestra softly played the lovely strains of "Behind the Swinging Doors."

SPS Gridders Down Trinity

Yesterday afternoon saw a heavier, more experienced S.P.S. team down the Trinity gridders to the tune of 17 to 1. However, the score gives no indication of the play. Except for an intercepted forward and a fumbled kick, on both of which S.P.S. scored majors, Trinity played a great defensive game. Neither team gained yards by plunging and as the game grew older, both teams took to the air to provide a thrilling exhibition of wide-open rugby.

In the second half, the game tightened up and both teams were being forced to kick. Bauman of Trinity seemed to have an edge in the kicking and at the end of the third quarter Trinity was pressing hard in School territory.

However, lack of substitutes began to tell upon Trinity as the fourth quarter got under way. An intercepted forward and some fine running by Phelan carried the ball to the Trinity eight-yard line. On the next play, Tudgett of School plunged for a major.

Surprisingly, Trinity again took the offensive, sparked by Klehn who was a standout. School's defence tightened, however, and Trinity was forced to be content with a single point scored by way of a nice kick by Bauman. Shortly after, the whistle blew to end the game. The score: S.P.S. III 17, Trinity I.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Jerry Ewins

Volunteer P.T. Instructors

The Hart House Athletic Wing has evolved a very efficient system to cope with the Wartime Physical Training introduced in 1942. Instead of augmenting their staff of regular instructors, they initiated the idea of getting volunteer instructors from the students and outsiders to help out in this new program. After 2 volunteer years a man can qualify for a certificate by which he may receive remuneration for his instruction. These men go under the official title of The Volunteer Instructors Corps, and are divided into three groups, Aquatics, Combat Activities, and Physical Training.

The Aquatics include the special branches of Life Saving, Swimming, and Speed Swimming, with some additional instruction in Water Polo. Combat Activities takes care of "the grunt and groan boys" as well as boxers. The P.T. work is mainly concerned with gymnastics, with running providing an interesting sideline. Also this year the Athletic Wing is introducing Lacrosse and Soccer as additional activities. The six-man Soccer team will be inaugurated shortly in a game which resembles Soccer in name only but should score a success as a fast competitive sport. By taking part in any of these branches of the Physical Training the student can secure his required number of credits. He is welcomed to acquire these credits in whatever way he chooses as the type of activities which interest him most and the idea of the whole program is that these may be diversified enough to provide an interest for everyone.

The tentative plans of the Post-War Physical Training Program will demand that more attention be given to the game type of activity as opposed to the old order of pure calisthenics and gymnastics. These Volunteer Instructors take a large part in this plan as they will supply the means for carrying it out. The program is also meant to be a benefit to the boys who are the Instructors and they will be able to pass on their knowledge to the world in general and some day perhaps help to create a higher physical standard among its population.

Tennis

The University Tennis Tournament has struggled through another couple of days crammed with inactivity and come up with the draw narrowed down only slightly in the singles and doubles departments. We will not stake anything on this but the final in the singles should come off on Saturday some time around noon. The doubles however has the bright outlook of having its final around the end of next week. Not long ago we heard that the finals were scheduled for last Wednesday in both tournaments. Well, to those of you whose interest has not fallen off completely, we will try to bring you up to date with the following.

Young and Wade of U.C. played their match at St. Hilda's and came up with a finalist in Young. The two were very evenly balanced and it took three 6-4 sets before Wade dropped out. Wade took the first set but lost the next two, the last of these featuring an uphill fight by him after being down 5-2. His steady play brought it to 5-4 then deuce and deuce again before he dropped two straight points to Young. Lau of Trinity knocked off Morrison the other day 6-3, 6-4, so it's Young and Lau in the final when they can arrange a date. We'll go out on a limb and pick Young to cop the McEachern Mug.

Young and his partner from Trinity, Dinock, have reached the final in the doubles. Their opponents will come up from the quarter-final match between Wade and Morrison of U.C. and Lau and Gall of Trinity via a semi-final with Feyerer of Meds and Patzalek of Dents. There will be some good tennis in these three matches and we will try to keep you posted on when they are being played.

"The Sportswoman"

By Janice Murray

Today's little treatise concerns tennis, smoking, training, basketball and other dissimilar subjects. In the tennis tournament play held yesterday at the St. Hilda's Courts the field was further narrowed when D. J. Sanders eliminated Natalie Faver, 7-5, 6-3; Harriet Morton took Rose Marie Cunningham 6-4, 10-12, 6-4; and Betsy Mosbaugh defeated Janet Hughes, 8-6, 6-8, 9-7. A brief sun-up shows that St. Hilda's is closing in for the finals with three girls still in the running, while the other colleges have only one player left. The end should be closer than close, however.

The Basketball field will be very large this season according to all reports we have heard. Although there is a great shortage of coaches most of the colleges plan to enter one more team than usual, although in some cases the line-up will be changed only by the class the teams are in. St. Hilda's, for instance, has had four teams for two years now, but this year will have two Senior teams instead of two Freshie teams. Most of the other colleges plan to have two Senior teams also.

About training, and that allied subject smoking, or at least not smoking. We were asked today whether smoking would hurt those who plan to take their basketball seriously. So we asked people and remembered things, articles, experiences and such and will try to answer. Really everybody and certainly every smoker knows that she has not been helped by lagging. Authorities and people who really know, tell us so and quote imposing little lists of figures to prove that it does. Singing teachers warn their pupils, and Gene Tunney warns the U.S. Navy. We know that although the nearest thing to singing one could come to in a game would be the feminine version of the Rebel Yell, it does affect your wind. Drastically! Any swimmer who now smokes will quote the good old days of how he or she used to be able to swim several hundred miles, or feet or something under water and come up and quote the Balcony Scene from R. and J. all in the same breath, and we can well remember after a good smoking binge in our first year, being benched for a whole game with another binge-er while we quirmed and made good resolutions about not doing that ever again. Benching in such cases has a very good effect, and for the team also. If you are a package-a-day addict and turn out for a game and can't get off the floor, or have to keep thinking, "Pick up your feet, old girl, now put them down again" all through a game, if you can stick it out all through a game, you will see what we mean.

Training includes also getting lots of sleep, getting a fair bit of exercise with a basketball preferably, eating the correct food, and not too much of it, especially before a game, and other little bits of detail. It's a good thing to try just for practice or health or will power, and especially good to try if you want your team to win.

Sugar 'n Spice

Spice is certainly the adjective for the varied program presented by Martha Lipton and John Brownlee last night. While lovely Miss Lipton stole the show with her warmth of expression and versatility, her partner excelled in his character songs, making good use of both facial and vocal expression. In fact at his best he rather reminded us of a singing waiter.

As usual, the encores were best of all. Miss Lipton's vivacious interpretation of Saint-Saens' Danse Macabre was a masterpiece of audience appeal. From her melodious rendering of Gluck's Divinité du Styx and the more familiar "Mon coeur s'ouvre a ta voix" from Samson and Delila, she turned with remarkable ease to the spirited, though slightly over-played song classics by Schubert. You could actually see the lounigen Forellen leap out of the water and the grim Erlkönig drawing the frightened boy away to his domain. The full force of her voice found expression in Malotte's musical setting of Carl Sandburg's Upstream.

In spite of Mr. Brownlee's immense cheerfulness he was not in his usual good form. Those who have heard him in his Mozart roles with the Metropolitan will agree that he fell down considerably in "Non più andrai" from the Marriage of Figaro and "Lo ci dormi da novo" from Don Giovanni. His interpretation of the more popular folksongs tended to be rather wooden. As a native Australian he naturally added "Waltzing Matilda" as one of his encores; and that other soldier classic "The Road to Mandalay" showed him at his best.

The duets "Oh Lovely Night" by Ronald, and "My Hero" from The Chocolate Soldier were really delightful. The singers endeavoured to impress the audience with the sincerity of their sentiments, both in the amorous tone of their voices and spirit of their glances, especially in the latter duet. So they sang it twice!

hither and yon

with peggy bates and frank rasky

Just to be different, today's joint column will begin with a couple of hithers around h'yar. Then it'll wind up with a few yons from other campuses away out th'ar.

Here we go with the first hither. It took place 'other day on the stair of the University Library, a place where all sorts of weird things happen, and where misogynists are often wont to sit, smoke, and philosophize.

Here's a verbatim report of the philosophy we heard:

"So you really think I'm the sweetest gal you know on the campus?"

"Yup."

"And do you actually believe you'd rather go out with me than any other girl in your course?"

Uh, huh."

"And no kiddin', you think I have the nicest red hair you've ever seen?"

"Yep."

"And you're crazy about the way I wear my clothes?"

"Yes, sah."

"Oh, Joe, you say the nicest things about me and so charmingly."

Our next bit of dialogue didn't happen on the library steps but on equally suitable misogynist's paradise, the stairway fronting U.C.

Seated and puffing away at cigarettes were two babes who were deeply engrossed in watching the U.N.T.D. boys drilling on the front greensward.

Languidly lifting her cigarette, one pointed it in the direction of a bell-trousered undergrad and asked, thoughtfully, "I wonder why he joined the navy instead of the C.O.T.C.? Is it maybe this join-the-navy-and-see-the-world stuff that drew him in?"

The other babe drew the cigarette from her lips to reply. "If I know him," she chuckled evilly, "he probably joined the navy to let the world see him."

And from the U. of Manitoba comes a gruesome little ditty, proving that medsmen are medsmen, no matter where they may be.

Roamin' in the abdomen
With my scalpel by my side;
Roamin' in the abdomen
With Grants' Method by my side.

We are fast becoming convinced that the human race is either turning into one of philosophers or is just plain getting used to it all. A typical example comes from Notre Dame.

A carefree student meandering about the city one evening bumped into an idle and empty steamroller roosting on the crest of a hill. Of course our friend, being a student, hopped in and started off on a joyride down the incline. As the levitation gained momentum, the student lost control, and the two finally ended up in the centre of someone's front parlour at the foot of the hill.

reading a newspaper, gazed at the sudden apparition, the creator of which sat twiddling the controls and looking foolishly at his host. Instead of having the expected hysterics, the gentleman put down his paper resignedly, got the car out of the garage and towed the steamroller and its crestfallen occupant to the top of the hill again. Maybe he was used to it.

And what is a hither without a U. of T. professor? A class was in session when this particular professor hove in sight through the open window, miles (feet, then!) above the ground. With one hand full of drainpipe and the other clutching a glass of water, he saw skittering precariously over the shingles of the slanting roof outside the lecture-room. Then he disappeared.

A moment later he reappeared triumphant through clouds of steam, grinned at the class en route to a bigger and better window, and once again disappeared.

The astounded class would have been labouring under delusions until Doomsday if it had not been revealed that the gallant prof. was doing his good deed for the day by quenching a blaze that had been started on the roof by a cigarette some careless student had heaved out of an upper window.

The universal wail of studentkind has finally found poetic voice in the University of Western Ontario. The sad refrain runs thusly:

"Oh, I am worried till I am weary
O'er this problem grave and deep,
Shall I sleep and lose my breakfast,
Or rise and miss my sleep?"

The third type, however, is one with which I do not agree. That is the high and crazy student . . . that's the one who gets high marks, and is considered crazy. I don't think he is crazy at all!"

Dr. Cody, who recalled his acquaintance with Miss Weir's grandfather when he attended University, reminisced a great deal about his own college days. He prophesied that there would probably never be a period of three or four years to which we shall look back with greater delight than those spent at the university, through our "mortal careers."

The banquet ended in the traditional ceremony of passing the torches, representing U.C. spirit, from the second year presidents down to the first year presidents, who in turn passed it around to all the sophs and frosh present.

Misplaced Kindness

With more and more servicemen returning from the war to resume their education, the policies of all Canadian universities, and the University of Toronto in particular, are being adapted to suit the needs of the veteran. One of the first steps taken in the early years of the war by this university was to draw up regulations endeavoring to make it easier for the returned man to get his degree. According to these regulations a student in the Faculty of Arts who was on active service for more than eight months may be granted credit for academic work up to one year.

That is, the Council of the Faculty of Arts will decide on the basis of a man's academic and active service record how many more years or months of study he must spend at university to qualify for his B.A. The problem that arises now is whether such a policy can be carried through without lowering the standard of the Arts degree or putting the veteran at a distinct disadvantage after graduation.

First of all let us consider the case of the man who intends to use his degree to enter a profession. Probably his wartime career has made him more mature in his social and mental outlook than the average undergraduate, but has it taught him the concrete facts of economics, modern languages, science, law or mathematics? The knowledge of those facts is going to determine his success later on, not, whether we like it or not, his record on the battlefield. Will curtailing his course assist him as a lawyer, a scientist, a teacher or in an academic career? Many men will not accept this offer but will consider it wiser to complete their courses in the usual way, but for the others how will the Council determine the amount of credit? It is simple enough to assign so much credit for certain scientific courses given in the forces but it will be extremely difficult to decide how much philosophy or how much history a man has learned during an absence of a year or more from college. The obvious answer to the problem is examinations, and there is no apparent reason why the present examinations are not adequate. That is, in justice to the serviceman, considered both individually and collectively, it would be unfair to shorten the courses for their apparent benefit.

Now if we consider the problem from the point of view of the man who is taking his degree for the sake of its immediate intellectual benefit, he will not be interested in taking courses that he has already covered outside the university and he will not wish to be granted credit for a course he has not taken. Once more our present examination system, provided this system continues to be on the basis for the Arts degree, offers a simple solution.

Lastly we look at the position of the university itself. The standards for an Arts degree at the University of Toronto have always been high. When an individual graduates from a university he has a certain prescribed amount of knowledge whether it is in definite facts or in a knowledge of the arts of thinking and the letters B.A. represent the fact to the public that he has that knowledge. Thus, if we give those letters for something less than that prescribed knowledge we are, to put it quite badly, simply lying to the public and thereby lowering not only our standards but our intellectual prestige.

Perhaps this defence of our present standards may be regarded as unkind and ungrateful to the men who have sacrificed the years of their life to their country that we have put to our education. However, kindness should not be short-sighted.

We could accelerate our courses by continuing through the summer; we could set our standard examinations at a different time of year. Let us extend every possible means to the serviceman, to make his education profitable, but in the final analysis would we not give greater evidence of our gratitude by sending these men from the university as qualified graduates, not as mere bearers of the letters B.A.?

Students' Hour

Tomorrow the students' record programmes resume operation. For almost two hours, any day of the week, students of all faculties can listen to their own selections of records. The choice of programme depends on what the individual student requests. Whether your tastes are for waltzes or symphonies, operas or madrigals; whether you will go to hear every elaboration of a theme or simply to study quietly good music, the chief ambition of the committee in charge is to satisfy your preference. Each student by listing his suggestions may be sure of hearing them when his turn comes. For the sake of fairness, the records first requested will be played first and the committee will determine how often a popular record will be replayed.

The universal recognition of the beauties of good music has spread rapidly among all classes through recent years and nowhere has it been more apparent than among university students. But the university student can afford few concert tickets and few classical recordings. Thus we owe much to the Carnegie Corporation for their gift of a reproducer and more than six hundred albums. Most of us will never have access to such an extensive and representative collection; let us make the most of our opportunity to hear the music we want to hear, now, when we can hear it.

Music Hath Charms

Marian Anderson

Marian Anderson thrilled a capacity audience in Massey Hall Friday night with her superb contralto voice and the whole programme was characterized by sincerity, simplicity and marked restraint. Miss Anderson's tonal control is truly remarkable and her notes full of warmth and richness. Nevertheless there was a certain sameness about her first group of songs, her intonation was imperfect, and her power seemed lessened.

In the Schubert group she caught the sheer lyric beauty of the German Lieder. Wohin, with words by Muller, was full of spontaneous joy. The ever-popular Serenade had new undiscovered beauty. Haley's Aria gave us an inkling of Miss Anderson's fine technical ability. High clear head tones contrasted with deep sonority. Her modern group was most effective and impressive in its simplicity. The final group of Negro Spirituals combined the lyric with the dramatic.

There was no sensationalism about Miss Anderson's recital. We felt she sang because she loved to sing.

An Auspicious Opening

New Scholarships Open to Women

H. H. Art Classes Begin New Season

Several new scholarships and fellowships are open to university women, it was announced recently. Two scholarships of $1,250 and $850, donated by the Canadian Federation of University Women, are available to all women holding a Canadian university degree. The awards will be based on evidence of character, intellectual achievement and promise.

Preference will be given, to those students who have a definite course of study or research in view.

The travelling scholarship of $1,250 is open to graduate women of not more than 35 years of age at the time of university graduation and whose domicile is in Canada.

The Junior scholarship of $850 is available to any woman not more than 25 years of age at the time of receiving degree and who is a resident of Canada. The Aurelia Henry Reinhardt International Fellowship of $1,500, established by the South Pacific Region of the American Association of University Women is offered for 1945-46.

The fellowship, open to all members of associations or federations of university women forming branches of the

The first meeting of the Art Classes for the season 1944-45 was held in the Art Gallery of Hart House last week with about 25 students attending. Mr. Bickert, Warden of Hart House, outlined the program for the coming season, emphasizing the variety of crafts in which instruction will be given.

Mr. Caven Atkins, who is directing the classes this season, expressed the opinion that anyone who can see can gain satisfaction and relaxation from drawing. Anyone interested in the crafts, including clay modelling, wood-carving, etching, and line-cutting is invited to meet Mr. Atkins on Tuesday at five p.m.

Mr. Atkins also referred to a course in silk-screen printing, the elaborate equipment for which is not at the moment at hand, but which can be secured "if enough students are interested enough to see the course through."

"I don't want to discourage anyone," he remarked, "but the process is quite elaborate, and perseverance is a necessary requisite to success. We cannot afford equipment for those who do not intend to see the course through."

There will be an exhibit of the work done by these classes in April.

Ottawa Calling

THE CAPITAL

By Neil MacDonald

(Editor's Note:—With this issue we commence again for this publication year, a column which aroused wide interest in Canadian camps during 1943-44. "Ottawa Calling" is a non-partisan, purportedly unbiased column of events, present and future, and their interpretation, together with various anecdotes for and against Ottawa's bureaucracy.)

Neil MacDonald, who writes "Ottawa Calling," graduated in 1943 from Victoria College, University of Toronto, and entered the employ of the Personnel Division of the WarTime Prices and Trades Board. A native of Ottawa, he has been observing governmental affairs for long enough to have developed a certain degree of jaundice, if not outright cynicism.)

Outside of elections, provincial and federal, the opening of two new departments in the government, certain scandalous rumours on hospitalization of wounded servicemen and reinforcements for overseas, the most important event to have come up in Ottawa has been the creation of a full-sized (if not full-fledged) symphony orchestra in Ottawa.

Allard de Ridder, ex-violinist of the Hart House String Quartet in Toronto, and before that with the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra, is the conductor of the new Ottawa Philharmonic Orchestra. Native Ottawans are somewhat spellbound by the fact that they have a real, honest-to-goodness symphony orchestra, and the support which the Philharmonic has received in its first two concerts has been gratifying.

There is a propensity, however, for the orchestra to bite off what it cannot properly chew, and there is consequently a certain degree of tension in the audience as it watches the grim struggle. It is somewhat to the credit of the organization that it defeats the enemy—recently Tschakowsky's Sixth—without ravaging the beautiful territories it has conquered.

Speaking of attempting more than is possible of accomplishment, the attempts of the government to provide the millennium at one gulp may or may not meet with success. The Liberal government feels that its chief opponent will be the C.C.F. and has proceeded to defend itself from attack by offering the same prosperity which the advocates of socialism have promised.

It is an interesting spectacle: to see the Liberal party, which traditionally has been the party of "laissez-faire" and "individual liberty" preparing to campaign on a platform which includes state (Continued on page 2)

32 American Universities At Toronto Conference

U.C. Music Hour Begins Tomorrow

Programmes of recorded music will be resumed tomorrow afternoon at 3:45 in the Women's Common Room, University College, it was announced by Professor D. Savan, chairman of the board in charge of records.

"The purpose of the programme," said Professor Savan, "is to give students of every faculty an opportunity of listening to as much good music as they wish. The aim of the committee is to serve the students and any requests or suggestions will be welcomed."

The programme will take place each day from Monday to Friday and will last until 5 o'clock.

The record collection, which numbers 600 volumes, and reproducer, were donated by the Carnegie Corporation in 1941. The concert is open to men and women. Selections will be chosen by the students. Any such requests may be given to Professor Savan in Room 46A, University College.

Women's War Work Re-organized This Year

This year the women's war work has been re-organized to enable women in third and fourth years to give more actual service than before. The girls themselves feel the satisfaction of accomplishing something concrete, said Miss A. E. M. Parkes, Secretary of the S.A.C.

Last year, several courses were offered which consisted chiefly of lectures. Under the new arrangement, second year students give (as before) 60 hours to their training. In third year 60 hours' service is required in one of these fields: Civic Day Nurseries, Hospital Nursing Aides, Community Needs and Resources, First Aid and Home Nursing, and the Red Cross Corps, which can be joined in any year. Although service in the fourth year is optional it is appreciated, added Miss Parkes.

Red Cross Corps members are driving Blood Donor Units, helping in the blood laboratories, and doing telephone and clerical duty at the St. George Street clinic. The blood donations of the University students are arranged by the Red Cross group here.

Gratuities Now Open To Discharged Personnel

It is now possible for former members of the Canadian Forces who have been honourably discharged and are not now serving on Active Service with any Canadian Force, to apply to the Department of Pensions and National Health for the War Service Gratuity.

The same applies to nationals of other countries who have been on active service as members of any Canadian Force. Canadians who have been discharged from other Empire Forces during the present war may apply now, if they are domiciled and resident in Canada, and were domiciled in Canada at the outbreak of hostilities.

Due to the number of persons who have been honourably discharged up to the present time, the authorities emphasize the importance of early action by applicants in order that claims for the gratuity may be cleared reasonably soon after the machinery goes into full operation; in any event payments will not commence prior to January 1, 1945.

Application forms for the gratuity are now available at all Naval, Military, and Air Force units and establishments in Canada.

45th Annual Conference Held During the Past Week-end: Graduate School Problems Discussed

RESEARCH HEAD SPEAKS

At the 45th Annual Conference of the Association of American Universities on October 19, 20 and 21, the University of Toronto was host institution. Representatives at the discussions were Presidents and Deans of Graduate Studies of 32 American universities, McGill University, and the University of Toronto.

The University of Wisconsin held the President's chair, the University of Pennsylvania acted as Vice-president, and Dean W. W. Pierson, of the University of North Carolina, was secretary.

The purpose of this association is to study the graduate work that will take place in the universities that are members, and also to aid deserving scientists doing research work at the various universities. Funds for this work are derived from private gifts and state institutions.

On Thursday, at the King Edward Hotel, Dean C. J. MacKenzie, Acting President, National Research Council of Canada, gave the association a look into the future as to research in Canada and the part the Research Council would play. He declared that the Council has already made 1200 gifts to 700 individuals. He stated that it was one of the most significant contributions to science in Canada as it built up a reasonably sizeable nucleus in Canada of well-trained scientists who could turn to immediately at the outbreak of war to war problems. "At the beginning of the last war," he said, "we had only a handful of trained scientists."

The Presidents and their representatives held an informal meeting later on in the evening to discuss the problems of admission to the Graduate Schools.

On Friday in the Senate Chamber, Simcoe Hall, Major Clark, of the Office of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, spoke on the administration of laws passed by Congress for returned veterans.

After a luncheon at Hart House the representatives heard Professor J. Milton Cowan, State University of Iowa, and Secretary, Linguistic Society of America, speak on Area Studies in the College Curriculum. Following him Dr. Donald R. Young, Social Research Council, lectured on the facilitation of the transfer of social scientists from war activities to post-war employment.

The conference ended on Saturday with a business session at which the reports of officers and committees and all unfinished and new business were taken up.

Prof. Tommy Loudon Heads Athletic Board

Professor T. R. "Tommy" Loudon, of Civil Engineering and Aeronautics, and Commanding Officer of the University Air Squadron, has been appointed President of the University of Toronto Athletic Directorate. Previous to this he had been selected by the Advisory Board of the University as their representative on the Athletic Directorate.

Professor Loudon succeeds the late Dr. John A. McCollum who held the office of president for twelve years.

Professor Loudon had been on the Athletic Directorate for some years, but had to retire from his duties in 1940, when he was loaned to the R.C.A.F.

Professor Loudon is the seventh president of the Athletic Directorate since his uncle, James Loudon, held that position in 1900.

Don Gibson, fourth year S.P.S., was named vice-president of the Directorate as representative of the student body. Gibson is president of the S.P.S. Athletic Association.

Let. We take this opportunity to welcome two new members to Hart House Quartet, Mr. Cyril Glyde, who plays the viola, and the 2nd violinist, Mr. Henry Milligan.

Mozart's Quartet in D minor, far more serious than most of his works, is perhaps the strangest string-quartet the composer ever wrote. Although here the viola was too much overshadowed by the other instruments, the presentation was very impressively done. Frank Bridge's somewhat confused popular Loudouerry Air formed the transition to the evening's major and most successful piece, Dvorak's Quartet in F major. Like the famous New World Symphony, this exceedingly beautiful work was inspired and written during Dvorak's visit to America, and has thus very much in common with the mood and general sentiment of that great symphony. The second (slow) movement is particularly striking in the simple majestic expression of emotion.

As an encore, Boccherini's charming Minuet, which was also the encore of the Quartet's first performance in Hart House last year, brought a very enjoyable evening to a close.

SPORTPOURRI

Men

By Mickey Michasio

Much to the surprise and embarrassment of this department, the vaunted football squad from St. Mike's fell before the onslaught of the unheralded team from Vic by a 12-5 count. The Irish were unable to cope with the charging Vic line and this proved to be the margin of victory. . . . In the second quarter, Butch O'Malley threw a twenty-five yard touchdown pass to Hamilton to open the scoring. Hamilton converted. The other major was the result of loose play on the part of the Gauls. Scott picked up a loose ball on St. Mike's three-yard line and reeled over. Hamilton again converted. Realizing their doom, the team bucked up and a Petruccio-Blaith-watie pass was good for a touch which went unconverted. . . . Figures don't lie and the game is now a record but we are insistent in maintaining that the Irish are the better team on paper. If they make up their minds to play the game, Vic and the other two teams will be forced to look up. . . . Friday afternoon saw the completion of the singles tournament and brought about another stunning upset when Trinity's Lan defeated Young of U.C. in five hard-fought sets on the tennis courts of St. Hilda's. The scores were 3-6, 6-2, 7-5, 0-6, and 6-3. Thus Lan succeeds Mel Jones and retains the McEachern Cup for his college. The doubles continue today.

At long last the end of the tennis season looms on the horizon—and surprisingly enough ahead of the first blizzard! The quarter-finals last week exhibited some of the best tennis to be seen around the campus in quite a few seasons. Marg Alexander defeated Harriet Morton 9-5, 6-3 and then went on to put herself into the finals by defeating Kay Bliss 6-1, 6-4 in straight sets. "D. J." Saunders defeated Betsy Mosbaugh 9-7, 4-6, 6-2 in a long-drawn-out battle. The finals will be played today and are well worth seeing for several reasons. Firstly, because both girls play a superlative brand of tennis which is a delight to watch, and secondly, because of an occurrence possibly unique in the annals of Varsity Women's sport. St. Hilda's having had four out of six players in the semi-finals is faced with having the same two girls playing off for the St. Hilda's and the Varsity tournaments. Yes, amazing though it is, "D. J." and Marg are going to have to decide the winner of both tournaments in the next few days. We are wondering whether they will play off twice or settle things with a single match. At any rate, you tennis enthusiasts—don't miss this match.

One more game of the fall baseball schedule was played on Saturday at Trinity. Field when P.H.E. A team defeated U.C. A team 32-13. It is very encouraging to realize that Varsity girls are playing better baseball each year. Perhaps at some future date, if the number of people interested in baseball increase as it has in the past, we may see some really professional ball played on the campus.

International Federation of University Women, is to enable the holder to carry on one year's research in some country other than her own. Candidates are advised to ascertain in advance whether the university or institution in which they propose to carry on research can provide suitable facilities for their particular subject.

Four international fellowships are being offered to members of National Associations affiliated to the I.F.U.W. to enable holders to undertake a year's research in some country other than their own during the academic year 1945-46.

The I.F.U.W. International Fellowship, with a value of $250, is designated as to subject, but preference will be given to applications in the arts.

The Mary E. Woolley International Fellowship, valued at $1,500, was established by the North New England Unit of the American Association of University Women, and the Helen Marr Kirby International Fellowship with a value of $1,500 was established by the Texas State Division of the A.A.U.W.

The Marion Reilly International Award with the value of $500, established by the Philadelphia branch of the A.A.U.W., is to be used in any way approved by the awarding committee to further a research project already begun or to be undertaken by the candidate.

During the war the condition is not insisted upon that the research shall be undertaken in a country other than that in which the holder has received her education or habitually resides.

Canadian Youth Commission

There is an alarming lack of knowledge among the students at this University regarding the purpose, work, aims, and machinery of the Canadian Youth Commission. In today's Varsity there appears a feature story outlining the organization and workings of this very active and valuable body. Already much of the preliminary work of the Commission has been completed, but much still remains to be done.

The C.Y.C. is composed of a highly representative group of some fifty Canadian citizens, of different religious faiths and political creeds, drawn together by a common interest in youth and its problems. The life of the Commission is two years, and during that time the Commission intends to investigate the present plans to deal with the post-war problems of youth as proposed by the various youth movements and organizations, and to consult the attitude of youth itself. Through the medium of committees composed of experts in many lines, they will formulate a policy of their own, and suggest improvements to the existing plans regarding the problems. They strive to provoke discussion and thought on the special questions, as widely as possible, and have suggestions on the policies formulated come from the youthful stratum of society. Finally, at the end of the two years, in which time its studies and recommendations will have been completed, the Commission intends to submit a report to the Federal Government so that legislative action may be taken on the results of this detailed investigation into the matter.

These public spirited citizens feel that society owes a large debt to the young men and women who are at present sacrificing so much of their youth in the struggle against the enemy. They wish to see that these heroes fare better when they return from the wars than many young people did during the depression. This can only be done by providing adequate opportunity for them in post-war Canada—opportunity for education, for recreation, and for health services.

University students should have strong and keen interest in the work of the Commission. As young people just about to set out into the world, as young people who by virtue of their education are better equipped than most to become the leaders of the future, the policies formulated by the C.Y.C. should have the utmost importance for them. For these reasons, they should study and discuss the questions now being investigated by the Provincial Conferences of the Canadian Youth Commission. The only approach to the solution of these problems is through an extended period of study. As a result of this, much uninformed and worthless discussion can be avoided when a conference is held to consult the views of university students.

At a recent meeting of the Students' Administrative Council of this University, it was proposed that the Interfaculty Debating Union choose for the subjects of their debates the problems being studied by the Commission. In this way, the complexities of the questions could be brought before the students and thought and discussion on these subjects would be provoked on the campus.

The need for a carefully prepared campaign with which to attack the manifold problems that will beset the young people of this country in the future is obvious. For this reason, the work of the Canadian Youth Commission merits the attention and support of every conscientious citizen, and especially does it merit the attention of every thinking University student.

Phil Kerwin, 4T4 Killed in Accident

Philip John Kerwin, who graduated from the University last spring, was killed in an accident at Fredericton, N.B., Oct. 20, according to word received here yesterday. At the time of his death he was working for the National Film Board.

Kerwin, whose home was in Ottawa, graduated from University College in the class of 4T4, in English Language and Literature. During his undergraduate career, he contributed to The Varsity, and the Undergraduate, the University College magazine.

It was reported that at the time he was transporting equipment in a Film Board truck, when it collided with another vehicle.

Four Ambassadors Offered Degrees

Vancouver—(CUP)—The ambassadors to Canada of four of the United Nations have been invited to accept honorary degrees at the fall convocation of the University of British Columbia on October 25.

The Hon. Ray Atherton, U.S. ambassador, Dr. Liu Shi Shun of China, the Rt. Hon. Malcolm MacDonald of Great Britain, and Gregori I. Tounkin, Russian ambassador, have been invited to accept the degrees.

Convocation this year will involve two ceremonies. The annual conferring of degrees to those not eligible to receive them in the spring will be combined with the installation of the President, Dr. Norman A. MacKenzie, by Chancellor Hamber.

The Record Hour

The record programme which will be held today at 3:45 is open to all students of every faculty and college. The selections are as follows:

Mendelssohn—Midsummer Night's Dream ...
Mozart—Selections from Don Giovanni
Tchaikovsky—Piano Concerto No. 1

ATTENTION

Students in the colleges and faculties which are members of the Students' Administrative Council, who have failed to obtain copies of the Students' Handbook, may do so at the Students' Administrative Council office, Hart House.

Canadian Youth Commission Will Hold Group Debates Here

The Canadian Youth Commission, which is now about a year old, strives to represent and understand Canadian youth between the ages of 15 and 24 of all sections of the country, stated Miss M. Brechin of the National Committee of the Commission here, in a recent interview.

The Canadian Youth Commission, originally closely affiliated with the Y.M.C.A., is today an independent body, privately financed.

At the present time, Provincial Committees have been organized in all the provinces of Canada with the exception of Prince Edward Island. Local sub-committees are to be found in many small places all over the Dominion and some 1000 youth groups are scattered across the country.

The composition of the Commission from the top down represents all sections of Canadian youth, racial and religious, academic and industrial, and all of the Armed Services.

The work of the Commission comes under seven general headings of the problems to be faced by youth in the post-war era: employment, education, health, family life, religion, recreation, and citizenship.

Among the members of the Commission are: Dr. Sidney Smith, Principal of University College, and president-elect of the University of Toronto, who is the National Chairman of the Commission; Major-General G. Brock Chisholm, Director of the Canadian Army Medical Services, who heads the Health Committee; Dr. G. F. McNally, Deputy Minister of Education of Alberta, who is the education expert; F. S. Patten of the Collegiate Institute Board at Ottawa, who leads the Employment Committee; and Mr. Brooke Claxton, Minister of Health and Welfare at Ottawa, who is also a member of the Commission.

A staff of experts works on the reports and bulletins which are submitted to and studied by the youth groups throughout the country. Conferences, with an attendance of several hundred young people in each case, have been held this past summer in the West, and further conferences will take place this fall and winter at Halifax, Fredericton, and at Montreal.

The latter conference will represent both the English and French youth of the province of Quebec.

The youth of Ontario will take part in the three-week programme of the Ontario Division from October 23 to November 6. More than 3000 are expected to participate in the youth-group discussions of the bulletins prepared by the Commission.

The results of these debates will be sent to the National Committee and will be included among the material gathered in the discussions and conferences in the rest of Canada to be presented to the Government when it sits next spring.

I.S.S. Student Aid Shown in Letter

Evidence of the aid rendered to destitute students in the Far East was brought to the attention of the Publicity Committee of the International Student Service last night.

A letter, direct from Chungking, and postmarked Sept. 20, 1944, was received by Mrs. W. L. Grant, Chairman of the Canadian I.S.S. Committee, in answer to a report announcing that funds contributed by Canadian students would arrive there shortly.

"This five thousand Canadian dollars will probably amount to about half a million dollars in Chinese currency under the present exchange arrangement," stated Mr. P. W. Moritz in the letter. "Though because of the inflation this amount buys much less than formerly, the contribution is still a considerable one and is sincerely appreciated by us here, particularly so because we know it expresses the friendship and concern of Canadian students. In the distribution of the money we will try to make vivid to students here the source from which it comes."

The letter then conveys some of the hardships facing students in Free China: "Last summer during the first emergency which arose out of the Japanese attack on Honan, we appealed to the Chinese War Relief Fund of Canada for a grant of money to help students forced to evacuate by the Japanese attack. . . . These present attempts of the Japanese to consolidate positions in Central China have forced a new student migration which, . . . works great hardships on large numbers of students already impoverished by earlier evacuations and long years of separation from family . . . and we are happy that the support of friends in Canada and Britain and U.S. (Continued on page 2)

Former Varsity Staffer Was Awarded D.F.C.

A graduate of the University here, where he was at one time managing editor of The Varsity, Flight-Officer Lloyd G. McDonald has been awarded the D.F.C., it was announced in Ottawa recently.

Graduation Exercises Addressed by Dr. Cody

The Toronto Conservatory of Music, under the auspices of the University of Toronto held their graduation exercises and presentations of diplomas and medals at Convocation Hall last night.

In his address to the graduating class, the Rev. H. J. Cody declared that all music is to honour God, and to refresh the soul of man. He said melody is the purpose of life, harmony the co-ordination, and rhythm the discrimination.

The programme was preceded by a brief organ recital by Eric Rollinson, F.R.C.O.

After introductory remarks by Mr. H. H. Bishop and Mr. Norman Wilks, M.C., Sir Ernest MacMillan, Professor Leo Smith, and Professor Healey Willan presented diplomas of Licentiate and Associateship to the candidates.

Earle Moss, Audrey Farnell, Charles Dobias and Elizabeth Gallimore presented several musical selections.

The degree of L.T.C.M. was presented to Nora Lindner, Earle R. Moss, Colleen Sadler, Margaret Sheppard, Ruth Youngblood, Elizabeth Gallimore and Lily McVeigh.

Guest Speaker of Victoria Women's Literary Society Declares Women Sole Carriers of Torch of Liberal Education

EXECUTIVES SPEAK

Professor H. N. Frye, guest speaker at the annual Tea and business meeting of the Victoria Women's Literary Society, held at Wymilwood yesterday afternoon, talked on the position of the literary woman in a wartime world. Professor Frye is on the English staff of Victoria College.

Professor Frye pointed out that in the hustle and bustle of modern life woman, the largely unemployed class, remained the sole carriers of the torch of liberal education. The preservation of good taste and discrimination he believes to be the function of women's clubs. He admitted he always liked to attend these clubs in his position as a benevolent father of the college.

Miss Coburn, honorary president, greeted the first year students.

Elizabeth Hopper, IV Music, president of the Women's Literary Society, then outlined the functions of the club, calling upon the various executive members to speak on their particular groups.

The Writers' Group, convened by Fran Ziemann, associate president, plans to follow its usual programme as a critical outlet for creative writing. Its first meeting will be held Tuesday the 31st at Wymilwood.

The Music Group, under Secretary Jackie Doherty, IV Music, is to listen to records and enjoy some elementary instruction in music appreciation.

The Art Group plans to visit leading exhibits and the studios of artists with its convener, Helen Clugston, 3rd year representative of the Society.

Finally, the French-Canadian Group, with Patsy Gordon, IV Modern Languages, formed for the study of literary, political and economic aspects of Quebec, will discuss and listen to guest speakers on the subject.

Final notices of the dates and places of these groups will be posted on the Vic. bulletin board. Both men and women are welcome.

Affairs Club Given View Of Communism in China

The present government of China is not democratic, in fact China has never had an election, stated Dr. R. F. Brown in an address on the Communist Party in China at an International Affairs Club meeting yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Brown said that the Chinese Communist Party resembled fundamentally the Russian Communist Party in that the most enthusiastic members of the Party are students of the Universities. Anyone who opposes the military dictatorship is labelled a Communist.

He explained that people outside China often think that its government is democratic, fighting against the invading power of militarism. All that the Communists want is a popular government, to develop a great national China which will be able to take her place in the world.

The Communists are bitter about past exploitation of their natural resources by foreign countries, stated Dr. Brown. He believed that this has caused much adverse feeling towards members of the United Nations, he added.

Dr. Brown is a graduate of the Toronto Medical School, and was a doctor in St. Paul's Hospital in Honan. Since the fall of that province to the Japanese, Dr. Brown has been serving in the Communist Army Medical Corps.

Domicile Dictator

The Howard Lindsay and Russell Croues play version of Clarence Day's "Life With Father" was rollicking, mirthful entertainment, keeping an enthusiastic first-night audience in fits of laughter throughout the performance and sending them off in a mellow, satisfied mood.

Playing the stamping, ranting, shouting Clarence Day Sr. in a flamboyant red wig, Carl Benton Reid brought out to a maximum degree all the egotism and cocksureness of this family martinet, made so familiar to millions of people through the medium of his son's famous series of homelife sketches.

His lovable wife, Vinnie, with hair of a delicate auburn, played with marvellous control by Betty Linley, showed in a subtle and quiet way Mrs. Day's power and mastery over her tempestuous husband. Miss Linley showed less tendency to over-act than anyone else in the whole comedy.

The supporting cast was, on the whole, flawless with the exception of two of the child actors playing the parts of the Day children, and they won the audience by their sweet childlike coyness.

The first impression gained was that the play was being badly overdone, until at the end of the first scene the fact came to light that the play was not drama or comedy, but burlesque. Mr. Reid rises to great height when the play is viewed from this standpoint. His silent soliloquies in the second act, when his wife was ill, were indeed masterful bits of acting.

A novel surprise awaited the audience in the curtain calls. Instead of the whole cast coming forth and bowing and smiling over the footlights, the members of the cast appeared in photographer's groups reminiscent of the 1890's. The stage setting was excellent and conveyed the period down to the waxed floor-boards and smallest Dresden figure in the corner shelves.

Airways

For the remainder of the month The Toronto Art Gallery has changed several of its rooms into a nightmare of globes, charts, photographs and models, in an attempt to make us understand that, with the aid of world-wide airways, a lasting peace can be made possible.

The exhibition begins with Leonardo's first attempts at flight and, step by step, brings us to the modern transport and war plane. From here we are led to some excellent photographs of the different theatres of war—which, incidentally, have very little to do with aviation—but just the same are good as documentary material. There is one picture of a wounded American soldier, probably blind, being led by a South Pacific native, which makes one stop and think about the amount of truth in the theory that the natives are losing their respect for the white man when they see him beaten and wounded.

Exhibited also are some interesting charts on air-lanes, air-traffic controls, as well as many other post-war ideas for improved flying conditions. Plans for aviation after the war look bright indeed. But the most colourful part of the whole exhibit is the maps and globes that seem to flood the place. It has everything from a sphere about twelve feet high to a collapsible one less than a foot tall. And they all stress the same thing—world-wide thought.

So, if you are an aviation enthusiast, or even a geography student, "Airways to Peace" should prove a source of interest and education.

ISRAEL SHOPSOWITZ

The play was a novel, exhilarating piece of entertainment, especially to those people who have come to love the members of the Day family and their tumultuous home.

DEWEY
DON'T WE

The ambitious kitten, set on outlining in detail for Varsity readers its campaign for top recognition on Page Two, hereby submits the following in its own inimitable style.

dear folks

the battle is on and the fight must be won for all who desire a cat that is fun i am the man you want brother from poisonous politics i will depart and from the libellous, mud-slinging art of my aged and maledorons mother she has reported, to this kitten's rage that i have been drinking at too early an age the tendency is there, i admit but that's not an answer to my solemn plea where would this paper be without me whether or not i be lit on one sunday night, i answered the call and came to the press for the issue so small much too small for garrulous cats please pay no heed to the wild fiftal dream not to change cats in the midst of a stream that's a cliché for political rats so without more ado i'll come to the point though i'm young and i'm small, i'll live the joint yours truly, the still nameless kitten.

Architecture Graduate In England to Study

A Bachelor of Architecture from the University of Toronto, Mrs. Martha Leitch, 26, has arrived in London, England, to study British methods of town planning, housing scheme and state management.

As a recipient of a British Council scholarship, Mrs. Leitch will be given an opportunity to travel through the United Kingdom to study the ways in which housing problems have been met. "I'm particularly interested in schemes for slum clearance and town planning in Canada after the war," Mrs. Leitch stated in an interview. Most of her work will be done under guidance of the Housing Centre Association for Planning and Reconstruction.

Senior School of Practical Science has left little doubt in the minds of its followers as to which is the strongest team in the intramural football set-up. The 20-0 posting the Skoolmen handed Dents yesterday further indicated their already apparent strength. . . . Weight and experience proved the difference in the two clubs. The football displayed was not of the hipper-dipper variety but the odd flash came to light as School used that smooth lateral to good advantage. Oent's Bob Murray was easily the outstanding man on the grid with his prolific kicking. His lighter mates were hampered by the heavy opponents line. . . . Jim Bromley terminated a steady downhill march in the first quarter by crossing the line standing up. Clare converted. From that point, the result was never in doubt. Vern Booth added another major to the mounting score and again Clare converted. Oong Keary chalked up the final five points for the winners and George Shaw's try was good. In between these majors were sandwiched two singles. . . . All in all, School has a team the supporters can really get behind.

The vaunted Redmen of McGill fell before the Navy team from H.M.C.S. Donaucon in the opening game of the Q.R.F.U. The score was 16-6. A fumble and a pass interception brought about the defeat. The steady downpour heavily favoured the Tars who were quick to take advantage of the breaks. . . . Western can really sit up now and cheer. Only a short week ago the Mustangs squeezed out a 3-4 over the same Navy team. . . . The Redmen need only keep out of sight of the rampaging Mustangs to save face.

M & P Society Meeting To Hear Dr. C. Barnes

This afternoon the M. & P. Society is holding a meeting in the Physics Building, in Room 18, at 4:30. Dr. C. Barnes, of the Physics staff, will address the club on "Disc Recordings."

The three different types of disc recordings which are commercial gramophone recordings, electrical transcriptions and instantaneous recordings, will be described in all phases of their manufacture and use. The design and the speed of each of these methods will be discussed along with information on auxiliary equipment which must be used with each.

Concerning the future of the recording business, other methods which may supersede the present ones will be outlined.

Very Rev. Dr. Nicholson Heads St. Francois Xavier

Antigonish, N.S.—(CUP)—The Very Rev. Dr. P. J. Nicholson, Oean of Studies and Professor of Physics at St. Francois Xavier University, has succeeded the Very Rev. Dr. D. J. MacDonald as President-Rector at the university.

Dr. MacDonald graduated from St. Francois Xavier in 1900, attended the Propaganda College in Rome, and was ordained in 1904, receiving his M.A. in 1911 at the Catholic University of America.

Dr. Nicholson graduated from St. Francois Xavier in 1909, and received his Ph.D. from Johns Hopkins University in 1912. He then returned as Professor of Physics, and was ordained as a priest in 1916. He also has been Secretary of the Advisory Committee for Education in the Maritimes and Newfoundland since 1914.

Women

Although not snowing, the wind blew cold as the tennis finals were played yesterday. The two girls involved played good tennis although D. J. did not seem to be in top "D. J. form." From the first, Marg, had the measure of her opponent and made almost every swipe of her racket count. Marg, Alexander has a beautiful topspin that never fails her and placed her balls neatly in all and every corner of the court. This to us is constantly amazing in any player, as we hit and pray in the same breath. Dorothy Jane Sanders has a style that is beautiful and her backhand, carried full through as always, is her most telling stroke. It finally boiled down to a case of court tactics, and hard slugging in many cases, and Margaret Alexander seemed to be able to slug just once longer and better and harder than her opponent. The Alexander serve has flames streaking out behind it.

For those really interested in seeing a return match we would advise that you wend your way up to the St. Hilda's courts and see the same pair fight it out for the College championship. Maybe it won't be a revenge match, but we'll guarantee it will be a good one.

In the Baseball Field, Meds were defeated by St. Hilda's 17-6 yesterday. This was a good game and did much to restore the Saints' damaged ego. We wonder about the Meds' ego, though. We also wonder what will happen if in any one group each team wins and loses one game. A quick glance over the schedule will tell you that it won't be good, as nothing will be decided at all, and three more games will have to be played. We hope that the teams will be decisive about this thing and will either win all or nothing at all.

Lois Oowson has once more sent us a little note telling us to inform the world, and of course the world reads "the woman", that all basketball heads are to meet in Room 82, U.C. today at 4:00. This is a very important meeting as the schedule is to be reshaped, and though this a hard job with co-operation, it is next to impossible without it.

'Novels Of Intelligence' Written By Henry James Says Alexander Lecturer

Prof. F. O. Matthiessen of Harvard opens first Alexander Lectures with discussion of major period of Henry James

"GREATEST U.S. NOVELIST"

In the first of the Alexander lectures yesterday afternoon Professor F. O. Matthiessen of Harvard University began his discussion of the major period of the novelist, Henry James.

Prof. Matthiessen stated at the opening of his lecture that he had "a deep conviction that Henry James is the greatest American novelist," and that the author's life on the continent had not made him less so. The vitality of culture will have to depend more and more on international relations and as a forerunner of such a culture, Henry James is valuable, he continued.

The notebooks of Henry James, which Prof. Matthiessen stated had been at his disposal, indicated that "the main decision of his career had been the decision to live in Europe." From these notebooks it was also evident that he had "the first ideas of his three crowning works, eight to a dozen years before the final writing." Often, James admitted, the ideas of his stories first came to him while talking with ladies at dinner.

"There is a vast difference between James' method and the stream of consciousness technique," Prof. Matthiessen said. "No welling up of the dark subconscious is present; these are novels of the intelligence."

"The challenge to live becomes the essential expression of them running through all his work; his characters want to live more intensely," he said. This is the theme of The Ambassadors. (Continued on page 3)

Welfare Chest To Be Helped By U.C. Drive

University College will hold its campaign for the United Welfare Chest on October 25, 26 and 27, it was announced last night. "I hope that the students will forego the occasional coke or cup of coffee and give as generously as they feel they can, since this is one of the three drives that U.C. supports," stated Mary Ferguson, Social Service director of the Women's Undergraduate Association.

The United Welfare Chest combines 75 welfare agencies into one so that greater efficiency and a greater amount of service is possible. There will be a box in the U.C. rotunda for three mornings beginning Wednesday, October 25. All the U.C. residents will be canvassed and red ribbons will identify the contributors to this campaign.

It's a Rough Business Ex-Lumberjack Tells Club

Mr. B. G. Pennock, Chief Sealer of the Dept. of Lands and Forests, and an ex-lumberjack, addressed the Foresters' Club last night on "Life in the Lumber Camps—45 Years Ago," which address was an account of his own experiences.

The speaker said he was initiated into the lumbering business forty-five years ago with a large lumber company, beginning operations in wonderful stands of virgin timber. The difficulties in establishing camp then were many compared with today. The jacks themselves had to select the site, clear it,

Avukah Speaker Urges Attitude Of Jewish Unity

At the first meeting of the term, the Avukah organization held a symposium entitled "The Jewish Student in the World Around Him." The chairman was Dr. S. B. Hurwich, a former student of the University of Toronto, now a pediatrician, gave a brief review of the history of the Jews, summing it up by stating the fact that at present they are a people surviving in a novel way, in that they do not have a political state, and are without a national entity. This has resulted in the Jewish problem in that there has been many invisible barriers built up against him, said the speaker.

"We Jews have a tendency to escape from recognition of our own religious principles. Rather than this negative attitude we should adopt a more positive attitude, and get respect by contributions as a human being and a Jew," said Dr. Hurwich. This idea was reiterated by Miss Ruby Garbath, and also by the other two speakers in the symposium, Mr. Max Rosenfeld and Mr. Julius Sokoloff.

Wymilwood Concert To Feature Tredwell At Opening on Nov. 5

Eric Tredwell, baritone, accompanied by Frances Marr, will open this year's series of Wymilwood Concerts next Sunday night. They alternate with the Hart House Sunday Evening Concerts.

A cordial welcome is extended to students of all faculties by the committee, John Speers, director, told The Varsity today. "These concerts have always been well attended and much enjoyed," he said, "but we would like to make it more generally known that they do not require tickets and are open to all students."

He spoke of the high standards of last year's concerts, which ended in the spring with a recital by the Parlow String Quartet. "And," he added, "our plans for this year promise an equally successful season."

make their own axe handles, hew the timber for the camp and construct their buildings.

Once set up, the camp consisted of one large log-cabin, used as bunkhouse and cook-house, and sometimes of several smaller storage buildings. The main building, he said, had no modern lighting; only two small windows; a broad open chimney; a lamp, and two lanterns. Two tiers of bunks, to accommodate 80 men, lined the walls. The centre of the floor was given over to the open fireplace.

STUDENT COUNCIL

Saskatoon—(CUP)—Correspondence passing this summer between Bob Ellis, President of the University of Saskatchewan's Students' Representative Council, and heads of student bodies in other Canadian universities indicates that immediate action will be taken toward instituting a national council for the handling of student affairs.

Documents were sent to the student heads of all universities in Canada and those contacted expressed their willingness to co-operate. The need for such a council, they decided, was great in all universities, and the business that could be accomplished would be of great benefit to all students.

The national council may take one of two forms. It may consist of a re-organization of the old National Federation of Canadian University Students which was dissolved in 1939 on the outbreak of war, or a new representative council may be formed.

Lawrence, Kansas—(CUP)—Extension of aid by the federal government of the United States to universities adversely affected by the war may be recommended to the house education committee by a group of leading educationists, in accord with action taken at a meeting of university presidents recently, Washington reports.

Phases of investigation undertaken included financial readjustment in 1944-45, desirability of the government's providing a program to aid universities, appropriations that might justifiably be made, and income tax law revision which might assist universities in soliciting funds.

Motion that Canada Can Maintain its Position as a Nation, half French and half-English is Upheld at Vic Debate

AFFIRMATIVE PARTY WINS

"Resolved that Canada can maintain its position as a nation, half-French and half-English" was the subject of the opening debate of the Vic Debating Parliament held last night in Alumni Hall. Royce Frith, III Law, was elected Speaker of the House, and presided during the debate. Dean Bennett, as Lieutenant Governor, officially opened the parliament with the speech from the throne.

John Speers, IV English Lang. and Lit., as first speaker for the affirmative, stated that "assimilation in Quebec is an idle dream because of the cultural diversity of the people." He also added that the situation of misunderstanding can only be improved by a lessening of imperial tendencies by the British, and by a revision of the educational system in Quebec.

Marg. Albright, IV History, in upholding the negative, contended that "Canada was like non-identical Siamese twins, inseparably linked together, but following their separate bents." This split-personality must be remedied, she said.

Ruth Johnston, IV Moderns, speaking for the affirmative, held that these differences did not indicate that the country was ready to divide, but was a sign that it was healthily alive. She added that an interest in bilingualism, as shown by the

If Oxford Can Do It . . .

Oxford University has recently taken steps towards the establishment of a school of drama. A commission which will study methods of drama instruction pursued in American universities will be sent out next year. Those familiar with that university will realize the tremendous radicalism of such a step.

In the past, there has been constant fear that the academic standard of a university would be lowered by the addition of courses in dramatics or journalism. Undoubtedly the advocates of "Higher Learning in America" would treat such a suggestion with disdain. President Hutchins of the University of Chicago has pointed out that the primary aim of a university is intellectual. "A college or university," he stated, "has a vast and complicated job if it does only what it can do. In general education, therefore, we may wisely leave experience to life and set about our job of intellectual training."

It seems quite compatible with the aim of a university to stringently select certain campus activities in order to integrate them with the curricula. Of necessity such a selection must be made on a purely intellectual basis so that the university may not go beyond its boundaries by teaching what may be found elsewhere.

One extra curricula activity which could become a university course is the dramatic society. Its subject matter is not inconsistent with the intellectual and aesthetic standards of any educational institution.

The need for such an addition to higher learning in Canada is as great as that of a course in journalism. Canadian men in both literary and dramatic fields have been of a negligible quantity. With few exceptions, any potential talent has been swallowed up by the United States, where abilities are fostered.

This campus is equipped with one of the best theatres in Canada. At one time the student body evidenced a lively interest in the acting and directing of productions. Not only contemporary plays but also the works of earlier centuries were enacted. Today those eager for dramatics may participate in the one or two night stand put on by their faculty in Hart House.

Our present course in English Language and Literature provides a study of Greek classical and English drama. But the actual work and technique of theatrical presentation has no part in university studies.

The introduction of a study of the theatre into the English course would bring a closer correlation between seventeenth century drama and the modern mind. The actual presentation of plays relevant to the English course would constitute a subsidiary part in the formation of a school of dramatics.

The creation of such a school would not sacrifice the content of education to the dictates of commercially minded donors. It would effect a balance in any programme of expansion concerned chiefly with scientific research.

Will This Happen Here?

The Christian Science Monitor tells the sad tale of dwindling interest in the soldier-scholarship plan of New York State. Out of a possible 1,200 scholarships only 449 veterans made application and of those 314 accepted admission to university.

Returned men in Canada are fortunate in being able to have their first two years of college financed. But it is obvious that resumption or commencement of a university career will not always appear as the logical solution to World War II's veterans.

Great stress is being laid on the type of course which these men should study. The majority of them on this campus have been persuaded to take "something useful" in order to fit them for the future. Whether they are so inclined or not is apparently irrelevant to the issue. The point that is urged home by whomever is guiding them is that they must get their year. A man who has been forced to learn how to kill will naturally be adverse to being enrolled in a course unsuited to either his tastes or capacity. He will pass through the very difficult stage of readjustment as it is, without wondering whether or not he is a round peg in a square hole.

How many returned men will complete their university studies? Great care must be taken in the selection of their courses. The last five years have presented an "essential" attitude concerning education. These men represent the remnants of a generation blotted out by war. They will take their place in a society whose structure is basically peaceful. Is it not their privilege to choose their courses from other than an "essential" point of view? Unoubtedly war has changed their concepts and caused them no small amount of insecurity so that they will naturally seek a financially sound career. But in so doing the foundations are being laid for similar selections by succeeding generations who will be subject to the influence of these men.

Such a situation again drags out that old bone of contention concerning the humanities. In the present case, however, the humanities will not be subject to war.

Education For Speed

According to a recent issue of Saturday Night, educators may now learn their method from army tempo. By ability tests, vocational guidance and visual aids, the army has been responsible for young men romping through four years of algebra in a few months as well as a course in first year physics.

The article suggests that such methods could be used profitably at university. We tacitly agree to the introduction of guidance in the selection of a course but the thought of visual aids as an addition to the curriculum appalls us.

By the time students reach university, they should be of the calibre that does not find the use of films to illustrate a lecture necessary. The fundamentals of knowledge are constant. Any accidental features that will ease the student's mental gymnastics should be left to secondary schools. Attendance at university means or should mean the appreciation of a stern mental discipline. Unless the course is Fine Art or Sociology where films or slides are of intrinsic value, the use of such visual aids promotes an apathetic attitude.

Montreal Aristocrat

Massey Hall

The Montreal Philharmonic Orchestra, an assembly of eighty over-enthusiastic musicians, ably directed by Pierre Monteux, presented an ambitious programme at Massey Hall last night. M. Monteux must be included amongst the aristocrats of conductors. He produced fine music from average material. Throughout the concert there was a struggle between the orchestra and the leader, the masterly conductor bravely trying to moderate the zeal of his men.

The concert opened with Beethoven's Leonora Overture No. 3, the performance of which might be best regarded as a "warmer-upper." The orchestra reached their crowning achievement with Elgar's masterpiece, the Enigma Variations. They played the opening as if the work were a concession by our French Canadian brethren to British Toronto; but they were soon taken in hand by M. Monteux, whose interpretation of the famous Nimrod Variations was subtle, yet dynamic. Few conductors could produce a similar effect, even with better orchestras. The laboriously brilliant finale of this work, supposedly a character sketch of Elgar himself, lowers the general standard of the composition. It is difficult to suppose that the composer could have thought of himself in so banal a manner.

The concert-master of the orchestra, Maurice

Cat Wages War Against Kitten

BURPLE

"This kitten is getting out of hand," said Champus Cat as she pawed over the last two issues of The Varsity. "I bring him along especially for the small issues so now he tries to do me out of a job. But the Cat will show him who's the boss around here."

"Hand me an aspirin and a coke, quick," she snarled at Etaoin Shrdlu. "Take this down for the editors. You can call it 'My Night'." With this the Cat laughed maliciously and pranced around the Press with the asperin-coke clenched tightly in her paw.

"If any living is going to be done around here, I'll do it. Who discovered that arch-fiend 'Q'? Who had five kittens in 1922? Who, I ask you, who?" "The kitten hasn't the capacity that I have," she said, gulping down her drugged coke. Etaoin Shrdlu, bored with it all, slumped into a dazed stupor and slipped to the floor. So the Cat calmly took over the gargantuan linotype machine. Playfully executing a neat "kitten on the keys" routine in $ minor, she dumped the remaining coke into the bubbling lead on the side of the machine.

With a convulsive shudder the linotype machine started the night staff with a mighty BURP!

"Not only is the kitten hard to manage these days," groaned the tired Cat, "but just look at this monster. It's getting far too independent."

"Oyoguelinnylead, catwhodoyouthinkyouareanyhow? you've been around much too long and besides you can't write exquisite poetry like your talented offspring, so there!"

"Tis true, I guess," sobbed the Cat. "Everybody loves a kitten. But," here she stopped and faced the night staff with a triumphant leer between her whiskers. "I quote from O. Gee Gnash—'The trouble with a kitten is that, Eventually it becomes a cat.'"

So Champus stalked out of the Press, nose in the air, leaving the linotype burbling silently, unaccustomed as it was to public burping.

Tiddywee,

let's go places

Plumbers, whether they belong to the C.I.O. or A.F. of L., are advised to enter the Midtown this week with some trepidation, prepared to find that their noble profession has gone to pot.

For here, Bud Abbot and Lou Costello (not to be confused with Olsen and Johnson, Laurel and Hardy, Weber and Fields or the Bobsey Twins) have apprenticed themselves to this respectable old craft, and commence to reveal, in "In Society," that the ability to solder a leaky pipe is not far removed from the talent of playing a saxophone with a jazz band.

By some twist of fate and the script, these two humble artisans, commonly referred to in movie columns as "zanies," whatever that is, manage to wander in their own effete fashion, from dripping faucets to the swing band of Will Osborne, who, as any astute hepcat will inform you, never drips, and who always appears in grade F movies like this one.

If you're wondering what happened to the two boys, they wind up hanging from an extension ladder on a fire truck.

Better they should have retired after "Buck Privates."

Junior School Victors, 12-0 In Defeating Junior Meds

Nord Scores Good Touch After
50-yard Gallop from School
End Run

McREYNOLDS STARS

Junior School played a great game of football yesterday afternoon at Varsity Stadium and defeated Junior Meds 12-0. Both teams played hard, steady football throughout and they provided a splendid performance, regardless of School's decided edge in the play.

Walter Sharpe, School's manager, should be congratulated on the fine team he has turned out. Offensively, School looked very strong. Their timing looked very smooth and their blocking on their end runs enabled the backfield to romp for good gains. School played well defensively, too, especially in their tackling. Time and time again Boyd and Hennessy, School's ends, went in to bust up Meds' plays, especially on the kicks.

The scoring opened in the first quarter when McReynolds of School plunged over the line from the Meds' twelve-yard line after he had led the attack from midfield. The convert was good. After the touch Meds tightened up somewhat and it was not until well into the second quarter that Nord of School dashed around the end for an unconverted touchdown on a spectacular run of fifty yards. The score at the end of the half read: Jr. School, 12; Jr. Meds, 0.

During the second half, Jr. Meds came to life to halt the School attack. In the third quarter School recovered a Meds' fumble on the Meds thirty-yard line. However, Meds provided a stone-wall defence and School kicked to the deadline for a single point.

Jr. S.P.S.: Ballou, Boyd, Brown, Cameron, Daniels, Francis, Glenn, Godfrey, Hennessy, McClymont, McReynolds, Nord, Rumney, Sandler, Smith, Todd, Volpe.

Jr. Meds: Horwick, Rota, Pinn, Cochran, Benny Cross, Fyfe, Mullen, Johnston, Newhouse, Marotta, Coons, Sanders, Trusler, Super, Climis, Schofield, Litman, Paul, Tenhunen.

S.P.S. Nose Out Vic In Lacrosse Tilt, Chalk Up 6-5 Score

S.P.S. III nosed out Vic 6-5 in the opening game of Group II lacrosse yesterday. The Schoolmen scored three quick goals in the first five minutes of play before Vic could get organized, and held off a Vic rally to lead 4-3 at half-time. Vic went ahead 5-4 in the third period but two last-period goals by School gave them the game.

Cooper and Tamblin starred for S.P.S. Fullerton and Pearce scored all the Vic goals.

Vic: Scott, Gingell, Campbell, Fullerton, Staples, Cowan, Pearce, Hart.

S.P.S. III: Tamblin, Patterson, Anderson, Mitchell, Kozak, Brown, Craibbe, Cooper, Pickard.

Meds, S.P.S. Clash In 2-2 Soccer Deadlock

Meds I and S.P.S. I played to a 2-2 deadlock on the back campus last night in a hard-fought soccer tilt. Meds got both their goals in the first half to lead 2-0 as they changed ends, but School came back strongly to score two of their own in the final half and earn a tie.

Chang and Antoni were Meds' scorers, while Dealiam and Mayne got the goals for S.P.S.

Meds I: Fyfe, Mikaido, Spooner, Wilford, Strands, Shinobu, Harrison, Gibson, Chang, Allen, Antoni, and Bell-irving.

S.P.S. I: Allan, Dixon, Erlich, Kaufman, Robinson, Denham, Mayne, Adams, Stoitcheff, Ahujah, and Murphy.

University Symphony To Hold Spring Concert

The University Symphony Orchestra will play Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony" in its annual concert to be held some time in the spring, announced George Armbrust last night. Another number will be a piano or violin concerto with a soloist. The concert is to be held in Convocation Hall.

As regards the vacancies in the orchestra, Armbrust has announced that every instrument but the clarinet is needed, particularly the bassoon and the viola. The orchestra has placed its quota at 75 members.

Hanus Gruber, the associate conductor, is in army training at present, and his place has been filled by George Hurst.

YOUR INTRAMURAL SPORTS COMMITTEE

We dedicate this space today to the enlightenment of those of you who do not know anything about your hard-working Intramural Sports Committee. This democratic body meets in Hart House every week to discuss and effectively deal with the problems arising out of the whole Intramural setup of sports activities on the campus.

Our present Intramural sport system is not due to the War. The idea was initiated first in 1894 when Sir William Mulock donated his cup to the winner of the rugby club. The whole Intramural Organization grew out of the banding together of these faculty club groups as more sports were developed and added as time went on. It was essentially organized to help to develop material for the Varsity teams entered in the Intercollegiate Leagues in the various sports.

Each sport was set up as a club and had its own student executive. The President of the club was the official representative to The Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union accompanied by a senior member of the Athletic Directorate of the University. The vice-president ran the Interfaculty sport with assistance from a managing committee chosen by the faculties themselves.

In 1936 the organization was changed by the addition of The Intramural Sports Committee. This was composed of the presidents of the various faculty athletic associations with Mac McCutcheon, the Supervisor of Athletics, as their advisor. Each faculty can now choose their representative however they please but only one representative is admitted from the faculty. Here the problems of each one are considered by the whole body where formerly these problems went directly to the Athletic Directorate of the University.

The competing colleges and faculties donated a trophy named in honour of T. A. Reed and The Intramural Sports Committee established a point system to be in effect all year by which it was won. They thus founded something which was lacking heretofore; an incentive that gave all faculties an interest in Intramural Athletics. It was especially meant to give the small faculties a better chance to get an even break in this, and has worked well along this line.

Many problems presented themselves in the point division. Registration in the various faculties fluctuated from School's 900 to Forestry's 52, but the four large faculties had won ten times as many championships as the five small ones over a period from 1920 to 1936. However they fell into three natural groups as to registration, and these were designated as A, B and C. So a point system was set up under the headings of teams and individuals. Team points were awarded for entry, winning games, winning groups, finalists, and championships. Individual sports receive points for entry, winning events, winning additional rounds, finalists and championships. Point penalties are also levied for not living up to rules and regulations in athletics. Default is the one most frequently enforced.

The difficulty of the operation of this committee in wartime can only be realized by those who have a knowledge of the sport setup. The fluctuation in registration of the faculties necessitates changes quite often. But The Intramural Sports Committee is always on the job to see that rulings are passed and amended to endeavor to make a fairer system for the future and you may rest assured that this future is in good hands.

DID YOU KNOW

That The Rugby playoffs this year will find the top two teams from Group I and one team from each of the other two groups in the semi-finals. The team finishing first in Group I will play the leader of Group II while that in second place will come up against the winner of Group III. Seems that this was misunderstood by some people. The final brings together the two winners.

There are Water Polo classes every Tuesday and Thursday at 4:00 in the Hart House pool for those who are interested in learning the game. There is also instruction in Speed Swimming at these times. Here's a good chance to get some first-class teaching in these two sports. It's something new offered by The Athletic Wing for your benefit.

That there's a Freshman Boxing and Wrestling Tournament coming up in the future. This is entirely independent of the Junior and Senior meets. You can turn out for instruction in these activities and get into shape if you so desire as there are regular classes in them every week.

"The Sportswoman"

By Peggy Wallace

In this day of woman—power shortage in the field of basketball coaching some interesting things have been happening to the basketball schedules. It seems that certain gals are both playing and coaching much to the dismay of Lois Dowson who arranged the schedules. Everything seems to have been arranged and chaos averted by various teams wheeling, cajoling, bullying and bribing other teams to change practise hours with them. We shudder to think what will happen though if a gal playing on one team and coaching another should find said teams meeting in the finals!!

OUR COMMON ERRORS

Scouting around to practises and talking to various coaches has proven very enlightening. We basketball players as a group make many mistakes and unfortunately we make them over and over again. Here is a list compiled by our groaning coaches which should be taken to heart before the season's games get underway:

1. Get in the best physical condition and stay there.
2. Learn all plays and formations after each practise and have them well in mind the next time you step on the floor.
3. Gauge the speed of your passes by first, passing in front of your receiver and second, by passing just before the defensive player reaches you.
4. Break quickly for an open space.
5. Cross in front of an opponent whenever possible thus blocking for a team mate.
6. Keep between your forward and the basket.
7. Watch the ball and your opponent.
8. Stay awake and on your toes. Remember that to relax for a second may cost you a basket.
9. When you find it necessary to jump—get off the floor—as far up as you can. Many a player has lost the ball through sheer laziness. Well gals, those are suggestions from our coaches which will help us all to play better basketball without giving away any trade secrets.

the scene of which is set in Paris. The Americans go there to live."

"In the study of Paris, James makes it the centre of an ethical drama rather than a centre of seduction. His description has the essence of Renouir's effects in the exquisite play of light around his subjects," continued Prof. Matthiessen.

Discussing James' theory of his art, Prof. Matthiessen said that after 1895 the author experienced a great upsurge of vitality, showing a growing conviction of the supreme importance of the subject. "It all comes back to reflection," the notebooks record, and a real attempt "to live in a world of creation."

undistinguished creative faculty. Even the violinistic calisthenics have been better utilized by other composers.

The major work was Berlioz' Symphonic Fantastique, at any time a massive enterprise and ambitious undertaking. The March to the Gallows was, as always, the piece de resistance and with M. Montoux's distinguished interpretation, more striking than usual. During the Waltz, the idée fixe stood out apart from the rest, instead of being interwoven into the fabric of the music. But all in all, the performance was admirable.

It is a reflection on musical Toronto that such a fine conductor as M. Montoux should have to play to a half-empty house. Even under these disheartening circumstances, the ovation was one of the loudest heard in Massey Hall for a long time. Rarely do we have the opportunity of hearing an artist of such high calibre. Those who missed the concert may well regret it.

The scheduled outdoor track meets for the fall ended yesterday afternoon with the running-off of the relay races held: the 400 yd., 880 yd., one mile two miles, and medley relays. Seven faculties and colleges placed in the five races, Meds dominating the field with five firsts.

The Meds trackmen have really put on a fine show this fall, copping the junior and the relay meets, while School took the senior meet. To seven Medsmen—Antoni, Fielding, Lewis, Milford, Schofield, Mowbray and James—goes all the credit for yesterday's clean sweep.

The faculty standings were as follows: Meds, 25 pts.; Vic and Trin, with 6 pts. each; S.P.S., 3 pts.; and St. Mike's, U.C. and Enman, with one point each. The individual race results are as follows:

440 yards—46.8 secs.—Meds, Vic, Trin.
880 yards—138.2 secs.—Meds, Vic, Enman.

One mile—3:44.5—Meds, S.P.S., Trin.

Two miles—8:56.3—Meds, St. Mike's, Trin.

Medley—3:56.9—Meds, Trin., U.C.

The runners of the three top faculties are as follows:

Meds—Antoni, Fielding, Lewis, Milford, Schofield, Mowbray, James.

Trinity—Burgess, Klachn, Bolté, Goering, Weson, Stock, Box.

Victoria—Hart, Kingdon, Finlay, Hiki.

W. E. Wickenden, Author, To Address S.P.S. Dinner

President of Case School of Applied Science Speaker at 55th Annual School Dinner. Thursday, November 2

ENGINEER-EDUCATIONIST

William E. Wickenden, President of Case School of Applied Science, will be the guest speaker, Thursday, Nov. 2, at the 55th Annual School Dinner.

A leader in engineering educational thought, Mr. Wickenden in 1935 was awarded the Lamm Medal by the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education. Many of his speeches have been published, one of which is "The Second Mile," a study on the social relations and responsibilities of the engineer. Copies of this address were printed by the Engineering Institute of Canada and every graduating engineer last year received a copy.

He is an active member on the Engineers' Council for Professional Development, whose objectives are the co-ordination and promotion of efforts to raise the standards of engineering education and practice. This society is an overall organization which assists the leading engineering societies on the continent.

At present, Mr. Wickenden is writing, for the E.C.P.D., a manual for the vocational guidance and advising of young engineers after graduation to fit them for the profession. This manual will be comparable to that issued by the Engineering Institute of Canada as a guide to young men entering engineering.

Perhaps his greatest contribution to the advancement of engineering is the Investigation of Engineering Education which he directed for the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education.

On completion of this investigation in 1929 he was elected president of Case School of Applied Science, a post he has held since.

Professor H. McLuhan Speaker at St. Mike's

Herbert M. McLuhan, visiting lecturer at Assumption College in the University of Western Ontario, was the speaker at a meeting of the staff and students of St. Michael's College, given last night, to commemorate the centennial anniversary of the birth of the Jesuit poet, Gerard Manley Hopkins.

Professor McLuhan, who is a graduate of the University of Manitoba and of Cambridge, is the author of "Dagwood's America," a discussion of the decline of the masculine role in society.

Gerard Hopkins, whose work Doctor McLuhan discussed, was an English poet of the last century. Dr. Luhan said his work was first published by Robert Bridges in 1918, after his death, and was ignored by the reading public for a considerable time. In 1926, after a review of his work had appeared in "Dial" magazine, it began to acquire a popularity which has steadily increased to this day, said the speaker.

Hopkins, according to Professor McLuhan, was a "plenary poet" who continually tried to get away from the tendency prevalent at the time to hypnotic verse which had beautiful musical effects but which did not sharpen the awareness of the reader.

Professor McLuhan traced the development of Hopkins' personality, as shown in his work, by reading selections taken from his work at various periods in his life, and showed his unusual use of alliteration both to minimize the effect of his words and to add "punch" to his lines.

He went on to say that Hopkins possessed wit in the classical sense of the word. That is, he had the ability to produce an extraordinary combination of two or more emotions in one verse, explained Dr. McLuhan.

Dr. McLuhan concluded by saying that Hopkins typified the reappearance of the Catholic tradition in thought and in feeling in English literature.

J. M. MacDOWELL, Lt.

hither and yon with kaye young

First of all, we must frankly admit that writing a Hither is a unique experience for us. Just what happens to Hither writers the day after? There are so many people to blackmail!

This column just couldn't be a Hither without at least one story about an absent-minded professor. It concerns a rather youngish one who, when he lost his pen for the second time in a week, just couldn't tell his wife. So he wrote for months 'n months in pencil until she finally noticed.

"I've looked all over the place for it," he cried, defensively. And then she took it out of the other pocket of the vest he'd been tearing all the time.

We are beginning to think that life can be almost as horribly complicated for graduates as for undergraduates in this great University. Take, for example, the M.A. student who went to a high-brow sort of concert with some members of her staff. After the concert this puritanical babe somehow found herself separated from her professional escorts. She made her way to the locked car, where she waited, bravely ignoring the seamy environment and dubious characters round about. Finally a dark mysterious man loomed in sight and put his hand possessively on her shoulder. "Are you alone, my dear?" he droned softly. After squelching him most spiritedly, she discovered he was the stalwart husband of the head of her department.

As everybody knows, one overhears all sorts of things one is not supposed to overhear, especially on street cars. In fact, some things are best not heard at all. Picture the scores of green-gilled laymen, stuffed into a Bloor car one rush hour, who had to listen to the following:

Sedate young man in R.C.A.M.C. uniform to an apparent upset of the faculty: "Aw, there's nothing to it. An actual surgical operation is just like working on a stiff. The only difference is, everything's running."

The snappiest reply we have heard for a long time came from a weary little junior babe who had at long last become thoroughly bored with the same old line she'd been listening to ever since '42. The conversation went something like this:

He, ecstatically: "You dance like a zephyr."

She, brightly: "Could you mean a heater?"

Little sisters can be very embarrassing at times, they tell us. A certain Forestry friend of ours seems to have been especially beset with this type of plague. In fact, the kid had the most annoying habit of wanting to play horse on people's feet.

One evening this Forestry Joe was entertaining a most sophisticated young lady friend, and sis was up to her usual high style. It was all right as long as Joe's foot was horsey, except that the game went on for hours 'n hours. The awful climax came when the brat left him, and, pointing to the bearded co-ed's feet, hollered, "Me wanta ride on beeg horsey."

And lastly, let us return to good old initiation days, when a lot of people must have had a lot of suspicions concerning the manliness of U.C. freshmen.

It seems that said freshmen were forced to go around for weeks, on street cars and everything, smelling fragrantly of primrose perfume. Actually it was not their choice at all. But some extra cruel Vic Juniors some-how-or-other managed to douche the U.C. with an extra odiferous brand of the liquid, and return them via the Royal College garbage cans. And all the time the freshmen blamed innocent U.C. sophomores!

Hold Nominations At M & P Meeting

At the meeting of the Maths and Physics Society, held yesterday afternoon, nominations were held for the position of first year representatives. Beth Leach, Nancy Rae and Michael Beer were named. Beer was elected in absentia.

During the meeting it was announced that girls from Household Economics would attend the forthcoming M. and P. party. It was also announced that at the next meeting Dr. H. S. M. Coxeter would speak on "The Nine Solids."

Dr. C. Barnes, Assistant Professor of Physics, spoke on disc recording, describing methods of manufacture, operational theory, and the limitations of records, with particular emphasis on the last-named. "At present," he said, "phonograph records are not worth bothering about."

THE ANDREWS SISTERS

The Andrews Sisters, Maxene, Patty and LaVern, will present in person a night of popular music, assisted by Thomas Richner, pianist, Mary Becker, violinist, Marie Nash, mezzo-soprano, and The Andrews Sisters' All-Star Orchestra in the Maple Leaf Gardens on Monday, Oct. 30.

It was their singing of "Bei Mir Bist Du Schoon" that skyrocketed this sensational trio to fame. Since then more than fifteen million of their records have been sold. Hailed as "the greatest singing act in the world," they made smash hits of "Beer Barrel Polka," "Apple Blossom Time" and such boogie woogie as "Beat Me Daddy." After a national tour and after being featured on national radio programmes with Phil Baker, Glenn Miller, Edgar Bergen and Benny Goodman, they went to Hollywood to make "Buck Private"—another smashing success.

They have just finished their twelfth musical film, "Swingtime for Johnnie," and other recent pictures are "Moonlight and Cactus" and "Three Cheers for the Boys." Universal's million dollar musical extravaganza. Between pictures they establish house records in the largest auditoriums.

Supporting these singing stars will be the new keyboard sensation, Thomas Richner, whose Town Hall recital in New York received highest acclaim; Mary Becker, distinguished violinist; Marie Nash, famous mezzo-soprano, and The Andrews Sisters' All-Star Orchestra.

school at Trois Pistolets, and the agitation for a common history text indicated an interest in remedying these differences. While separation would spell ruin for both, she said that the country was not likely to split because of the innate conservatism of the people, the tendency to conciliation, and the fact that there was no alternative solution.

The final speaker for the negative, Jim Younger, III Pass, spoke of the rabid nationalism illustrated by the Jacques Cartier group. Although this group is small, it is a vocal group which is flaming the indifference of Ontario people into dislike, said Younger. If bilingualism was introduced, he said, American culture would permeate the nation by sheer weight of numbers.

After a debate, the House voted to uphold the motion.

James' 'Wings of the Dove' Symbol of Life Denied Alexander Lecturer States

Professor F. O. Matthiessen of Harvard Continues the James' Discussion from a Biographical Standard

NOVELIST OF CONSCIENCE

Professor F. O. Matthiessen of Harvard University gave the second Alexander Lecture on the Major Period of Henry James yesterday afternoon in Hart House Theatre. The topic of the discussion was James' novel, "The Wings of the Dove."

Professor Matthiessen described James as a realistic writer who rarely had occasion to revert back many years for his plots and who never went further back than the beginning of the nineteenth century.

His symbols, as represented in many of his novels' titles, were introduced not in the beginning of the story but only in the final development of the theme; and his stories were usually characterized by a feeling of loss, frustration and lack of fulfillment.

Because he deemed to draw on his conscience for his plots and characters, these latter were invariably orphans, since many of James' own family were orphaned at an early age in life. He felt that such circumstances heightened the pathos of the plots.

Frequently, too, James imitated Shakespeare in his use of conflict in Nature's forces to accentuate the drama of a scene.

The central figure of the novel and the person whom the symbolic title represents is the heroine, Millie Teale, whose tragic story is the personification of James' cousin, Minnie Temple. The author was deeply devoted to the cousin, whose life was ended at the age of twenty-four when she died of pulmonary tuberculosis.

"The Wings of the Dove," according to Professor Matthiessen, is the account of the tragedy of Minnie Temple and Henry James. Poe described it as "the death of a beautiful woman."

Minnie Temple was a constant source of inspiration to the author in his writings and he personified her in several of his novels, but he most aptly represented her in "The Wings of the Dove." He later said that he regarded her "as the supreme case of life as life."

On Thursday Professor Matthiessen will lecture on "The Golden Bowl" and the series will be concluded on Friday afternoon with a discussion on "The Ivory Tower."

McGill Captures CUP Elections

Kingston, Oct. 26 (CUP)—In the results of the Canadian University Press (C.U.P.) elections it was stated that the McGill Daily will succeed the Queen's Journal as National President for the following year. The Varsity held that position for the two years before the Queen's Journal.

Joan Connor, C.U.P. editor of the Queen's Journal, in releasing the results also announced the regional presidents: for the Maritimes will be the University of New Brunswick Brunswickian; for Ontario and Quebec will be The Varsity; and for Western Canada will be the University of British Columbia's Ubsysee.

At the National Conference in Toronto last year it was decided that the Queen's Journal should be the C.U.P. permanent secretary.

Vic S.C.M. Study Group Leadership

At yesterday's meeting of the Victoria College S.C.M. Leadership Group, President Jack Patterson outlined the aims of the group. "We have four main aims," he said. "To study the effect of recreation on individual and community life; to acquire leadership ability in organized recreation; to suggest ways and means of making recreation a part of religious group activities; and to study co-operative principles to see if recreation can be organized co-operatively."

With this end in view, a group of students interested in recreational leadership has been organized, and holds regular meetings. At these meetings leadership training is given, and pertinent questions are discussed. The training to be had will be available to persons who hope to lead recreation periods in any group.

The first few minutes of yesterday's meeting were devoted to a discussion of a Canadian Youth Commission pamphlet on recreation. The nature, necessity, and answers to several questions asked by the Canadian Youth Commission were decided upon.

Following this, a few "ice-breaking" games for group use were demonstrated, and a talk was given by the president on their use. He suggested that if the recreational leaders were to start scrap books containing likely games for group use they would find it invaluable. He showed the group a collection of over 300 games kept in an index file which he had collected over a period of years.

Talk on Load Frequency For Electrical Engineers

Mr. C. K. Duff, Meter Engineer of the Operating Department of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, will speak at 8:15 tonight at the bi-monthly meeting of the Toronto section of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, in Room 21 of the Electrical Building.

His talk on Load Frequency and Time Control of Interconnected Systems will be illustrated with lantern slides. He will outline the basic principles and the application of various types of control in the major interconnections in both Canada and the United States.

Mr. Duff has done research work concerning speed and frequency, in association with Professor H. W. Price.

Undergraduates and anyone interested in the subject are welcome to attend, said Mr. J. F. Moore, secretary of the Toronto group.

Proceeding the meeting, there will be a discussion in the Music Room, Hart House, of the newly organized Federation of Employee Engineers.

Record Hour

The record programme held daily in the Women's Common Room at U.C. is open to all students of every faculty and college.

Today's selections are as follows:

Haydn—Symphony No. 100 (Military)
Moussorgsky—Pictures at an Exhibition

Labour Club Changes Name

A programme of talks and discussions on current problems and current affairs was planned in broad outline by the Students' Labour Club at its initial meeting last night at Wymilwood.

It was voted to change the name of the club to "Forum on Current Affairs" to indicate the broad scope of the club's activity, and a temporary executive was elected.

Announcements of the next meeting of the club will be made in the very near future.

Dominican Consul Guest Speaker

The programme at the Spanish Club tonight at the Women's Union will consist of a talk by Senor Garcia, da Costa's demonstration of the rumba, and the election of the First Year representatives. Refreshments and dancing will follow.

Senor Garcia, the Dominican consul, is Dominican-born of Spanish parents. He attended the University of San Domingo, graduating in Civil Engineering. Following this he taught Mathematics and History (which he believes are intrinsically related) in San Domingo until his appointment here two and a half years ago.

Senor Garcia, now 46, says he is anxious to promote good-relations between Latin America and Canada. He says: "Canada needs South America now. Her markets are open to any Canadian interest; and therein lies a great future." This relationship should begin in the University Spanish Club, he believes, and in time we may be able to establish relations between universities in South America and the University of Toronto. This will tend to broaden our knowledge of each other.

The President of the Dominican Republic, Senor Garcia told The Varsity in a personal interview yesterday, has offered to send to the students of the University of Toronto a sample set of Dominican books, which he hopes will help us understand the civilization to the south.

Senor Garcia said that he might deliver his talk in Spanish and that the subject probably would be about the importance of the Varsity Spanish Club in Latin-Canadian relations.

NEWSFRONTS

Pearl Harbor—Two Jap fleets were severely defeated near the Philippines; one force was sunk or damaged, the other badly shattered and fled. A third force is now engaged south of Formosa, with probable Jap losses.

Western Front—The British 2nd Army has advanced to near Tilburg, while Canadians on the west advance south of the Scheldt Estuary and north of Antwerp. The enemy is rumoured to be evacuating S.W. Holland.

Russia—Red Army troops invaded Norway, capturing Kirkenes on the Barents Sea. Conquest of Transylvania is complete, and a new offensive is developing in N. Poland.

Italy—Enemy forces are retreating before 8th Army, which has gained over 3 miles.

Aerial—Attacks on oil centres in the Ruhr were made yesterday, in spite of bad weather.

Spain—Another civil war is reported imminent. Over 40,000 German soldiers escaped from France are said to be with Franco.

London—Churchill states unconditional surrender is still the policy of the Government.

Writers Meet For Undergrad

A meeting of all those interested in writing for The Undergraduate, the University College magazine, will be held today in The Varsity Office at 3:45. It was announced last night.

"This year The Undergraduate will offer prizes for the best short story, the best Plato dialogues or essays, and the best poetry," said Betsy Moshough and Frank Rasky, co-editors of the magazine.

"It is our aim to make The Undergraduate as representative of U.C. students' thought as possible," they said.

All material may be handed in at The Undergraduate office in University College. The editors, in combination with members of the U.C. Lit. and W.U.A., will select the contents for the issue, which will appear some time in February.

The deadline is the 15th of January. A managerial board and editorial staff will be chosen at the meeting today.

New Style Tennis Starts Wednesday

By way of something new on the Toronto campus, a round-robin tennis tournament is being introduced next Wednesday by Ruth Margeson and Brownie Young, both of U.C. Afterwards, the participants will adjourn to the banquet room at Diana Sweets for a chicken dinner and a dance.

Starting at 2:30 p.m., on the St. Hilda's courts, a mixed doubles round-robin match will be started, lasting until about 5 p.m.

Students of all faculties and colleges are invited to attend, for this tournament will give everyone, including those who did not star in the separate men's and women's, an equal opportunity of winning.

Each participant will be given a numbered tally upon arriving, which will pair the men up with the women. After every fifteen minutes of play, each one gets a new partner, and the number of winning games he or she has played in the last fifteen minutes are recorded. Thus poor players are paired with good players and are just as likely to win games as anyone else. At the end of the meet the tally cards will be turned in and prizes are to be awarded to the top man and the top woman.

All faculty tennis representatives are urged to get in touch with Ruth Margeson, MI 2375, or Brownie Young, MI 5611, immediately since all entries and admission fees must be in by next Monday. In the event of bad weather, the banquet and the dance will be held as scheduled, on Wednesday, Nov. 1, and the tournament will be postponed.

R.A.F. Squadron Leader Will Address V.C.F.

Squadron Leader Howard Guinness, R.A.F. Chaplain, will address a V.C.F. meeting today in Room III, Anatomy Building, at 12:30.

An ordained Anglican minister from London University, Dr. Guinness has his M.D. from St. Bartholomew's College. He is a grandson of Hudson Taylor, famous founder of the China Inland Mission. Long interested in student work, Dr. Guinness is well known to the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship, having pioneered that organization in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and India.

This meeting will take the place of the V.C.F.'s regular missionary session. Luncheon may be eaten, and will be available.

VARSITY REPORTERS

There will be a news lecture for all Varsity reporters at 12:30 p.m. today in Room 37 U.C.

Candlelight Service For U.C. Freshies

The University College Seniors formally initiated the Freshies in an impressive candlelight service last night at the Women's Union. The evening began with a series of skits prepared by the first year girls and dealing with a variety of popular campus topics—from blind dates to reducing.

After an hour of skits the Freshies filed downstairs through a long line of gownned Seniors and were officially welcomed into the University College by the president of the W.U.A., Rose Rabkin. Each Freshie lighted her candle from that of her Senior and gave an oath of allegiance to the College.

Rose Rabkin stated that "honour to the University brings honour to all," and went on to say that it was equally true that "discredit to one brings discredit to all. Every Freshie should strive to justify her presence at University at this time by honest endeavour." After the Freshies had signed the enrolment book refreshments were served.

C.C.F. Business Meeting To Be Held Tonight

Tonight at eight o'clock in Women's Union there will be a short business meeting of the University C.C.F. Club. Officers for the year will be elected and plans for the year's activities will be discussed.

Mr. Ted Davidson, member of the Toronto C.C.F. council, will be the chairman and will give an address on the functions of the club and will discuss the constitution.

According to Don Millard, chairman of the Summer Organizing Committee, plans for the year are as yet very vague. However, informal study groups have been proposed and four or five large meetings are hoped for during the year.

Although only members can vote, all are welcome.

Well-Known Graduates From U.C. Parliament

The first debate of the University College Parliamentary Debating Club will be held on Friday, Nov. 3, at 4:00 p.m. in the Junior Common Room, Ben Orenstein, Literary Director, announced today.

The first meeting of the club will follow the ritual of the opening of Parliament and Principal Sidney Smith will deliver the speech from the throne in his capacity as Governor-General of the senior debating society.

The dusty minute books of the U.C. Lit. reveals some of the historic background upon which the present Parliamentary Club has developed. The first mention of the U.C. Parliamentary Debating Club is to be found in the minutes of the 73rd meeting held in the session of 1931-32, when a committee was appointed to organize the club, and by the 77th meeting sufficient enthusiasm and support had been shown so as to have regular parliamentary sessions. The club was officially integrated into the structure of the Literary and Athletic Society at the 84th meeting and has now come to be one of the most significant functions of the Lit.

A name frequently appearing in the Lit. minutes of this period was that of S. M. Hermant. Mr. Hermant gave some insight into the political machinations of the origin of the Parliamentary

Dr. Pratt, whose Latest Volume of "Collected Poems" is Just Out, Discusses Development of His Poetic Technique

PREFERS HEROIC THEMES

By Frank Rasky ...

"Naturally," said Prof. E. J. Pratt, as he turned another page of his newly published "Collected Poems," "it's nice to have my 12 volumes of poetry put between two covers. But it's not a sense of satisfaction I feel. It's a sense of relief. Because I am thankful that I'm able to exclude from this book so much poor stuff I've written."

Dr. Pratt, one of Canada's finest modern poets, sat back comfortably in the wicker armchair in his study at Victoria College, where he is Professor in English, and thumbed through a few more pages. He read aloud some of the titles.

"Brother!," he said. "Dunkirk. Newfoundland. The Cachalot. Yes, I enjoyed writing them, and perhaps some of them are fair. But at the same time I enjoyed writing others, and even thought that they were crackerjack, but they turned out to be not good at all—in fact, terrible."

To overcome his natural bias towards his works, it's his practice to write a poem and then hide it in a drawer for a month. If after this period the piece seems still adequate, then it is retained.

When 16, he used to participate in poetry-writing competitions with his friends. They indulged in the old-time game in which one line of poetry is written by one of a group. Then the second in the group wrote a line to rhyme with that line, until a complete poem was the result.

"Naturally," says Prof. Pratt, "you may well imagine what sort of stuff we turned out."

He became inclined seriously toward writing poetry only in 1911, when he graduated from the University here with a Ph.D. He became lecturer in the University's Faculty of Psychology for five years—but "I was never very adept with my hands," he recalls, "I stumbled about with photographic plates

Club. "The main force behind the demand for the club came from Richard Bell. Politics and parliamentary speaking were his main interest during his undergraduate days, and it is largely due to his efforts that such high standards of debating were established in U.C. Since graduation, Bell has completed a course at Osgoode Hall and has served as secretary to leaders of the Conservative Party, including such public figures as Matthew, Herridge, Manion, Hanson and at the present time he is the secretary of the Progressive Conservative Party. Other members of the original committee have also won distinction in the field of public service; Tarsis gave up a professorship to serve with Angot; Goddard and Pivnick are now with Canada's fighting services."

Commenting on other men who have come up through the College and gone on to public service and success, Mr. Hermant explained that "there are many others who have found the training gained in the U.C. Parliamentary Debating Club very valuable and among these are Arnold Smith, now a member of the Canadian Embassy in Moscow, and Saul Rae who holds a similar position in Paris."

Mr. Hermant recalled some of the Revival

A rebirth of an old question has come to the fore on the campus lately, taking second place only to the course of the universal struggle. That question is, quite naturally: When will intercollegiate sports return to the University of Toronto? Students here are keenly anticipating the day when the Blue Beavers run onto the gridiron for that initial game with the Redmen of McGill, the Mustangs of Western or the famed Tricolour of Queen's.

The first and only wartime football season left the Yates Trophy, emblematic of Senior Intercollegiate Rugby Championship, in the possession of the University of Western Ontario. The Canadian Intercollegiate Amateur Union ruling of 1940 curtailed further competition. The reason for the order was ostensibly the limitation of travel facilities between the different colleges. Though the Big Four lapsed and all athletic activity ceased, a small number of the staunchest supporters kept hope alive. The majority of the student bodies took the anti-sport regulations for granted.

Hope for an early return of intercollegiate contests was revived when Western organized their Mustangs. Exhibition games with comparatively strong wartime clubs resulted. Certain powers frowned on this so-called violation of the agreement. Not to be outdone, McGill followed suit and progressed one step further by gaining a berth in the Quebec Rugby Football Union. Queen's and Varsity alone carried on. Like the knights of old they upheld their honour. Unlike these ancient heroes they forsook the gale for the sheltered calm of acquiescence.

Under the sheltering shadow of the out-dated ruling, these two noble institutions stood by, and today still stand by while smaller brethren carry their respective colours into the negligible battles on this continent. With men fighting, bleeding and dying in every theatre of war a mere football or hockey game means little. Sports come secondary to the war effort, and rightfully so.

News from the war and diplomatic fronts revive many hopes for the return of intercollegiate sport. Restitution to the pre-war and pre-1940 eras does not sound too far-sighted. While no definite date has been set for the revival, odd bits of information gathered from different authorities lead to the belief that we are emerging from our last year of no intercollegiate competition. If the government should lift its regulations, these plans would materialize. If not, it may be mere wishful thinking.

A short month ago the Universities of Saskatchewan and Alberta scrapped their comparable agreement and are at present in the midst of a series for the intercollegiate championship of Western Canada.

Smaller universities have done it while we remain immobile. Exactly what move the athletic authorities on this campus have made towards exploiting the possibilities of a revival is a closely kept secret. If any investigations were carried on, publication was unwarranted. If none were carried on, the student body should be given the reason. Odd gleanings from authorities are not enough. Now is the time for preparations.

Selection By Scholarships

Last week The Varsity published a list of new scholarships available for University admittance. In 1938 the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported that "Nearly 50,000 students matriculate annually while there are only about 500 awards. Of these, one in a hundred can hope to win assistance. The increase in scholarship interest is obvious.

Such steps are essential, more so at the present time than at any other. There is a crisis in education as in economics and government. The whole tendency of thought in post-war planning contains the basic element of the equality of man. Investigation shows that students of lower income groups obtain higher academic standard than those of upper bracket incomes.

Additional scholarships mean an increase in students who have ability. Unfortunately it does not mean that the number of people who are here because they have nothing else to do will be decreased. Unless the stress on man's equality is balanced by the introduction of more scholarships, compulsory mass education for the majority might be the ultimate result of this line of thought.

Universal education would merely add to the numbers of intellectuals graduating already from university. The little learning which people, who are not interested in education, receive, would indeed be a dangerous thing. Future planning must allow for the education of each person in accordance with his taste and abilities. The full realization of human potentialities must be attained to. One of the sure tests for ascertaining the quality of students is that of scholarship examinations. Then those who are best equipped will have open to them paths leading to leadership positions.

Correspondence

The Editor-in-Chief,
The Varsity.

Dear Madam,

The sympathetic editorial titled "Quo Vadis" in a recent issue of The Varsity deserves outspoken praise and applause. The first movement of the "unfinished" editorial, however, involving the ancient theme of man's disagreement of the fundamental truths, although harmonious and colourful, was a little inconsistent and intolerant, while the second movement, introducing Adler's theme was an exquisite choice by itself, but its connection (if one wanted one) with the beginning was difficult to find.

Any student body, as well as any other group of individuals, consists of those who dream their actions, and those who act their dreams. University undergraduates, in particular, usually swell the ranks of the latter, and therefore it might be expected that 300 different (not necessarily contrary) replies should emerge, as there are 300 means to the end or more likely ends. Thus the problem resolves itself into an enquiring into the end. Is there an end? Is the end Truth? Is there an end for all? Is there an end for each individual and is that end his or her Truth? And so on, question upon question, but none are new.

Far be it from me to answer, believing but not knowing, as I do, that each answer is a part of the answer. But on the contrary, I ask only to be faced, and to face others, with the problematic nature of the thing and the facts (if any). Don't drown my bit of intelligence with pride and prejudice.

Faithfully,

PETER CAHN,

Eaton Auditorium

The widely acclaimed globe-trotting Cherniavsky Brothers—Jan, pianist, and Mischel, cellist—made a return visit to Toronto last night or give an interesting recital of a rather varied character in Eaton Auditorium.

The programme opened with Variations on a theme from Mozart's "The Magic Flute" by Beethoven for cello and piano. This impressive work was attacked with a good Beethovenesque touch, though the cello part seemed to lack clearness in the quick spicicato passages.

In the Bach group which followed, Jan Cherniavsky achieved splendid balance of the parts, and rich tonal contrast. Especially effective were some of the pianissimo passages in the Chaconne.

In the Bach unaccompanied Suite in C major, for cello, Mischel Cherniavsky caught the feeling of easy improvisation in the Prelude whose scale figures are at all times difficult to make dramatic. The well-known and tuneful Bourree was given a light and FLASH!—Aloysius Derdiand Bull of the famous Bull family, arrested late last night in the act of breaking into a China Shop, was arraigned early this morning before Judge Rooten Tooten of the County Squabbles Court.

After the usual formalities of pawing and rubber-hosing, Derdiand took the stand. He was forced to put it back after a wild chase around the corridors. "What do you do for a living?" tooted Rooten.

"I waste my time at the School of Impractical Science," sniffed Derdi as he poked his snout into a lusciously yellow dandelion.

Then Derdi flung the randid plant into a spittoon and exclaimed, "Gimme a (BURRRR) beer, forty of 'em in fact, or I shall die of thirst."

"Shedapp!" yelled Rooten, "or I shall put you among a group of arts men and let them beat you up."

"No! no! not let them!" bellowed Derdi. "Anything but dat!"

Mrs. Lotta Bull, mother of Aloysius, was called up next to give evidence on behalf of his character. As she stomped up to the stand we knew that she was worried about her son for someone had told her earlier that they always shoot a little Bull that breaks into a China Shop.

"What's that you have in your hand, Mr. Bull?" said the judge as he turned from the pretty stenographer to the drooling accused.

"It's a slide-a-rule," murmured Derdi. "We unpractical ones at Skule do not know how to count on our fingers so we have to use this *128 nuisance of a machine."

"Nuff said," quoth Rooten Tooten, as he quickly picked up the toopsee which had blown from his head due to the mad rush of air coming from Aloysius.

"I object!" shrieked Rafferty Zquich, as he pointed to fat Derdi. "Are we going to let all that Bull go out of here Irish free?"

"He must be punished to the full minimum of the law and I demand that penalty."

"No, yer honour," gurgled Wilbur Schnozzle, attorney for the defence. "My client is a skule man and even so I don't think you should hold that against him. I demand his immedejat release from this slaughter-house."

"Good idea," croaked Zquich, "let's send him to the abattoirs."

Following that rash statement, a motley group of undernourished characters rushed into the room waving tattle-tale green stockings and yelling "joikee joikee."

"Saved at last," said Derdi, "my friends done me right. I knew they wouldn't forget me."

"That does it," said Rooty. "I find you guilty in the uth degree and hereby sentence you to—" Then they threw the stinkbomb.

They are still looking for Aloysius. PO TRIN

Butch O'Malley Leads Victoria's Attack. Aided by Backfield Wheeler. Hamilton Saves a Touchdown

FINAL SCORE—18-7

The Scarlet and Gold of Victoria College swept to an 18-7 victory over Trinity in the football game played at the Stadium yesterday afternoon. The score indicated the play fairly well as the lighter Trinity-ites were little match for the heavy charging line from Vic.

Team captain Butch O'Malley led the Vic attack but was handily aided by Wheeler, the backfield, who played a steady if not a spectacular game. Hamilton's kicking was another feature of the game.

Trinity's supporters were given little to cheer about save the luck with which Vic were kept off the score sheet for the first half of the game with the exception of a single. The heavy penalties imposed on the Vic team helped Trinity no little in staving off the Vic attack. Three fifteen-yard penalties, coupled with two offside penalties and a pass-interference judgment, were the extent of the damage in the first half.

A blocked Vic kick resulted in Galpin falling on the loose ball back of the line for a major. The pass convert was weak. Minutes later a long kick by Hamilton could not be run out by Trinity.

Early in the second half Wheeler picked up a short kick and wound up on the seven from where O'Malley found it easy going. Hamilton converted. Vic then fumbled and the ball was kicked downfield towards their goal line. A bit of quick thinking on the part of Hamilton resulted in his kicking the ball over his own line and on past the deadline. The move saved a certain touchdown.

As a Vic kick went through the receiver's arms, McDonald scooped the ball up and scampered over from the twenty-five. Hamilton again converted. A short while later Peterson ploughed over for another major score but too much time was taken in the huddle and the convert was not allowed.

rhythmic treatment; while the lively spirited Gigue gave the impression of "All's well that ends well."

Jan Cherniavsky did his best work in the Chopin group, with brilliancy in the Arpeggio passages.

Contrasting sharply with the strong objectivity of the Back Suite was the intense introspection of the Hebrew Prayer by Bloch. In Mischel Cherniavsky's playing Bloch's music achieves its purpose—that of depicting the Jewish soul. Chopin's Polonaise Brillante for piano and cello ended the programme with a touch of fine showmanship.

VARSITY STADIUM

The home of the defunct Varsity Beavers as well as of countless other Toronto teams including numerous service clubs has been, and continues to be, that athletic field commonly referred to as the Bloor Street Bowl or officially known as Varsity Stadium. This famed field has become renowned throughout the whole of Canada and has become a fixture for the scene of the Dominion football play-offs. Western teams in the past refused to travel east to challenge for the Gray Cup. As a compromise, the eastern members of the C.R.F.U. granted the West their request that all finals be played at the Stadium. Thus, part of the University of Toronto has become a setting for a national event rather than an intercollegiate setting as it was originally intended. It is with pride rather than scorn that we mention this fact.

Up to the year 1898 the front and back camp were the scenes of all athletic competition. Pictures depicting a Varsity-McGill game in front of University College are prized by a number of the older inhabitants of the University. Just before the turn of the century the University athletic authorities founded the Stadium for the playing of all football games. The carefully laid out track, which has fondled thousands of track stars together with a goodly number of British Empire and Olympic headliners, was planned and prepared in 1900 by a Mr. V. E. Henderson who was, at that time, secretary of the Athletic Association.

The start of the twentieth century saw Varsity Stadium as it is today with but a small portion of the present grandstand. In reality the small, little-used grandstand immediately south of the main wooden stands was the original.

The rapid increase in both enrolment and football interest brought about the need for a larger seating capacity. The field was reconstructed in 1911 and the present grandstand was engineered. The concrete stand on the east side of the gridiron was erected in 1924 as it replaced the old wooden seats. The total seating capacity of the bowl today is in the near vicinity of nineteen thousand.

That is but a brief record of the Stadium during the past thirty-five years. The work and foresight of many individuals went into its construction. To these we owe all that is called ours today—Varsity Stadium.

Last Saturday afternoon before the O.R.F.U. football fixture the sections allotted to the students were filled to capacity—all seven hundred of them. Late arrivals were confronted with the problem of slipping over the fence when the long arm of the law was faced the other way or of returning to their domiciles. After a rather hurried conference temporary seats were provided. This move saved the Stadium officials a good many headaches and probably maintained their goodwill in the eyes of the student body.

While on the subject of the Stadium, it brings to mind a short but kind and well-meant note received earlier in the week. The gentleman, who was righteous enough to sign his name, was slightly peeved at the reception offered the Red Cross nurses at the football games. According to the writer, the nurses were forced to stand during the whole game after they had settled their service patients in a comfortable position for watching the game. Why were not chairs provided by someone was the text of the note. Well, to be perfectly honest, we don't know and have less to say about it. All we can do is print this complaint and hope that the proper authorities will notice conditions and take steps to remedy them.

"The Sportswoman"

By Janice Murray

Yesterday we just stopped by to watch the softball game between U.C.A. and Vic A teams, and stayed to watch. The results did not confirm anything except that Vic is a better team than U.C. any way you want to look at it, if you want to look at it. Head of Group A therefore is P.H.E. A team which has won both its scheduled games. The other groups will clarify themselves and will be announced as soon as possible. The winners of Group A are scheduled to play the winners of Group C, and then the winners of that tip-off will encounter the winners of Group C for the championship of the University.

The tennis fans we recommended that one and all should see will be played Friday at 1:30. In case you didn't read this that day or something silly like that, the games will be a return engagement between Marg. Alexander and Dorothy Jane Sanders. We guarantee that it will be good.

In view of the mix-up in the practice schedule of the Basketball at present we would like to suggest that all players on teams check with their representative and see when their practice comes about. We have been asked what was coming off several times and as we know less about what is coming off than anyone on this or any other campus, we are never able to answer any of these questions, which make us feel embarrassed and very, very silly. How would you like to be made feel very, very silly? NO? Then do check with your reps and get it straight.

Most of the coaches at this time in Basketball are players from other teams, and from what we hear they are all mourning that their team, the one they are coaching, is better than the one on which they play. We have been at a couple of practices though and the teams seem to be shaping up quite well. In fact there seems to be a really good series coming up in the near future.

Finally because of a slip-up in the set up of "the woman" yesterday, in that the last paragraph was way off in a single column up in a corner we will tell everyone again that on Monday St. Mike's defeated Vic B team by the magnificent total of 42-2. It seems that the Double Blue girls have spared their feelings a little in that score, but still we hear that it was a good tilt.

Senior Meds Take SPS Knox Wins Soccer Bout In Lacrosse Bout 11-5 Wycliffe Defeated 2-0

Senior Meds swamped Senior S.P.S. by a 11-5 count in a scheduled lacrosse match yesterday afternoon. The game was especially rough throughout and numerous flare-ups occurred as tempers were riled.

Jack Toogood was the outstanding man on the floor as he paced the winners with six goals even though he was closely shadowed. Nakaido was credited with three markers.

Steel, Kealy and Turner were the standout for School who at one time led by a 3-0 score. The close checking of Meds proved too much and from that point the result was never in doubt.

SPORTS NOTICE

U.C. SWIM TEAM

All men who want to swim for the team will meet at Hart House pool at 4:45 p.m. today.

Coach John Marshall's hard fighting Knox eleven defeated an equally valiant Wycliffe team 2-0 yesterday afternoon. The game started slowly, its chief interest being the stellar defensive play of the Wycliffe full-backs, Lyle and McDonald.

However, the second half showed an opening up on the part of both teams and the superior Knox passing offensive made itself felt. About eight minutes after the half, By, the Knox inside left put the leather away for the first tally. Wycliffe pressed hard but the Knox forwards broke away again in a pretty passing play. By, on passes from Cunningham to McKenzie to By, made the score two up for Knox.

The dying moments of the game were the most exciting as a misplay on the part of the Knox full-back awarded Wycliffe a penalty shot. Captain Harris sent in a beautiful kick but made the mistake of aiming at the centre of the net where Goalee Reid saved easily.

SAY WHAT YOU LIKE but a good haircut does something for a girl. Probably the service which first made the name of Antoine famous all over the fashion-wise world was the new technique he developed in Paris, that of shaping heads by means of clever hair-cutting. Operators have been trained into the secret of those Antoine haircuts so that women in various of the world's biggest cities are able to take advantage of the most celebrated hair-cutting method in the world. Phone Holt Renfrew's Antoine Salon for appointment. AD 9441.

"I GOT IT AT FAIRWEATHER'S... it's a honey of a soft rabbit's hair and wool dress in natural beige. It's a 'natural', just the dress for putting on in the morning and wearing all day. Fairweather's are good pickers when it comes to the classic wool dress and are also doing smart things in blouses this year, notably one called the 'Bow' blouse that's designed to be worn either with plain suit or dressy skirt in the evening. Also they've a grand variety of tailored skirt-suits."

THE EVANGELINE SHOPS are busy places these days, what with every smartly dressed woman and girl turning her attention to mix and match costumes. Your nearest Evangeline at 751 Yonge Street is the logical place for gifts too, and now that every canny shopper is on the hue and cry after gift items which may not last until the usual shopping season, it might be a smart idea to jot down a list of the things you plan and have it ready next time you shop the Evangeline Shops for your more staple necessities in jackets, skirts, blouses, lingerie, and so on.

THERE'S PLENTY doing on Northway's Third Floor, where "Fashionland," especially designed for the fashion-minded student, has a collection of the "good idea" crop for campus prestige. Northway's are a pretty big organization and when they set their mind to the business of clothing the college girl they go to town in a large way. Dresses, coats, millinery are all assembled on this one floor so you can match the ensemble in one fitting room. You'll find inspiration plus, in the bright new date dresses and practical woollens, also the news in coats, both in the new Shortie length and regular length, as well as the ultra smart new Coolie style coats.

TO BE NO NOT TO BE... to be dainty and feminine and with a rose-petal complexion or to have that slightly suspicious grubbiness which comes from a skin which has been drinking and retaining too much smoke and soot? One good way to be certain of looking your feminine best is to guard your complexion with a thoroughly reliable cleansing cream. Women everywhere have registered approval of Du Barry Cleansing Cream because it's one of those carefully and conscientiously made products whose makers have spared nothing to achieve perfection.

A DOCTOR FRIEND OF OURS who has returned from the far north, where he had charge of the health of the men in a new wartime mining town, tells us that the only liniment he ordered for the men was Sloan's. Why? Well, he said Sloan's is the best liniment he knew about (a) because it's stronger and (b) because it has greater anesthetic qualities. "As I had to choose between the liniments in ordering, supplies coming in with some difficulty, I chose Sloan's to be safe," he said.

DROP IN to E. F. Springer's very beautiful Fur Salon at 56 Bloor West any time of day and we'll wager you'll stay and chat for a while. It's something more than shopping to shop at E. F. Springer's — there's a pleasant and friendly atmosphere of advice regarding the fur coat question which is as genuine as it is gratifying to meet up with, and which makes shopping the delight it ought to be. E. F. Springer's fur coats are fashion-wise and enduringly beautiful, the type of reliable coat which can only be produced by furriers who make a very definite point of quality.

One bright day last spring the kid sister introduced me to one of her girlfriends. The following conversation took place:

"Where do you go to school?"
"I'm in the forestry."
"Forestry, eh? Are you going to be a grafter?"
Grrrr.

Came June and all good foresters themselves up in the booth, or reasonably close to it. Five of them found themselves working in a Dominion Entomological Laboratory near Sault Ste. Marie.

Came July and three local high school students started working in the same lab. Two of them, only fifteen and sixteen years old, spent much of their time cleaning jelly jars, which had been lived in by bugs of all sizes and shapes.

Then came the pay-off. In cleaning up some matters with the Selective Service, the lads visited the Red-tapers and found that they were officially employed as laboratory technicians.

The Soo again. Late one Sunday night, a forestry soph and a senior were waiting in the car, for two married men, with whom they were to drive some fifty miles north into God's country.

After an acknowledged honk, and a wait of a good ten minutes, the senior finally ups and says to the soph: "Those fellows are taking as long to say goodbye to their wives as if it were their girl-friends."

Reciprocal! In the army show, now overseas, are a young negro and a French-Canadian named DeGagné. One day last month, prior to embarkation, the negro started some healthy belly-laughs by saying: "When we goes to France, ah sticks with DeGagné, but when we goes to Africa, DeGagné sticks with me."

One of the graduates of No. 2 Army course was stationed at a camp in Eastern Ontario. He had a tough sergeant. Witness this:

Pratt . . .

in the laboratory and broke more equipment than my salary could cover." In 1921 he came to the department of English at Victoria College and has remained there since, teaching and writing poetry.

"I like writing heroic themes," the professor said, continuing to turn the pages of his book. "That appeals to my imagination. Particularly do I like writing about the rugged aspects of the Canadian scene, which has always been my forte."

Dr. Pratt, who has twice won the Governor-General's Annual Literary Award for Poetry, does his writing in the summer time. Poems like his 3,000-word Brebeuf, which is his favourite, or verses like Newfoundland Verse were all done at his cottage at Kawartha Lake, Ontario. He writes with a pen, writing and re-writing until the original theme can no longer be distinguished. "It takes time, trouble and persistent work to write poetry," he says. "You would be surprised to learn how many people in high places—and particularly old people—come to me and ask me to read their poetry, which they say they've tossed off in a half-hour."

"They don't understand that poetry is a craft. They have the misconception that it arises from out of the void—inspiration which comes when you bark for it."

"I've often thought," he continued, still shuffling through the blue-covered book, "that developing the talent of writing poetry is like playing golf."

One morning on parade the sergeant said: "Have any of youse guys had any university education?"

There was silence, while a few signified.

"All right, you can start to work, picking up all the cigar butts on the parade grounds. And," he continued, have any the rest of youse guys had any high school education?"

Again silence, while a few more signified.

"All right. You can start to work, picking up all the cigarette butts on the parade grounds."

Everything would have been all right if the sarge hadn't have gone on to say: "Now the rest of youse guys, you ain't had no education at all, you just watch these others, and see if you can't learn something!"

A prescription caught our eye the other day. It read—Miss Dream-face-teaspoonful, three times day, after meals in water.

Does she make a habit of it?

Right back on the campus for this last Hither. It happened last week, at one of the Greek-letter houses, not on St. George Street.

A beautiful "cherry blonde" approached the house, and said to a group of eight or ten men assembled on the porch: "Is this Waldie House?"

"No!" a chorus of eight or ten voices replied. "This is a men's fraternity house."

It seems as if this Freshie wouldn't take No for an answer, for she charged up the steps, dashed into the hall, and proceeded upstairs, where she wheeled into a second-story bedroom.

Seconds later she ran downstairs, her complexion several degrees more so than her hair, and exited, mild loud cries of "We told you so!"

Are they making unbelieving freshies now, or have they always been like that?

Uh, uh, uh, uh! Don't answer that question.

When I watch a man like the professional, Mr. Sam Sneed, shoot with his mashie onto the green and finish with a 66 score, well, it looks dreadfully easy. But I find that after I've watched the professional, my stroke seems to become worse.

"Similarly, when people read poetry of the masters, it seems so easy that it would appear anyone could do the same. But just as the professional golfer has become what he is by sweat and trial after trial so the writer of poetry must study his art, and by puffing and groaning and working he may produce poetry from which the slave-like workmanship does not seem apparent and all that remains is an apparent spontaneity."

The poet-professor looked through a few more pages of his book and said, "Yes, I've enjoyed producing these. You get a real glow of satisfaction when you try to construct an image expressed in words which will reflect a mood or emotion that you have felt."

The poet turned from his book for a minute to look at the leaves falling from the trees in Queen's Park outside his study window. "I find," he said, "that in the fall of the leaves, for example, I look beyond the actual to an image that expresses a poetic mood, in this case perhaps barrenness or death. The task of the poet is to capture this mood."

He turned once again to his book. "Yes," he said, "such a task always challenges me. I enjoy the shaping of the idea into the poem, and that joy is fulfilled when my reading this book are given pleasure and increased awareness."

University Newman Club Greets Catholic Students At Annual Convention

Hon. Louis Saint Laurent, K.C., will speak to Delegates at the Newman Club Convention Banquet

DANCE OPENS PROGRAM

Catholic students at the University of Toronto will welcome fellow-Catholics from other universities this coming week-end on the occasion of the opening of the annual convention of the Canadian Federation of Newman Clubs. The theme of the convention is, "The Youth Apostolate." The programme gets under way Friday at 9 p.m. with registration of the delegates, to be followed by a dance in Newman Hall, 89 St. George Street, music being supplied by Vernon Honsberger and his orchestra.

Saturday, at 9 a.m., Mass will be held in the Chapel of St. Thomas Aquinas. The first session opens at 10 a.m. with presentation of reports by the various committees; at 11 o'clock delegates will join in a discussion on the promotion of the Beatification Cause of John Henry Cardinal Newman.

At 2 p.m. Saturday, the third session of the day begins with a panel discussion on the convention theme: "The Youth Apostolate," Father H. W. Daly, S.J., being the principal speaker, after which delegates will join in discussing the various points put forward. This will be followed by tea and then a business session. Hon. Louis Saint Laurent, K.C., an outstanding jurist, will speak to the delegates at the convention banquet to be held in the ballroom of the King Edward Hotel.

The dinner will be followed with presentation of memberships in the John Henry Newman Honor Society to Newmanites who have been devoted to the cause of Newmanism on university campus. At 10 p.m. there will be a programme of entertainment at Newman Hall.

Sunday, Oct. 29, at 10 a.m., Mass will be celebrated in the Chapel for benefactors of Newman Clubs. Breakfast will be served after Mass in Newman Hall; then the elections will take place, to be followed with reading of resolutions to end the convention.

Heading the list of patrons of the convention are His Excellency, the Most Rev. J. C. McGuigan, D.D., Archbishop of Toronto, who has extended his blessing.

Good Neighbour Policy Discussed by Garcia

The Spanish Club is a magnificent means of forging closer bonds between North America and the Spanish nations south of the Rio Grande. Senor Garcia, the consul of the Dominican Republic, said last night at the first meeting of the Spanish Club at the Women's Union.

The Latin American is an idealist and a dreamer, he stated, while the North American is practical and a realist, but both have a rich civilization and should know more about one another.

Mr. Da Costa was present to teach the rhumba to a big crowd of Latin and student members of the club.

Record Hour

The record programme held daily from 3:45 to 5:00 in the Women's Common Room at U.C. is open to all students of every College and Faculty.

Today's programme is as follows: Bach—Concerto for Two Violins; Mozart—Quartet for Oboe and Strings; Debussy—Afternoon of a Faun; Ravel—Ma Mère l'Oye (Mother Goose Suite).

Guest Speaker

Hon. Louis Saint Laurent, K.C., who will speak to Newman Club Convention delegates Saturday night.

Former Sports Ed Home From Wars

Lieut. Roger Conant, one-time Sports Editor of The Varsity, has just arrived in Toronto after being overseas since May.

While at University, Conant trained with the C.O.T.C., and overseas he changed regiments three times. On arrival in Britain he joined the Monmouthshire Regiment and shortly after went to France with the Welsh Regiment a few days after D-Day. In France he transferred to the South Wales Borderers, which was fighting on the front lines.

Conant stayed with the South Wales Borderers Regiment until July 7, when their attack was beaten back with heavy casualties. In the ensuing German counter-attack Conant was caught in a mortar and 88 millimetre barrage which blasted him into unconsciousness. He came to, several days later, in a British hospital near Bayeux. As soon as he had recovered sufficiently, Conant was evacuated to England. He spent two weeks in Guy's Hospital in London, during which time he recalls the landing of two buzz-bombs in the vicinity of the hospital. The Canadian doctors prescribed evacuation to Canada, Conant being a victim of neurosis.

Conant spoke of the optimism ripe in Britain as to the rapid and successful conclusion of the war and of the high opinion of British officers for Canadian soldiers. At this time Conant has a thirty-day leave but his future plans depend on further orders from the government.

NEWSFRONTS

Pearl Harbor—The Japanese lost 26 fighting ships in a knock-out blow by the Americans in the Philippines.

London—British troops have bypassed the enemy stronghold of Tillyburg in Holland. At the same time there have been German reports of fresh Canadian landings on the South Beveland Islands in the Scheldt Estuary south of Antwerp.

Russia—Russian troops have advanced sixteen miles to capture Munka-vevo, Ruthenia. Other Russian troops are advancing in northern Norway, East Prussia and on Budapest.

Henry James' 'The Golden Bowl' Reviewed in Alexander Lecture

The third Alexander Lecture, dealing with the middle period of Henry James, was delivered by Professor F. O. Matthiessen in Hart House Theatre yesterday and dealt chiefly with the novel "The Golden Bowl."

Following James' usual technique, the novel is built about a central idea, the lecturer explained, in this case of a golden bowl. The bowl stands as a symbol of a different thing for each character. James uses it, in short, to bring to a focal point the varied and diversified themes and characters of the whole book, he said.

James was a novelist, Prof. Matthiessen declared, who occupied a position on the borderline between the older psychological writers such as Hawthorne and Eliot, and the modern school. Unlike Hawthorne, however, he failed to create a sense of the wider world in which his characters appear, he said. This, the speaker stated, is what makes the book decadent—decadent in the sense that it substitutes the part for the whole.

Critics of James have made the accusation that his characters tend to live off the tops of their minds, he explained. They are too intelligent, and they lack consistency, he said. The most glaring example of this in "The Golden Bowl" is the wealthy American who goes to Europe to bring back the "pillage of the past." His character is not convincing he is simply incarnate, a kind of infant king, and, unfortunately, James seems to take him at his own estimate, said Prof. Matthiessen. In creating such a character, James was far removed from Balzac, whose treatment of wealth was always such as to emphasize its degrading and demoralizing effect, he continued.

This incongruity of character may have been due, the speaker suggested, to the beginning of the policy which James later took almost as a rule, namely the creation of an airtight structure subordinating every detail to the main theme.

Although James was writing with experience in the sophisticated life of the Europe of his day, and was concerned with the problem of the international marriage, which he introduces into this novel, he is not satirizing it, said Prof. Matthiessen. In his whole treatment of the problem of the wealthy American family in Europe James showed how far he had drifted from a true appraisal of Americans during his long sojourn in Europe, he said. "James needed to break the web of his own enchantment," stated Prof. Matthiessen. "He himself felt that he had lost contact with the American human heart." It was this, he concluded, that caused James to return to America.

The speaker concluded his lecture with a description of James' disgust and disillusionment with the America he found, especially its lack of form, and its speech, which he found appalling. This awakening to the reality of the world about which he had remained so long ignorant greatly influenced James, he claimed, and was reflected in his later works.

The last lecture of the series, "The Ivory Towers," will be given this afternoon.

CORRECTION

The Varsity regrets that it erroneously quoted the co-editors of The Undergraduate Magazine in a news story in yesterday's edition. A meeting for all students interested in writing for The Undergraduate, the University College magazine, will be held today in The Varsity office at 3:45—and not on Thursday, as previously stated.

"Chesty" Gets Tough When Freshmen Soft

By Ernst R. Deutsch

The following exposé is dedicated in particular to any male freshman who has passed, or expects to pass, his medical exam and is about to discover the lurking horrors of Hart House Athletic Wing.

Well, Mr. Pulhems, you enter a most innocent-looking drill hall, hear a bell ring, and start on your gymnastics. It's very easy, at first; no strain at all. What does P.T. stand for, anyhow? "It's a Pastime for Toughies," you will proudly assert. Well, you better get those smart ideas out of your mind. Up there you aren't tough at all, in fact you are small and weak, and insignificant . . . oh, so insignificant, Mr. Pulhems!

You see, they work you up by degrees. Soon you will hear your joints cracking rhythmically and feel every one of your muscles engaged at some different kind of forced labour. After twenty minutes you are lying on your back, helplessly. Chesty orders you to raise your legs. Not straight up, of course. No, only ten inches from the ground. You see, they are using subtle torture with you. "Spread 'em," shouts Chesty. "Together, spread 'em!"

All right, you think, we'll manage that!

"Together! Spread 'em! Together! Spread 'em! Together!"

Well, you are desperately awaiting the "Lower Them!" signal, but nothing occurs, whilst your legs stay 10 inches up. Your face begins to turn blue. You look about for a chance to steal a little rest. But, no fear—Chesty is staring at you. All the world now becomes centered in your legs, you wish for a toothache, the strain grows worse and worse . . . you can't hold them any longer . . . "why doesn't he give me a rest?" . . . You think of hell and your family—you wish to die . . . and then, finally, . . . there it comes . . . he calls, yes . . . thank God . . . at last . . . "FLUTTER KICKING!!!"

You will agree now, Mr. Pulhems, that P.T. stands for "Physical Torture!"

After gymnastics, you usually get a choice. If you like to gamble, choose wrestling. Your instructors are good wrestlers and, of course, very humanitarian. Yet they are human, too, and sometimes they feel the old spirit soaring again and, since you are frail, Mr. Pulhems, this is just too bad for you.

However, except a few spines and ribs, little more is fractured each year, if you forget about arms and legs. And above all, don't make enemies among the staff! As an example, the writer of this sensational exposé will probably himself have to wrestle some time for his crime.

After this, the rest is easy. You just have to run to Queen Street (only figuratively speaking!) but naturally, those two miles are a cinch, even after the horrors you have just passed through.

At last, you actually do what you came up for—hand in your number and scam.

Well, to depart in a friendlier spirit: There is one thing about P.T.—You can't get more for your money's worth! One lesson fixes you up for seven days, and that's what you paid your fees for! Or is it, Mr. Pulhems?

Eric Tredwell, baritone, will be the soloist at the first in a series of Sunday evening concerts to be held in Wymilwood on Sunday evening, Oct. 29, at 9 p.m. Miss Frances Marr will be the accompanist.

Section one of the programme will consist of selections from Handel's Solomon, Mozart's Don Giovanni and The Marriage of Figaro, and Puccini's La Bohème.

Part two of the programme will consist entirely of Schubert works, including der Lindenbaum, der Doppelgänger, die Post, die Kröhe and Who is Sylvia? In the final section of the programme Tredwell will sing Orlando Morgan's Clorinda, Quilter's Now Sleeps the Crimson Petal, Dunhill's The Cloths of Heaven, Hughes' Kitty of Coleraine and I Got Plenty o' Nuttin by Gershwin.

Ontario Geology Is R.C.I. Topic

"Ontario Through Two Billion Years" will be the subject of an address by Dr. E. S. Moore, President of the Royal Canadian Institute, in Convocation Hall on Oct. 28 at 8:15 p.m.

Dr. Moore, a graduate of the University of Toronto, is now head of the Department of Geology in the University, and Director of the Royal Museum geological surveys for both the Ontario and Dominion Governments as well as for the United States. Extensive geological field studies have also taken him to distant places, including Australia, New Zealand, Hawaii, India, Alaska, Egypt, and South Africa.

Besides this, Dr. Moore has published four books and eighty technical papers. In his lecture Dr. Moore will show that the whole of Ontario was invaded by ice several times, as Greenland and Antarctica are today. He will explain that the northern part of Ontario was once covered by volcanoes, and later by great mountain chains and that glaciers have enriched the soil of southern Ontario an dmade it a fine agricultural area.

No Bond Drive For University

The seventh Victory Loan Drive was opened across Canada on Monday, Oct. 23. As was the custom of previous years, forms for the purchase of bonds are available in the Students' Administrative Council in Hart House. However, no canvassing is done on the campus among the students, and very little advertising is undertaken.

The main reason is that the average student has not sufficient means to purchase a bond because his expenses are limited, said Miss A. E. M. Parkes, of the S.A.C. While a few students do make application in Hart House, this is no basis on which to judge the entire student purchases as many students purchase through their local banks or canvassers she pointed out. Miss Parkes emphasized the fact however that there are students on the campus who have made a sacrifice in order to buy bonds, and their efforts are commendable. "The average student cannot buy a bond but he can increase his purchases of War Savings certificates, which is definitely within every student's reach," said Miss Parkes.

History of Russia, Relations With Europe, and Growth of the Revolutionary Movement, Discussed in Lecture

REFORM BY STUDENTS

The early revolutionaries in Russia have been far too much glorified in recent years, said Sir Bernard Pares in his third lecture in the series on "Russia," in Convocation Hall yesterday afternoon. By their cold-blooded assassinations during the last half of the nineteenth century they killed the last chances for a Russian constitution for the next twenty-five years, he said.

Sir Bernard outlined the history of Russia and its relations with Europe from the emancipation of the serfs until the assassination of Alexander II. He described first the growth of the revolutionary movement. "The initiative for reform was left to the young, and especially to the university students, but they were the least responsible and least balanced group. These first revolutionaries were not Marxists," he explained. At first they attempted to persuade the peasants to drive out their village authorities, but later they settled in the city slums and "with a sort of schoolboy ingenuity" tried to pull down those officials who were outstandingly aggressive, he said. To sum the situation up, Sir Bernard said, "Russia was full of

Macbeth, Tragedy Discussed by Dale

The first official meeting of the Shakespeare Club was held yesterday evening at the Central Library, when Professor E. A. Dale spoke on "Macbeth."

Professor Dale first compared Macbeth with the other four great tragedies. "Tragedy has a definite meaning: the fall of the prince. Shakespeare carries this faithfully through," said Professor Dale.

"All masks are stripped at the end of a play and we see the characters as the author wanted us to see them. Tragedy aims at a final effect. This is made possible through moral sympathy, though we may be introduced to the hero as the villain right at the start," said Prof. Dale.

Professor Dale then proceeded to compare "Macbeth" with "The Tempest." He pointed out the similarity of the theme and the differences in the atmosphere.

As a finale the scenes in which the witches appear in "Macbeth" were produced. The members of the cast were volunteers from the club. Ernest Barth played Macbeth.

President Major J. Amann announced the plans for the upkeep of the society. Miss Lucille McConnell sang several selections.

Professor Dale of the Latin and English department of both Trinity and University Colleges, was the president of the club for three years.

The next meeting of the club will be held on Nov. 23 at Harbord Collegiate. "The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be presented.

All Varsity Fall Dance To Feature Four Bands

Tonight the annual All Varsity dance will be held at 9 p.m. in Hart House. All colleges and faculties are invited. The committee has arranged for four bands to play, and many novelties will be featured.

Bigotry At McGill

The McGill University Senate has recently announced that Canadian students of Japanese descent are barred from taking courses at that university. As excuses for this apparently pointless and narrow regulation, the McGill Senate offered the following reasons. It is alleged (1) that much war research is being done at McGill and the risk of exposure of this work to the enemy must be avoided, and (2) that Japanese-Canadians are not allowed in the Canadian armed services or in war factories. This situation is reminiscent of the "alien question" on this campus two years ago. At that time The Varsity crusaded against the bigoted and prejudiced powers that brought about the barring from this University of foreign-born and exiled aliens. Since that time aliens whose loyalty to the British crown has been investigated and proven sufficient have been freely admitted, and very little, if any, question has arisen over the acceptance of Japanese-Canadian students here.

Since a large part of the Japanese-Canadian population of Canada has been transferred from the west coast, there has been an increase in the number of applicants of Japanese descent for admission into eastern universities. Many Japanese in Canada, whose loyalty has seemed doubtful to the authorities, have been interned, and the government has announced that after the war the loyalty of all native Japanese-Canadians will be investigated. Surely this task should be carried out now in the case of the few Japanese youths who seek admission into McGill. If any were found wanting, they could be properly interned, while the loyal ones could be admitted.

Particular objection is taken to the statement that since Japanese-Canadians are not allowed in the armed services or war industries, they cannot be allowed in the university. One mistaken and semi-Fascist regulation cannot be justified by pointing out another, equally mistaken. Universities are supposedly the homes of learning and enlightenment, and by virtue of this fact singularly free from prejudices, bigotry, and antipathies. An experimental battalion of Japanese-Americans have been fighting for some time in Italy with splendid success, and the U.S. War Department are so well satisfied with the results of this experiment that they are at present drafting plans to induct many more Japanese with United States citizenship papers into the army. Surely the Japanese population of Canada is no less loyal than that of United States. This splendid demonstration of the loyalty of North Americans of Japanese descent should assure them the restoration of the rights as citizens in toto. Did we persecute Canadians of German and Italian descent on the outbreak of hostilities with the Fascist state? Granted that the Oriental sections of the population are not as assimilable as the European sections, but this does not necessarily prevent them from being just as loyal to the government of Canada.

The reason, that much war research is being done at McGill, seems strange in view of the fact that the war research being done at McGill is not much, if at all, in excess of that being done right here at Toronto; yet Japanese-Canadian students of proven loyalty and sufficient academic qualifications are allowed to study here. On top of this, the average university student has no more access to the secret war research being done at a university than an outsider, for obvious security reasons.

The McGill Senate, by this announcement, exposes itself to the charge of practising at home the policies and practices the rest of the country is fighting abroad.

Intercollegiate Revival

(Following on the editorial appearing in The Varsity of yesterday, we here reprint an editorial which appeared a short while ago in the McGill Daily, which expresses the views of the Montreal students on this important question.—Editor.)

Intercollegiate sports were abolished after the first wartime session of 1939-40, when the so-called phony war became a desperate fight for life. The fundamental reason for cancelling these activities was of course the unwillingness of the universities, under the pressure of public opinion, to continue "business as usual" while Canadian sailors, soldiers, and airmen bled and died. Other factors, such as wartime travel restrictions, were brought up to round out the picture.

These reasons are now ceding to the general realization that the universities have played their appointed part in the nation's war effort. The feeling is that there need no longer be any troubled consciences about the return of those extra-curricular activities which, far from hampering the present main interest of the country, help to maintain the healthy balance vital to regular college life.

Last spring, on student demand, there was an unofficial approach of the other members of the Big Four, Varsity, Queen's and Western. The general refusal on their part at that time to help initiate a revival of intercollegiate football, hockey, track and field, and other sports, stemmed from the fact that the first two are state-supported universities and thus subject to a direct control not active upon either Western or McGill.

Travel restrictions and the general manpower situation have now both eased off somewhat—although they cannot by any means be said to be near normal or even liable to reach normal within the immediate predictable future—and the general public reaction is less to be anticipated because of the general feeling that the crisis, if not the climax, is over. Privately endowed as she is, McGill should therefore take the lead in reinstituting intercollegiate sports.

The intra-mural sports held here during the last few years have been of doubtful success; whether the interfaculty programme scheduled for the coming session will be any more so remains to be seen. In any case, neither of these can restore the college spirit which has been terribly dampened by war. Far be it from us to counsel a frivolous attitude at this time, when the nation's chief job still remains incomplete; but a return to a more balanced course and a slight respite from the grindstone are surely permissible and advantageous. It is time that the student bodies of Canada's universities, having begun and spent their college careers in wartime concentration, should be reminded of each other's presence, corresponding efforts and plans.

The revival of intercollegiate sports is not the most pressing of world problems. But in view of the present situation and there being no longer any valid objections to it, the Big Four, and this University in particular, are urged to consider the matter soon and seriously. It is too late to change the football set-up, usually the major factor, but both hockey and basketball will serve to bring about the results proposed above, if the intercollegiate, and perhaps the international (in the case of hockey) leagues are brought back. The Athletics Advisory Board will have the full support of the student body when this question comes up for discussion.

ARTE MUSIC

Eaton Auditorium

A concert of superb artistry, both technically and artistically speaking, was played last night by Mischa Elman, one of the world's greatest living violinists. His audience was held spell-bound as his violin gave such successive new eloquence.

Elman's appeal is essentially in his melodies, his sensitive phrasing, sudden contrasts of tone, coupled with crisp accents and clear-cut bowing. His first number, Vivaldi's Chaconne, is considered to be one of the most popular violin classics. Its technical difficulties slipped by unnoticed as the maestro's rubato treatment made each note a vital living thing. The climax was reached early in the evening with his

Trailer Trials

Blinkers Handed Out To Dazzled Skule

Ottawa — (BURP) — The Wartime Mice and Males Board proudly announces that two daring co-eds of this Gree-at University have been post-humously awarded the Valiant Order of the Bath (V.O.B.) for their bravery and ingenuity in face of untold dangers to be met in confronting the Wartime Housing Shortage.

These brave babes, after making the rounds in and about the Greek-letter houses up and down By-George Street, finally took up residence smack-bang in the middle of the front campus in a canary-yellow trailer (with blinds).

President Dody, at inauguration ceremonies, distributed blinkers to Schoolmen. Marryin'-Bee Gersfuson dristened the caravan, smacking the front steps with a flagon of distilled water and wheaties. "I christen thee Anyoldport Ina Storm," she burbled, sucking her wheatie. "Go to it, girls! You have my blessings."

The venture proved an enormous success for a short time, but failed at the end of the first week, when the girls succumbed to extreme exhaustion and shock due to the hordes of Schoolmen who dropped in at all hours of the day and night to have their blinkers adjusted.

Last seen, caravan and cargo were fast vanishing in a southerly direction. This was due, no doubt, to the magnetic attraction between yellow and red.

let's go places

Contrary to the usual movie comedy, this piece has a story which hangs together, and is not something merely incidental to a lot of "THE MERRY MONAHANS" tunes. It's all about the good old days of vaudeville and a family of troupers who have their ups and downs in the theatre as well as in their lives. Jack Oakie, as the father, turns in a rather mediocre performance of the on-the-wagon, off-the-wagon vaudeville artist. However, this is offset by the hilarious, talented (and typical) antics of Donald O'Connor and Patsy Ryan.

There are plenty of laughs, as well as a bit of sentiment, in the show. The musical numbers are entertaining and well-handled. On the same bill is a very interesting short on the manufacture of the Mosquito Bomber, from lumberjack to the finished product. Another short, starring Spencer Tracy, in support of the 7th Victory Loan (and incidentally, very different from the usual sort of thing) as well as a cartoon and news, round out the bill.

Much of the dramatic effect of Somerset Maugham's "The Hour Before Dawn" is lost in its Hollywood version because the characterizations are necessarily reduced by the limitations of the screen. However, EGLINTON, against a background of charming English countryside the action unfolds into an interesting if obvious war thriller.

Veronica Lake, the stranger of up-swept coil, and convincingly foreign accent, now sultry en negligee, now ruthlessly sinister, handles capably her role of the coniving pro-Nazi saboteur. Franchot Tarn, playing the naturally unsympathetic part of her "conchie" husband, manages to capture audience

Speaking OF SPORT

By Jerrie Ewins

THE MULOCK CUP RACE . . .

The rugby set-up in the Mulock Cup race is beginning to take shape these days as each team gets a few games tucked under its belt. The teams are also getting some of that conditioning which was so sorely lacking at the start of the season, getting it the hard way from their games. The type of rugby being played in the current games is quite good, much better than that displayed earlier and is deserving of your attention, so get out to the games and support your teams.

Sr. S.P.S. is emerging from the fray as the strongest team in the league. They usually do provide a powerful team and, having won the championship last year, possess a team with a good deal of experience and ability this time. They are on top in Group I by measure of their defeats of the two others in this group, Dents and Sr. Meds. They should take their group and go on to win the final. Group II finds Jr. S.P.S. on top with two wins and no losses. U.C. have won one and lost one while the other team in this group, Jr. Meds, have gone down to defeat twice. The Jr. S.P.S., U.C. game was very close, the Schoolmen coming out on top 2-1, and indicates a close race between these two teams for the group championship. U.C. have received a couple of first-class replacements since that game in Kuhn and Cranham and will probably take this group on the strength of yesterday's game alone, and should stay in the running until the final game.

Group III is the best matched group of the three. S.P.S. III, St. Mike's and Vic have each won two games, one of them in every case from their other Group III member, Trinity. These three are all striving hard to come out on top of their group and games like yesterday's 2-1 win for St. Mike's over S.P.S. III show just how close the race really is. But we think Vic has shown more than the other two to date and will cop this division in spite of a supposedly very strong Irish squad. They will probably fall by the wayside to their more powerful rivals in the other two groups in the play-offs, however.

THE TENNIS FINAL . . .

takes place at St. Hilda's courts at 11 o'clock today in the Doubles Division. This match brings together Wade and Morrison of U.C. and Young of U.C. and Dimock of Trinity; and should highlight a very successful though much prolonged tournament. Spectators are welcomed at the courts, and we think that the all-U.C. entry of Wade and Morrison will take the Victoria Tennis award.

"The Sportswoman"

By Janice Murray

Yesterday we were cornered by a U.C. prospective athlete and told that we should ask the heads of sports at the Royal College to post sports notices about future practices, games, etc., on a bulletin board where all might read them. We haven't been around U.C. too little yet we do not know of such a bulletin board, and it certainly seems that each college should have such a thing after two years' general snooping and a month or so of specialized snooping we might know where such a thing is. For instance, Victoria has a beauty, plunk in the middle of the hall where hungry newshounds may glean what is happening in the Scarlet and Gold sports world. St. Hilda's has notices posted in the Common Room at Trinity and also on the St. Hilda's notice board, but where, oh where do the U.C. notices hang out?

We don't like to use this column for too many such notices, but to save awful mix-ups in where and when practices occur, we will print them if they are turned in, especially when there is not too much going on in the way of games and such.

Down at School we hear there is not as much enthusiasm as their reputation warrants. There are about 20 girls in the little red skulchroom but there are only about 4 who show interest sufficient to turn out for practices. Now this from a place which packs the baseball schedule for the men is simply unheard of! Nurses, Physio and O.T. are able to field complete teams and then some, just for the love of the thing, and we are sure that they have not less work than the average Skulchwoman. Some day we hope to hear that S.P.S. is in a position to take, or rather, has spirit enough to take a place in Women's Athletics. They are in such a position now.

Tomorrow comes the much-publicized (by this column) tennis game between D. J. Sanders and Marg. Alexander at St. Hilda's courts at 1.30. Again we urge that you take a little time to see it.

In the tennis field, too, there is the event of the season coming up in the Round Robin tournament, dinner and dance, next Wednesday. A limited number of tickets have been given each College and Faculty to be distributed to those who in most cases are most worthy, i.e., that played for their College during the University Men's and Women's tournaments just past. Brownie Young of U.C. has predicted a wheel of a time, both in the playing and later for the 60 participants. There should be really grand tennis played Wednesday afternoon.

Finally, Monday the Basketball schedule starts. There really, to our mind, should have been at least a week more of practices before the games started as most coaches are just beginning to see the vague outline of a team emerging and not only is it disheartening to field a team that is mediocre now but might

Trinity Heads Race For T. A. Reed Trophy

With the complete results of team sport entries and games won tabulated, Trinity is far in the lead in the race for the T. A. Reed Trophy. A surprising total of 2684 points gives them a good lead over Meds, who have 1848.5 points. School and Forestry are well behind in the third and fourth places, respectively. This includes the complete points for tennis, track and golf. The standings are as follows:

Trinity, 2684; Meds, 1848.5; S.P.S., 1504.5; Forestry, 1453; Dents, 1263; St. M., 1218; U.C., 983.5; Knox, 883.5; Vic, 753; Wyc., 587; Emman., 526; Pharm., 240.

Vic Nose Out Dents By 1-0 Count, Yesterday

Vic's soccer team came out on top in a 1-0 match with Dents on the back campus yesterday afternoon. Aided by a wind during the first half, Seemungal scored the only goal on a rather loose play, but Vic deserved their win.

Vic—Elliott, Howlett, Hoeniger, Seunarine, Hassanali, Thir, Walmsley, Robert, Walthe, Hikechi, Seemungal, Cockburn, Hart, Reed and Horning.

Dents—Schadeck, Nicholson, Turner, Morrow, Copeland, McColeman, Ryan, Takahashi, Boyd, Fleming, Wallace, Wolfe, Langmaid, Sebben, Schwartz.

U.C. Team Proves Too Strong for Game But Inexperienced Junior Meds Aggregation; Scoring Four Touchdowns

CRANHAM, KUHN STAR

A powerhouse squad of stars under the name of U.C. ran roughshod over a group of game Medsman in a Group II rugby tilt yesterday on the back campus by a score of 29-0. The abundance of backfield talent in the U.C. camp helped to keep the score down as they showed poor organization in their huddles and tried nothing but the most spectacular plays they could think of. They successfully executed about half of these with forward passes predominating, and some steady headwork by Kuhn in the line got them this onesided win. Meds just played for the fun of it after the start of the second half. If this U.C. team can get really clicking they should take the Mulock Cup. P.H.E. has contributed many players to help build this strong team for U.C.

The ball was kept mainly in the Meds' end in the first quarter, with U.C. fumbling away their chances. On the first play of the second quarter Wade kicked a nice placement against the wind from the 25-yard line to give U.C. their first three points. Meds' kick-off was short and Staley ran it back to midfield. Two completed forwards put U.C. deep in Meds' territory and Staley threw a pass to Rafflemann over the line for U.C.'s first touch. A forward pass try for the convert was grounded. The first half ended with U.C. out in front, 8-0.

sympathy in a really fine piece of acting.

Also worthy of note is Binne Barnes, the only remaining member of the original counter-plot to appear at all prominently in the movie.

The insertion of radio broadcasts by the King and Mr. Churchill materially heightens the interest and credibility of the piece.

Provision for Study Given to Armed Forces

Kingston, Ont.—(CUP)—Tolerance and the importance of education in the post-war world were emphasized by Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton, speaking at the Queen's Autumn Convocation in Grant's Hall last Saturday.

He said that education holds a great and fundamental importance in post-war reconstruction. Many students have broken up their studies to enlist in the armed forces. Provision is being made through the Canadian Legion to give anyone desiring the opportunity to study in his spare time; this scheme will be developed and expanded to meet the needs of returned service men and women.

At the ceremony Robert Chambers, of New York University, and Dean C. J. Mackenzie, President of the National Research Council, were given honorary degrees of Doctors of Law.

Goering Places First In Trinity Harrier Race

The Trinity College Harrier was run off yesterday over the usual route from St. Hilda's to Ramsden Park, through Rosedale ravine and back through Ramsden Park to St. Hilda's. Goering won the event with a time of 28 minutes flat, the record for the course being 27 minutes. Forty men took part in the annual race.

Professor L. C. A. Hodgins, of Trinity, completed today a quarter of a century of officiating at this event. For twenty-five years he has organized and encouraged this race.

The following are the results: Goering (28 min.), Hamley (29 min.), Kirkwood (29 min. 36 sec.), Hilborn (30 min.), McLaughlin, Eayers, Anderson, Irwin and Annand tied, and Bolte.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

next number, Richard Strauss' Sonata, op. 18. Melodic rather than brilliant, the violin part sang its song above the brilliant running scale passages and arpeggios of the piano. The second movement, liquidly languid in tempo, swept its audience out of this world. Its exquisite fairy-like passages formed a contrast to the sudden changes of mood and rhythm in the finale.

As fitting contrast to Strauss' 19th century romanticism, Mozart's ever-popular Concerto in D major followed. One noteworthy talent, which is, after all a must for any great artist, is the fact that he is able to submerge himself and his audience in the mood of each successive number. The Strauss Andante Cantabile and the Mozart one immediately following were similar in style and technical tricks but so vastly different in sentiment. Hebrew Melody by Joseph Achron, a definitely modern composition, was different again, being plaintively stirring and breath-taking in its emotional appeal.

Rapsodia Iberica by Joaquin Nin came as a refreshing stimulant with its obscure Spanish rhythms and bizarre and arid harmonies. Vieuxtemps' Ballade et Polonaise showed contrast in style between the slow and fully rounded bowings of the former and the brilliant and dazzling punch in the latter.

His enraptured audience brought the maestro back for two encores. The programme would not have been complete without Elman's perfect rendition of Chopin's Nocturne in E Flat which he has made so popular through recordings. For his last encore, Elman played Guitar, a melodious and brilliant piece of gypsy music.

When questioned as to which piece the maestro preferred playing, he replied that it was not possible to answer that question. He had chosen the pieces he enjoyed playing. They were certainly pieces that we enjoyed hearing. This musical experience will be remembered for a long time.

U.C. Rugby

Wade uncorked a long kick-off to start the second half and Meds juggled it just long enough to let the U.C. tacklers get down and score a rouge, making it 9-0. Rosen, the U.C. snap, cut in beautifully to intercept a Meds' lateral later in the third quarter and raced 30 yards to a touch. Wade booted the convert to run the score to 15-0. Meds fumbled a couple of plays after the kick-off and U.C. recovered. Three line plays ran up against a stone wall and Meds took possession of the ball on their own four-yard line. They attempted to kick the ball out of danger but the hoof was short and U.C. had the ball ten yards out. Cranham of P.H.E. went over for a touch on the third down and converted himself to make it 21-0 at the end of the third quarter.

Meds fumbled deep in their own territory, having been driven there by a long Staley kick, an uncovered ball behind their line to give U.C. a safety touch and a 23-0 lead. Horwitz tossed a pass to Whittle near the end of the game for a touch and Staley caught a convert pass to end the scoring at 29-0.

Wade, Kuhn and Cranham stood out for U.C. with good steady play throughout. Cochrane, Finn and Cross tried hard for Meds.

potential disorder." In Europe during this era Russia's role was changed by the rise of the German Empire under Bismarck, he explained. The unified Germany could play a leading part and divide the other European states. Thus when Russia won an apparent victory over Turkey, Austria was the actual victor, said Sir Bernard.

Meanwhile the country was being transformed from a feudal to a capitalist system, he pointed out. Just as the British Empire was expanding, so Russia was spreading eastward. While Gladstone was introducing his reform measures in England, Alexander II was introducing very similar reforms in Russia, he said. However, Sir Bernard emphasized, the English took no account of this in their judgments of the regime and regarded Russia merely as a rival for India.

After the Turkish war the revolutionaries began to subject the nation to a reign of terrorism, said Sir Bernard. Their ultimate aim was to get rid of Alexander in spite of the reforms brought in by his minister, General Melikov. This they finally accomplished in 1881 after several attempts, by a brutal and inhuman assassination, he said.

In his following lectures, Sir Bernard intends to complete the story of Russia's background and describe the most recent developments that have taken, or may take, place.

Famed Philosopher, Author, Classicist And Lecturer, Dean Brett Passes Suddenly

Philosophy Classes Cancelled
All classes in Philosophy will be cancelled this afternoon owing to the death of Dean G. S. Brett. The funeral will be held today at 2 p.m. at St. Alban's Cathedral on Albany Avenue.

First Noted as a Classicist, Professor Brett's Knowledge Embraced Many Fields of Philosophy

WON MANY HONOURS

Professor G. S. Brett, Dean of the School of Graduate Studies, head of the department of Philosophy at University College, and lecturer in Ethics at the University, passed away at his residence on Friday morning. Confined to his bed since the summer, he was unable to resume his duties at the University at the beginning of the term.

Dean Brett was born at Britton Ferry, South Wales, in 1879. Despite his Welsh birthplace he always considered himself an Englishman. At Christ Church, Oxford, he won a scholarship in classics in 1902 and later received his M.A. from that university.

He became teacher in London, England, and at Cambridge, until he went to India in 1904 to assume the professorship of Philosophy in Government College, Lahore. In later years Professor Brett often talked of his holidays, during which he hiked in Kashmir in Northern India.

In 1908 he came to Trinity College, Toronto, as lecturer in Classics and Ethics. Three years later he became associated with the University as lecturer in Logic. That same year he married Marion Grace Kenrick.

In 1927 Professor Brett was appointed permanent head of the department of Philosophy at the University. In 1932 the Board of Governors appointed him Dean of Graduate Studies. He held both positions until his death.

Aside from his appointments in the University realm, Dean Brett also held other important positions. In 1922 he became a Fellow of the Royal Society and was president of Section II. He was a member of the editorial board of the International Journal of Ethics and on the board of directors of the Canadian Journal of Religious Thought.

He was the first editor of the University of Toronto Quarterly and chairman of the Publications Committee, History of Science Society. He contributed to the Encyclopedia Britannica.

Professor Brett believed in religious unity. He has written three major works, "The Philosophy of Gassendi," which is now regarded as a classic; "The Government of Man," which is a history of the theory of conduct, and "The History of Psychology," incorporated in three volumes, Saturday Night comments on "his brilliant gifts of literary expression which are as rare as they are delightful."

In recent years Professor Brett was connected with the American Association of Universities which met in Toronto two weeks ago.

The funeral will be held today at 2 p.m. from St. Alban's Cathedral. All classes in philosophy will be cancelled for the afternoon.

Record Hour

The record programme held daily from 3:45 to 5:00 in the Women's Common Room at U.C., is open to the men and women of every College and Faculty.

Today's selections are: Mendelssohn—Rondo Capriccioso; Gershwin—Rhapsody in Blue; Rimsky-Korsakov—Scheherazade.

Two Billion Years To Make Ontario

Professor E. S. Moore of the Royal Canadian Institute gave the opening presidential address at Convocation Hall on Saturday, Oct. 28. The subject was "Ontario Through Two Billion Years."

Prof. Moore raised the question, "Are we out of the glacial age now?" There is some uncertainty as to whether we are reverting to another glacial invasion or emerging from one.

He stated that during the period of approximately a million years there have been four invasions of ice, each occurring at intervals of approximately 25,000 years.

He explained how the distribution of industry has been greatly altered by these glacial invasions, for example the areas such as those in northern Ontario, where mining resources are numerous, may be contrasted to those in southern Ontario.

Agriculture is aided considerably by the mineral content of the rocks, which contain minerals essential to plant life. They are freed by the process of weathering. "The public," he continued, "is usually under the impression that the change from mountainous areas to flattened areas is due to being swept off by glaciers." Prof. Moore pointed out that this is not true. The average thickness of rock removed throughout the ages can be expressed in tens of feet. This phenomenon is due to ordinary erosion.

Prof. Moore said his choice of "Two Billion Years" was a geological one, based on the fact that scientists know that the world has been in existence for at least that length of time.

New Course Offered In Broadcasting Method

Antigonish, N.S.—(CUP)—In collaboration with radio station CJFX, a new course has been added to the curriculum of St. Francis Xavier University. The new course, called Radio Workshop, comes under the scope of the English Department, under the direction of Rev. G. L. Kane, a professor of English there.

The underlying purpose of the course is to familiarize students with the technique and methods of modern broadcasting. There will be an opportunity to gain practical experience as many of the classes are to be held in the studio while programmes are in progress.

A fluency of speech and some dramatic ability are the general requirements for students taking the course.

In addition to the Workshop, a short course in radio script writing is offered. The enrolment in it is largely made up of people outside the University itself.

Saint Laurent Calls Youth To Play Part In Reconstruction

The Honorable S. L. Saint Laurent, K.C., Canadian Minister of Justice, speaking Saturday night at the Newman Club Convention Banquet at the King Edward Hotel, told the students that their work in the University during the war was "quite as important" to the Canadian nation as that which was being done by their older brothers and friends in the services.

"We have all been thrilled by the glorious exploits of our fighting men in the three services," he said before an audience of 300. "But it is not at once apparent to us all that the deeds of valour they have accomplished in every zone where they have met with our enemies were possible only because of the intensity and completeness of the training which these dashing young men have received in our naval establishments, army training camps throughout our land."

"You young ladies, and young men, here from our colleges and universities, and many hundreds of other bright young Canadians like you, are being provided with the best educational and training facilities at the disposal of the Canadian people," he continued.

The Minister went on to speak of Canadian bi-racialism.

"Some of you," he said, "might think that our path would be easier if all Canadians were English-speaking Canadians of Anglo-Saxon, Scotch or Irish origin. Some of those who belong to your race might think that it would be easier if all Canadians were French-speaking descendants of the first white settlers of this land."

"I am not sure that either would be right, but even if they were right in theory, what we have to deal with is not a theory but a set of facts quite different from any such theory."

"The population of Canada is made up, in the main, of two major elements drawn from what we look upon as the two main civilizations of Western Europe. Both are here to stay . . . and not only have they both to continue to live and get along together but they both have to share in the joint undertaking of making this a real nation or it will never become a real nation."

Mr. Saint Laurent urged the students to make a real contribution to the cause of unity in Canada by familiarizing themselves "with the French language to the same extent that many of us Canadians of French origin familiarize ourselves with English."

"If you note it your accomplishment to acquire both languages you will not only be helping yourselves, but you will be making it that much easier and surer and more rapid to bring about in this country the measure of national unity that is necessary to make this young nation the vigorous national unit that it is proving itself to be in the titanic struggle of the last five years."

The speaker said that he had preached this policy for "some time," but when he referred to it in the Commons once, he was severely taken to task by several newspapers for having dared raise in wartime an issue apt to be controversial.

But Mr. Saint Laurent said he was pleased to note that his view was becoming more widely shared, and he quoted an editorial from The Ottawa Citizen, which in turn had quoted a statement by Dr. Robert Newton, President of the University of Alberta, as saying:

"If Canada is to contribute to post-war reconstruction, it will have to fulfil an indispensable condition first—to realize its own national unity. And to bring that about it will have to solve the problem of bilingualism. We will have to determine then what our system of teaching will be, for this system will have to be completely bilingual."

The Minister concluded: "I would not like to admit that prejudices are harder and faster in the East. But your Federation is neither East nor West—it is Canadian, and I am sure that you will all wish as Canadians to contribute your best efforts to the elimination of prejudices everywhere and to the promotion of as broad a measure of national unity as good-will and sincere co-operation can enable us to bring about."

Newman Club Convention At Varsity Newman Hall Discusses Role Of Youth

Memberships to Newman Society Given to Distinguished Newmanites by First Canadian Student Member

ELECTIONS HELD

The annual convention of the Canadian Federation of Newman Clubs, held under the patronage of the Most Reverend James C. McGuigan, D.D., Archbishop of Toronto, took place this weekend, October 27-29, at Newman Hall in the University of Toronto.

The convention was attended by delegates of various Newman Clubs across Canada.

The principal address of the convention was delivered by the Hon. S. L. Saint Laurent, K.C., Minister of Justice, at a banquet held Saturday evening in the Crystal Ballroom of the King Edward Hotel. David Balfour, K.C., representing the Mayor and the City of Toronto, welcomed the visiting delegates to Toronto. Warden J. B. Bickersteth of Hart House represented the University at the convention.

Included on the agenda for the week-end conference were presentations of reports by representatives of visiting club executives, panel discussions on the "Youth Apostolate" and on the Newman beatification movement, presentation of membership in the John Henry Newman Society, and election of the officers of the Federation for the coming year.

Following Saturday night's banquet there was a distribution of memberships into the John Henry Newman Society by Newman Mallon, first Canadian student to be received into the society. Very Rev. Father J. McQuillen, Rector of St. Michael's Cathedral, Mr. and Mrs. James Cartwright, Mr. Robert Campbell, President of McGill Newman Club, Miss Kay McLean, Secretary of the Canadian Federation, and Mr. Paul Dandaneau, 1943-44 President of Toronto Newman, received memberships.

At the elections for the Federation held on Sunday morning it was decided to restrict the eligibility to members of Queen's University. Archie Foley was elected President of the Federation for a second consecutive time.

Sunday Evening Concert

Agnes Butcher, young Toronto pianist, will give the Sunday Evening Concert in the Great Hall of Hart House on Sunday next, 5th November. The programme will be published later. Representatives from the various colleges and faculties are asked to call today at the Warden's office for their allotments of tickets.

Unfinished Novel Final Lecture Topic

In the fourth and final Alexander lecture, delivered last Friday in the Hart House Theatre, Professor F. O. Matthiessen of Harvard University discussed Henry James' last novel, "The Ivory Tower."

Prof. Matthiessen dealt with a brief summary of the book, in which more characters are introduced than in most of James' other novels.

Discussing the author's work as a whole, the lecturer said Henry James felt that American life was marked by a kind of vulgarity. He denounced violently the "criminality" of American newspapers during the Spanish-American War. When the first World War broke out, James felt that the times were unsuitable for the writing of "The Ivory Tower," and so it was abandoned. This same period found three books or sections of James' intended ten completed and a fourth book started.

At the age of 73, worn out with the strain of war work, he died. It has been said, stated Prof. Matthiessen, that, although we know how James wanted to finish "The Ivory Tower," no one but he could add a sentence to it.

Fortunate in that his father's wealth enabled him to pursue his literary career, James was in love with the next world. Psychic research fascinated him, as did the question of the persistence of the personality after death. Furthermore, the only kind of immortality that James would value was the one which carried on human consciousness.

Unlike Hawthorne, James was not a spiritual writer, but remained to the end an absorbed spectator whose philosophy embraced both religion and politics. "Many of James' characters are, oddly enough, not at all remote," the lecturer concluded.

At the end of the address Mr. A. S. P. Woodhouse, professor of English at University College, gave a vote of thanks to the visiting lecturer.

Queen's Revises Meds Beginning This Year

Kingston—(CUP)—Five intramural years and one clinical year will lead to a degree in Medicine under the plan of training now in effect in the present freshman class at Queen's University. In the new course, all pre-clinical work will be completed in the first three years.

Under this scheme, it is hoped that all laboratory work will be completed by the end of the third year, so that more time will be available for clinical subjects in the fourth and fifth years.

In his final year, the student will work under supervision, in one of three hospitals. It has not yet been decided definitely whether the entire final year will be spent in one hospital or whether students will rotate, spending about four months in each.

EDITORIAL

Bel Esprit

"Standing on earth, not rapt above the sky," Professor G. S. Brett was one of the savants who laid the intellectual cornerstone of The University. An Oxonian scholar, he grounded his brilliant intellect in stabilized thought. As head of the department of Philosophy and Dean of Graduate Studies, he had opportunity to utilize his all-encompassing knowledge where it would have its best results.

Professor of Philosophy before the era of specialization descended upon The University, Dr. Brett could view many subjects in their proper perspectives. He realized the interrelationship of science and philosophy as well as psychology and sociology which have recently become divorced from their matrix. His broad outlook embodied permanent facts of human nature which enabled him to evaluate justly any effort in science, politics, philosophy or letters, be it old or new.

At one time he was vice-president of the Psychological Section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. He was the first editor of The University of Toronto Quarterly and maintained a position on the editorial board of the International Journal of Ethics. In 1922 he became a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada and was considered an authority on the political situation in India. With such a representative background behind him, Dean Brett might well have moralized or dogmatized. But whatever convictions he held, he never foisted them upon anyone. In the epilogue to his book, "The Government of Man," he writes: "The story has its moral but it is no part of this volume to dictate that moral... these are the subjects upon which those who think must exercise their judgment."

To the student, Professor Brett was the prototype of instructors. He invariably had a direct answer to any question during lectures or in his office. His genuine interest in study made the student certain that here was a man who had the correct answer to the ultimate problem.

To The University, Dean Brett is not only the symbol of sound policy but also of a worthy and dignified academic career. His guidance in the School of Graduate Studies has manifested an ever-increasing enrolment. At conferences deciding the role of the University in wartime. Professor Brett upheld the position of the Arts courses. It is largely owing to his efforts that our campus did not suffer the same fate as those in the United States.

Professor Brett never entered into the political field. "He is adverse to party politics, although he has a deep interest in politics as a science of government," wrote a biographer. To him The University was a realm for intellectual study rather than commercial development.

We have lost one of our few remaining anchors at a time when the winds are ill. The vast prospect that lies before us almost causes us to grapple with the unavoidable sorrow. Well do we understand the words of the Grecian philosopher who, when asked why he wept for the death of his son since the sorrow was in vain, replied, "I weep on that account."

To his students Professor Brett stressed the Greek maxim that to know is to act. He firmly believed in the classical idea that out of ignorance no worthwhile behaviour could issue. From his classes men and women went forth with new eagerness to read, to study and to learn. He was an unassumingly great man and an unforgettable teacher.

'I'll Be Seeing You
In The U.C. Quad'
To Become Campus
By-Word

Priority has just been granted by the Wishing Well and Carousel Controllers at Ottawa to the U.C. Lit. to install one austerity model wishing well and one used carousel in the quad to supplement the existing chestnut tree, thus bringing the establishment up to the latest standard. It is expected that this move will assure the Follies of the pick of campus crooners.

Lit. President Bob (Bobob) Boo outlined to The Varsity the difficulty of obtaining priorities. "When we first made application last summer we found that there was a scarcity of wishing wells because the extreme possibility of a national election had resulted in the hiring of all qualified well-wishers by recognized parties. The carousel problem, on the other hand, was complicated by the fact that the government hadn't yet appointed a Carousel Controller and things got badly balled up when the Civil Service acts for the position spelt it Carousal. Once it was explained that a carousel was a small circular track with horses going around the outside, we received a tip from a Toronto journalist named Hamish Q. Coalheaver, that such a device was to be had over on Dufferin Street, complete with a Wurliizer music box and parimutuel equipment.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

Massey Hall

Undoubtedly there were some staid people who might have frowned upon the English-speaking production at Massey Hall Friday night as a travesty on Georges Bizet's Carmen.

These dissenters would undoubtedly argue that French and Italian abound in round vowels musically sounded by the voice, while English is a language of sharp consonants, never to be tolerated in a libretto. They would proclaim, moreover, that to modernize opera is to vulgarize it; to substitute speaking parts for musical recitative is to reduce the glorious Carmen to the most arrant opera comique.

Though admitting to some truth in what they say, this reviewer submits that the virtue of taking the top hat off grand opera and thereby extending the appreciation of a really fine art to its widest possible audience overrides any carping which the lovers of tradition might offer.

The streamlined production, presented by the Columbia Opera Company, comes as a fresh breeze to Toronto. Basing much of its stage effects on the Broadway Negro adaptation, Carmen Jones, Producer Leopold Saschke has been unafraid of originality. A chorus dances while smoking cigarettes. Carmen works now at a cigar factory. And the libretto, with overtones of Gilbert and Sullivan, colloquializes with "My dragon, love has played you a dirty trick." All very charming.

Though uniformly good (for a road company) the cast is outdistanced by Edmonton-born Mona Paulce, who presents a vigorous Cleopatra-like Carmen. FRANK RASKY

Wynilwood Concert

This year's season of Wymilwood Concerts could have been inaugurated in no better way than with the joint appearance of Eric Tredwell, popular baritone, and Frances Marr, accompanist extraordinaire. Last night's capacity audience were irrefragable in their appreciation of the programme which was somewhat heavier than usual.

Mr. Tredwell's choice of numbers included a sonorous Handelian aria; three Italian songs, most distinguished of which was the Figaro Aria; four Schubert songs from his Winter Triptych. The Ghost with words by Goethe made haunting chills up and down our spines, stirred by Mr. Tredwell's breadth of tone and tremendous power. The sad and gloomy The Crow was especially outstanding for its teamwork.

Mr. Tredwell's ability to change character to suit the style of each successive piece gave a sense of infinite variety. A winsomely gay love-song, Clorinda, by Orlando Morgan, was contrasted with the languid love-song

"Now Sleeps the Crimson Petal." A modern song, Cloths of Heaven, displayed his caressing pianissimo tone, while the humorous and catchy old Irish tune, Kitty of Caleraine, and the American ballad I Got Plenty o' Nuttin showed he has a delightful sense of humour. Brought back for no less than five encores, Mr. Tredwell sang his nautical ballad The Plank, for which he has become famous.

After seeing many imported American accompanists, this reviewer is still of the opinion that Miss Marr's resilient musicianship is the finest that could be heard anywhere. The evening was an auspicious one, as well as a completely satisfying one for all.

Physics Dept. Announces Special Courses

Lectures on Optics of Electron Microscope and the History of Physics to Start This Week

OPEN TO PUBLIC

It has been announced by the Department of Physics that two special courses, each about twenty lectures, will be given at the McLennan Laboratory. Both courses are open to the public, and there will be no special fee to any who wish to attend.

The first series of lectures will be on The History of Physics, and it will be given by C. G. Fraser, M.A., Ph.D., B.Paed., F.C.I.C.

Dr. Fraser has spent several years studying the contributions of great scientists to the development of physics. He has previously given lectures on the History of Science. The first lecture of the series will be held on Saturday, November 4, at 9:00 a.m. in Room 41.

S. G. Ellis, B.Sc., M.A., will be handling a course on Electron Optics. The lectures will deal with the optical applications of electron beams, and their employment in the Electron Microscope. Mr. Ellis will meet those who wish to take the course in Room 18 tomorrow at 4:30 p.m.

U.C. French Club To Hear Marquis

The first meeting of the U.C. French Club will be held tonight at 7:45 p.m. at the Women's Union. Mr. Paul E. Marquis, lecturer in French at the University of Montreal, Laval College, and St. Francois Xavier University, will speak on his recent trip to the Saguenay River, it was announced Saturday by Ainslie Campbell, president of the group.

Mr. Marquis has been lecturer here for two years, having received degrees from the University of Montreal, Laval College, and St. Francois Xavier University.

Included at the meeting will be two French-language film shorts, "Chants Populaires" and "Ottawa et Ses Rivières."

On Nov. 29 the club will stage Molière's "Bourgeois Gentilhomme" at Hart House Theatre.

Varsity Sportsman Reported Killed

Lieutenant Robert John Keast, U.C. 4T5, of the Imperial Army, was reported killed in Holland Sept. 24. While at the University he was prominent in sports. Enlisting in his third year, he graduated from Gordon Head, B.C., as an officer in June, 1943.

He went overseas last April, and at the time of his death was on loan to the Imperial Army.

Lieut. Keast was the son of Mr. and Mrs. R. Gordon Keast of Copper Cliff. He is buried in Asden, Holland.

Follies Beauties Equal to Any Producer Siegel Proudly Boasts

With a brisk, business-like atmosphere and an aura of subdued excitement, rehearsals for the U.C. Follies are under way every afternoon at the Women's Union.

The rhythmic toes of two choruses are hard at work and routines are remarkably smooth at such an early date. Under the guidance of Beth Lockhart, of the Volkoff Canadian Ballet, the Tall and Short Choruses promise to be bright spots of a gay and entertaining evening.

As the shapely beauties took time off for a well-earned rest, Producer Al Siegel surveyed the scene and smiled with satisfaction.

"Busy as we are, Director Joan Ebels and I have had time to hear of a certain challenge from Western University regarding comparative standards of feminine pulchritude on Canadian camp. We feel that we have twenty-eight gorgeous chorus girls from which we could pick any one at random who would equal if not excel anything Western could offer. And the girls are talented, as well as beautiful."

According to Siegel, the skits are not in rehearsal yet. But in true Follies tradition this part of the entertainment is usually spontaneous. Not even the principal characters of the skit can be assured that everything will run according to plan at the performance. Invariably lines are changed at the last moment and to the surprise of all concerned. The ability of the cast to ad-lib puts the Follies right up there with the best of revues.

"We are having crews working on the props," he said, "who will be concentrating on timing so that as sets are being moved onto the stage, action will continue. Lighting and timing will be the keynote of this year's show."

Greek Festival Features Ode By Trinity Man

The Ontario Classical Association will stage a Greek Festival at Eaton Auditorium on Monday, November 6, 1944, at 8 p.m. The entire proceeds of the evening will go to the Greek War Relief Fund for food and clothing for the newly liberated people of Greece. The history of Greece will be traced by Mrs. D. M. Thompson of the Archaeology Department of the University, and lantern slides will be shown.

The choir of the Greek Church of St. George, Toronto, will sing a Delphic hymn to Apollo, the original music of which has been preserved. The opening chorus of Euripides' Ion, a hymn to the sun and day, will be sung, for which A. G. McKay, III Classics, wrote the score.

A Greek girl, Miss Karry, will present the dance of Ion. Two solemn Byzantine hymns are to follow.

Modern Greek folk tunes and folk dances will conclude the musical part of the programme, after which moving pictures of shipments of food supplies from Canada to Greece will be shown.

Tickets are available now at the Eaton Auditorium, Diana Sweets, Royal Ontario Museum, Paul Hahn & Co., Toronto Conservatory of Music, or from any Classics student.

Cody Asks Staff To Support Loan

Letters urging the academic and administrative staff of the University to "do their part and lend as much as they can" for the current Victory Loan Campaign, signed by Pres. H. J. Cody, are now being circulated here, it was revealed yesterday.

The letters read in part: "So that the staff may get full recognition for the bonds purchased by them, I would appreciate your placing your order with our Victory Loan canvassers, either for cash, or payroll savings, or both."

"The response of the University staff in the past Loans has been splendid. I trust that each one will purchase as much of the new Loan as his ability makes possible."

NOTICE

Every University student is asked to make sure, at once, that his correct Toronto address and telephone number are entered upon his registration card in the office of the University Registrar, Simcoe Hall, and in the office of his College Registrar or Faculty Secretary. The University Directory is now being prepared for the press and it is of the greatest importance that all addresses and telephone numbers be correct.

EDITORIAL Over The Air Waves

Despite the fact that a great many graduates of the University will eventually find themselves employed in the large and ever-expanding radio business, little interest has ever been shown on this campus in this particular field of enterprise. In this respect, the University of Toronto lags far behind many smaller but more progressive Canadian universities.

The University of Toronto has long been noted for its extreme conservatism. For many years, there has been, on the part of students, prospective students, graduates, and The Varsity, an agitation for the institution of a course in journalism on this campus. The results thus far have been negligible. As for radio, apart from courses in the more technical aspects of communication given by the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, there has been a general apathy both on the part of the students and the governing powers of the University towards this calling of ever-increasing importance.

Like journalism, this work calls for specialized training. On most camps, the student newspaper makes up, as best it can, the lack of an organized curriculum in journalism. At Toronto, however, there is no similar organization to give a student a background for broadcasting work.

At the University of British Columbia there has been for several years a student organization, known as the Radio Society, which conducts a weekly 30-minute broadcast over one of the local radio stations, CKWX, Vancouver. University news, music, and humor, featuring student talent, highlight the program. This venture gives interested students experience and helpful guidance in radio announcing, script writing, and radio acting. The Society works in close conjunction with the campus Musical Society and Players Club.

More recently, the announcement has come from Antigonish, N.S., that St. Francis Xavier University is offering, in collaboration with radio station CJFX, a new course called Radio Workshop. This course comes under the scope of the English Department and its purpose is to familiarize students with the technique and methods of modern broadcasting and to provide an opportunity for practical experience. Many of the classes are given in the studios while programs are in progress.

In the United States a great many universities give similar courses, and a few colleges have their own radio stations. Radio broadcasting stations in conjunction with universities were also common in pre-war Russia.

It is surprising that no steps or suggestion along this line have been made at Toronto; situated as it is in the heart of a large metropolitan area boasting four powerful transmitting stations, the University of Toronto has an unparalleled opportunity for such work. Students who hope some day to enter the radio field should consider the advantage and background such training would give them and organize to lay the foundations of a student Radio Society here.

"Glamour Girls For Teachers?" Toronto Students Answer "No!"

By John Ryan

Lesley College, teacher-training school in Boston, disclosed last week an unorthodox rule on admissions: girls have to be reasonably good-looking to get in. The college believes "the learning process is greatly aided" by pretty teachers and that the idea will do away with "the wormy old schoolhouse presided over by the hatchet-faced pedagogue."

The chief difficulty with the course was tactfully rejecting bright but homely applicants. The system, however, pays off, as graduates of this four-year course usually get teaching jobs with the greatest of ease.

Fearing that "the three r's" might lose something if not imparted by glamour personified, this Varsity reporter ventured down Bloor Street to the Ontario College of Education and the University of Toronto Schools to seek out the truth.

In the student's cafeteria we decided to discuss this important question with those it most concerned, that is, with some of the boys in fifth form.

When questioned, Bill Cheney had this to say on the subject: "It seems to me that if the teachers are too good-looking it would lead to lack of concentration on the part of the students. The purpose of a school is still to give the best education possible, so teachers should be chosen on scholastic rather than physical merits."

Quoth Doug Maxwell: "To me it makes no difference what my teacher looks like as long as he, she, or it can teach. I'm more interested in education than marriage right now."

Norm Mortimer added: "Although I do not approve entirely of this form of education, I think that it might have its finer points."

Dick Wilson had a rather candid way of putting his observation: "Hot babes are swell, but not as teachers. They make concentration too difficult."

Spence Carroll, alone, gave wholehearted approval to the scheme. "I think that it would be a hundred per cent idea. It would give the average-minded fellow something to look forward to, as well as to cut down the boredom found in the classroom," he said.

The students at the Ontario College of Education have various opinions on the matter. All the girls interviewed would most definitely make the grade at Lesley.

Loretta Millard, of the Library School, said: "This is an excellent idea if you believe that beauty and brains go together—but can you be sure?"

Herb Gough, with great trepidation, ventured this statement: "This college has a good idea but as it takes four years for new ideas to be used in the educational system—we'll never see the day."

Talla Luciani queried with raised eyebrow, "Would girls have to take a DuBarry success course to qualify?" (On investigation it was found that Miss Luciani worked for the said company in her spare time.) Lillian Callaghan, with apparent dismay, replied, "Good heavens! I'm afraid half of us O.C.E. girls wouldn't qualify." Irene Morrisette sadly added, "Yes, this course would make the teacher shortage even worse than it is."

Susan Wilson, from the class of 4T4, summed up the problem and gave what is probably the only sensible answer to the question—"Glamour in education! Is it necessary?" At the time The Varsity reporter left, no definite opinion had been reached.

U.S. Therapist Gives Lecture On Rehabilitation

Miss Mary Reilly, a representative of the American Association of Occupational Therapy, addressed a luncheon gathering of the Canadian Association of Occupational Therapy at the Royal York Hotel Saturday. President Goldwin introduced the guest speaker.

Occupational Therapy in the military hospitals of the United States, is under the direct supervision of the Surgical Service but its workers do not have any military status, stated Miss Reilly. American soldiers are returned to the United States as soon as possible after they have been wounded and placed in hospitals near to their own homes.

Miss Reilly spoke of her experience at Fort Devan's Hospital in helping veterans of World War II rehabilitate themselves mentally and physically.

She said that 98 girls are enrolled in the occupational therapy course this year as compared with 45 last year.

Although many girls have enlisted in the Women's Army Medical Corps in response to the demand of the armed services for therapists to serve in military and pension hospitals, the quota is not enough.

More than half of the therapists in uniform are now in England.

The meeting was then thrown open for a discussion of O.T. problems, and afterwards slides were shown of actual O.T. cases.

School to Debate Clothes Question

"Resolved: That business clothes should be worn on the U. of T. campus" is the subject of the Engineering Parliament's first debate of the year, which will be held today at 4:30 in Room 25 of the Engineering Building. The debate is expected to be such that it will end all controversy on the matter.

Peter Cahn, IV Electrical Engineering, Prime Minister of the Parliament, will lead the affirmative, and Art Jackson will be the second speaker. Fred Kahn will lead the opposition, and Peggen Syngue, V Architecture, will be second speaker for the negative. Sally MacDonald will preside as speaker of the House.

After the debate proper there will be an open meeting, in which the members of the audience will be given a chance to take part. All are welcome to come.

British Council To Give Women Research Awards

Opportunity for a Year's Study of Wartime Conditions in Britain Offered to Women Graduates

FOUR SCHOLARSHIPS

The British Council have decided to offer, for the year 1945-46, four scholarships, tenable for 12 months, to selected women graduates of Universities, Medical Schools, or academic institutions of similar rank in Canada and the other Dominions for research in the United Kingdom, Simcoe Hall announced to The Varsity yesterday.

These scholarships are intended to enable specially qualified women to visit the United Kingdom in order to study wartime conditions in some department within their particular field. Applications from students of good academic qualifications and some practical experience in their chosen spheres are preferred.

The administration of the scheme will rest with the Students' Committee of the British Council, including the supervision of the scholars' work during their year in the United Kingdom.

The value of each scholarship will be approximately $1,500.

A candidate to be eligible must:

- Be a British subject;
- Have passed her 23rd birthday on March 1, 1945;
- Have graduated at a recognized dominion academic institution;
- Produce evidence that her qualifications are such as to enable her to undertake studies or research work of value in the particular subject which she submits for approval.

Application forms for these scholarships may be obtained at the University Registrar's office and should be forwarded not later than March 1, 1945.

Announcement of the successful candidates will be made as soon as possible after June 1, 1945.

let's go places

"Mr. Skeffington" is really the story of Mrs. Skeffington. She is a vain and selfish woman completely preoccupied with her own beauty. The story "MR. SKEFFINGTON" opens with her as a great beauty surrounded by admirers. She marries Mr. Skeffington, a rich Jewish broker, whom she later divorces.

The story centres around Mrs. Skeffington and her struggle to keep her beauty and admirers in spite of the ravages of illness and old age.

Bette Davis plays the role of the selfish beauty convincingly but with rather too much dramatization. As the aging woman, she looks rather like the same Miss Davis with too much make-up. The role gives her scope for her highly emotional acting ability.

Claude Rains is very good as the neglected but loving husband and father. He seems to possess a quiet dignity that lends charm to the story. The supporting roles are well played for the most part, especially that of Skeffington's daughter.

The plot is long and drawn out and bears very small resemblance to the charming story by "Elizabeth." The locale has been shifted from England to America. The characters and settings have been too Americanized, à la Hollywood. If you have not read and enjoyed the book you will probably enjoy the picture.

WE WANT FAUX PAS!

The Senate of the University will meet this week to nominate a dean for the new Faix Pas Arts Course. It is expected that Professor Whistlert of the School of Old Museum Pieces and Marriage will get the post.

Regarding the new course, Professor Whistlert said, "It is expected that lectures will be so crowded that only those wearing Lickerbriels Buttons will be admitted."

Voting will take place in the Committee Room of the Parly Plastered Hotel.

There will be a parade across the front campus tomorrow afternoon of Whistlert supporters bearing large banners emblazoned with that intriguing question: "Is Sex Here to Stay?"

Special police will be stationed in front of Simcoe Hall to quell anticipated riots which are expected to occur with adherents of Muddlewhraith, lecturer in the Department of Old Bones and Dinosaur Eggs, who is also running for the position.

When contacted last night, Muddlewhraith stated blandly, "Who cares for share-croppers? There's nothing better than Scotch."

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

The English Handel

Royal Alexandra Theatre

Overlaid with pleasant speeches, dust and royalty, The Great Mr. Handel presents an interesting British contribution to film biography and technical. England, rather wanting in composers, here presents, perhaps not too apparently, another stake to its claim for the cosmopolitan Handel.

From the partly successful operatic period at Heidegger's theatre, to the visionary climax of The Messiah's creation, we are confronted with abundant evidence of court extravagance and of our hero's energy, poverty and ability to swear in German. No compact picture of his entirety as an artist emerges, however. We find Handel beholding angels and ingeniously labouring at his oratorio, interrupted every minute by his good servant Phineas. Though convincingly acted, the latter overdid the serving of supper as well as his own ignorance. Hardly biographical is the contrast of Handel's semi-starvation with his splendid villa and the lavish clothing of his beautiful singer-admirer.

So carefully was the sense of age preserved that after each sombre reverberation of the orchestra we could almost picture a crowd of bats rising into the atmosphere.

However, in spite of all these shortcomings, Mr. Lawson's portrayal of the hero's high spirits and fortitude was humanely acted and the London Philharmonic Orchestra assisted to our fullest expectations.

Big Four Re-Lives . . .

Over the prolonged week-end, king football gained a strangle-hold on the different colleges which, prior to the C.I.A.U. ruling of 1940, comprised the Big Four in intercollegiate circles. The McGill Redmen now sporting a berth in the Quebec Rugby Football Union, gained their first official victory of the present semester by downing Verdun Grads 7-0. The University of Western Ontario Mustangs surprised the east by upsetting H.M.C.S. York by a 20-14 count. Thus the Mustangs remain the only undefeated major football team in the east.

Now from Queen's comes the news that the famed Tricolor swamped a Kingston Army squad by the overwhelming score of 49-0. Army, comprised of former senior stars, outweighed the collegians by the average of twenty pounds.

Varsity, the remaining member of the brotherhood, were not scheduled. Instead, students on this campus were offered an O.R.F.U. game. While this proved exciting in itself, the sport fans have been robbed of that collegiate spirit enjoyed by the populace of the other three camps.

As has been pointed out in no uncertain manner by leading athletic authorities, the season is too far progressed to field a Varsity football aggregation, but now is the time to look into the future for the possibilities of representative teams in other sports. If such enterprises are found to be impossible, it is only in fairness to the student body at large that it be informed of this and the reasons back of such a move. McGill, Western and now Queen's are at it—why not Varsity?

Sport Cleanings . . .

From the Athletic Office comes word that the qualifying examinations for the Toronto Board of Approved Basketball Referees are being held at Central Y on November first and again on the sixth, starting at seven-thirty. All would-be referees are urged to attend as there is a serious shortage of competent officials and "a tidy sum may be earned by those qualifying." Further details may be secured from Mac McCutcheon.

Yesterday's athletic program brought into action all the four teams in group three. The two victorious teams stamped themselves as the contenders for that coveted play-off spot. St. Mike's returned to their winning ways with a 31-0 victory over the luckless Trinity group. Victoria defeated a heavily backed School gang by a 19-8 score. That Vic-St. Mike's game should be something out of the ordinary.

VICTORIA V.C.F.

The Victoria group is beginning its study of the Gospel of John with a discussion of the first chapter today in Jackson Hall at 12:30. Lunches will be available.

was Brahms' Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Handel, a long and difficult piece with great variety in dramatics; but perhaps one might have wished for more diversity of tonal phrasing. Contrast of loud and soft passages was admirably given in Busoni's arrangement of Bach's Chaconne in D minor.

The second more modern group, including Chopin, Medtner, and Liszt's Funeral March, gave further demonstration of her flawless technique.

The songs chosen by Miss Rowe showed her lyrical and artistic voice to great advantage. Mozart's Ah So Lo! and Allerta were very satisfying. Two Hebridean songs, the Eriskey Love Lilt and The Cockle Gatherer, were particularly charming, while Cyril Scott's Blackbird's Song pleased the audience immensely.

Miss Hubicki shows great promise but her musicianship needs further development.

Women

If you missed the St. Hilda's tennis finals this year you've missed, in the opinion of the experts, some of the best feminine tennis to be seen around here in the past few years. Marg. Alexander and D. J. Sanders battled it out again on Friday—this time for the St. Hilda's crown. The final score of 6-3, 6-2 for Marg. was no indication of how the play went, however, for D. J. was pressing all the time and it was only by exerting all her skill and court tactics that the tall bespectacled Saint pulled into the lead.

The tennis season dies hard around here these days—on Wednesday of this week there will be a mixed round robin tennis festival on St. Hilda's courts, with dining and dancing afterwards at Diana's. Brownie Young, U.C. tennis star, thought up the bright idea as a fitting climax to a successful season. Unfortunately, accommodations are limited so if you haven't already got a ticket, gals, you'll just have to sit at home and sigh and resolve to get there early next year.

Basketball begins formally tonight with a trio of games to be played up at O.C.E. from 6:30 to 9:30. Bring along your pals and come on up to cheer for your team.

The baseball schedule is certainly having its ups and downs. Meds and U.C. B failed to connect yesterday, and the managers of these two teams must arrange to have the game played off before the end of the week. Play-offs begin next week, gals, so don't delay lest Jack Frost catch us napping again this year. St. Mike's and P.H.E. B are to play at Trinity Field this coming Saturday at 12:30 p.m.

We are sorry but we've promised to deliver this scathing reprimand to St. Mike's and Vic—St. Mike's for failing to have a rep. at the baseball meeting away back when and consequently lousing up the works right now; and Vic for failing to elect a bowling rep, thus effectively crippling Polly Maltz' tournament until said individual is forthcoming. That's not quite cricket, don't you know!

ISS Compared To Red Cross In Its Global Activities

Plans for Winter Drives Discussed and Action Committees Appointed to Deal With Their Organization

PUBLICITY IMPORTANT

"Publicity" was the topic of discussion last night at the meeting of the International Student Service Committee. Chairman Gordon Stulberg, introducing new committee members, outlined the history of the organization, which had its roots in the devastation of the last war.

"Today, I.S.S. is probably the only existing movement in the world besides the Red Cross that is active in every section of the globe, in spite of the war," he added. Stulberg then emphasized that every possible method of publicity would be applied in order to impress students, colleges and campus organizations with the necessity of combatting inertia and arousing interest in student comradeship.

"Whilst our fellows in Greece or China are lacking even food and clothing, not to speak of academic facilities, we cannot be bound by over-polite niceties from stating soberly that we are out to collect money," he concluded.

Some of the aspects of the I.S.S. campaign were then discussed:

Special I.S.S. novelties, similar to last year's Skit Nite, as well as committee participation in campus entertainments, were promised for the coming winter drives. For this aim several action committees, especially for organizing these drives and for publicity, have been formed. According to Ulrich Loevenhart, publicity member, the committee sections are now organized.

Joan Corbett, organizer of the campus committee, told the audience that faculties of both men and women were being approached for spreading international student information in their midst. Also the Alumni Federation was expected to provide support.

June Wrong, secretary, expressed satisfaction that almost every group on the campus was represented. "We realize that phrases like 'Urgency,' 'Student Fellowship' or 'Financial Aid' might grow monotonous; yet, how else can the need for help to our war-stricken fellow-students be conveyed?" she asked.

William Wickenden Guest at Dinner

Engineers will gather in the Great Hall at Hart House tomorrow night for their fifty-fifth Annual School Dinner. The main guest speaker of the evening will be Wm. E. Wickenden, President of the Chase School of Applied Science.

The guests will include Dr. H. J. Cody, Dean C. R. Young of S.P.S., Dr. Sidney Smith, Dean G. Sosens of Forestry, and Dean S. Beattie of Arts. The Toronto Branch of the Engineering Institute of Canada will be represented by Prof. C. F. Morrison; Will Hogg will represent the Junior Panel of the Engineering Alumni, while the Head of the Engineering Alumni will send Milt Hastings. For the Board of Governors of the University, Lt.-Col. Phillips and Mr. R. A. Bryce will be present.

Also included at the head tables will be: Mr. M. J. Aykrow, president of the Association of Professional Engineers of the Province of Ontario; Majors Tate and Duncan of the Engineering wings of the C.O.T.C.; John Wilford, president of the Medical Society; R. J. Murray, president of the Dental Students' Parliament; Bob Bell, president of the U.C. Lit.; Bob Russell, president of the V.C.U.; and T. E. Downey, president of S.A.C. Mr. R. A. Hughes will come from the Queen's campus to represent the Engineers of that university.

President Wickenden's topic is expected to be in keeping with his own special interests, those of engineering education. He was past-president of the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education, and won the Lamme Medal for his outstanding contributions in this field.

Record Hour

The record programme, held daily in the Women's Common Room at U.C., is open to the men and women of every college and faculty.

Today's programme: Chamberlaines—Chaconne and Rondó. Liszt—Les Preludes. Warlock—Capriccio Suite. Beethoven—Piano Concerto No. 4.

Health Education Stressed by Meds

Post-war health education was discussed at the first student meeting of The Medical Arts and Letters Club held last night at Wymillwood.

George Lewis, president of the Medical Athletic Association, congratulated the club on its proposed programme of student nights. "This idea," he said, "should promote discussion because students will not accept the word of one of their body as final."

In outlining the need for broader physical health education, Lewis pointed out that though physical development is necessary, the mental, social and spiritual sides must not be neglected. Physical training alone is not enough, though it gives efficient response to stimuli and has been fully developed in the totalitarian states.

We need an understanding of our bodily activities and a knowledge of the necessity for and the value of our exercises. The medical profession, he concluded, should take a greater interest in a programme of physical education.

Joe Feyerer outlined health plans in other countries and regretted the passive attitude toward sports in Canada. Here we find many spectators, but regrettably few taking an active part in any programme.

Doug Rae pointed out that while men on the campus have all the facilities of Hart House there are too few similar centres for the University women and the rest of the population.

"More university-trained men should be available for directing health programmes throughout the country," he said. "What is the use of spending 25 years training a mind if the body will not see it through?"

Varsity Grad Killed In Action In France

Lieutenant Sydney John Moulder, U.C. 479, was killed in action in France on July 18, according to word received from his wife, the former Elaine Barry.

Lieutenant Moulder was commissioned an officer after being in the C.O.T.C. at the University.

He is survived by his wife and daughter, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Moulder, and two brothers.

U.C. First Year To Hold Elections

First Year University College elections of course representatives will be held today in the Junior Common Room at 4:00 p.m., Alan Foster, first year president, announced today.

Miss Catherine Wier, W.U.A. fresher president, added that the elections would secure representatives in each course of the first year to assist the 478 executive in the organization of fresh activity.

The executive has planned a programme of literary and social activities closely integrated with the programme of the Lit. and the W.U.A.

Dr. James, McGill Named For Board

Dr. F. Cyril James, Principal and Vice-Chancellor of McGill University, has been named to the University Advisory Board, it was announced recently by Hon. Humphrey Mitchell, Minister of Labour. Dr. James is taking the place of Dr. H. J. Cody, retiring President of the University of Toronto.

The Board, which is under the chairmanship of Arthur MacNamara, Deputy Minister of Labour, was formed in 1943 to advise the Ministry of Labour on matters affecting students and staffs of Canadian universities in wartime.

Dr. Sidney Smith, President of University College, is vice-chairman of the Board and H. W. Lea, director of the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel,

Australian Economy To Be Discussed

"Australian Economy at War" will be discussed by Prof. D. B. Copeland, economic adviser to the Australian Commonwealth, next Monday at 5 p.m. in the Economics Building.

Active in the direction of Australia's economic policy during the depression, Dr. Copeland was professor of Commerce at the University of Melbourne. He received his Doctor's degree from Harvard. Australian Trade Policy and Australian Marketing Problems are among his published works.

What About It Western?

The following is the content of a telegram sent yesterday in answer to the challenge made by The Western Gazette, that their girls were of higher calibre, pulchritudinally speaking, than any other co-eds on any campus in the world:

"Editor of the Western Gazette, University of Western Ontario, London, Ont.

"Understand you are choosing most beautiful Canadian co-ed from women on your campus. Didn't know you had women or a campus down there in the corn belt. We condescend to notice this challenge to the fair reputation of Canadian womanhood. Naturally we can surpass anything Western U. does. In this matter will trounce Western as usual. Stop. Three thousand lovely co-eds to choose from. How can we lose? Watch The Varsity to see if you can match our pulchritude.

A. Siegel
Social Director
University College."

To quote their own article which appeared in part in The Varsity last week: "the most beautiful girls in the world pass through Western's portals." Such is their claim. Are they justified? Will we take this sitting down? If we do stand up, will we show them up? Is there any question about it? Just keep your ears and eyes open for the answers to these questions.

'Business Dress For Campus' Defeated By S.P.S. Debaters

Dr. Salter Speaks At V.C.F. Meeting

Doing God's work is like studying for university examinations, Dr. A. Salter, Dean of the American Bible Institute, said yesterday while speaking before the noon-hour Varsity Christian Fellowship meeting at the Academy of Medicine.

"The novelty of spreading God's word wears off as with beginning to study school work," Dr. Salter said. "But the test comes when the glamour has gone and, as it were, the 'slugging' is hard. In both matters perseverance is necessary."

Dr. Salter, speaking to more than 20 students, urged them to keep before their minds the need for moral values, saying, "we must learn not to tread on others in order that we may thereby lift ourselves up."

The idealist, he said, and "the man of the earth, earthy," both are endowed with their own wills, but both meet equally through a true belief in God.

"I have known many people who say that the Cross of God is heavy," he continued, "when actually their crosses are of their own making."

Dr. Salter was introduced by Edgar Peet, V. Medicine, and Douglas Delzil, president of the group, thanked the speaker on behalf of the members.

Senate Member, Dr. Kenner, Dies

Dr. H. R. H. Kenner, 76, member of the Senate of the University of Toronto, died in Peterborough Monday after an illness of several months. He retired a year ago last June as headmaster of Peterborough Collegiate.

Dr. Kenner was born in Cornwall, England, and came to Canada 73 years ago. He received his early education in Hamilton and London, Ontario, and in 1893 he graduated from the University of Toronto with honours in Classics. Since that time he was on the staff of Peterborough Collegiate.

In 1936 Dr. Kenner received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from the University of Toronto. He was president of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation, president of Peterborough Canadian Club, vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce, and a director of the Y.M.C.A.

His widow resides in Peterborough, and one son, Hugh, IV History, U.C., is known at the University of Toronto as editor of Torontosis and feature editor of The Varsity.

Annual Skule Auction Offers Strange Animal

Amid cannon fire, music and Tolkies the annual School auction sale will take place today at 1:00 p.m. in front of the little red schoolhouse. The sale heralds the occasion of the 55th Annual School Dinner being held tomorrow night in Hart House.

In bygone days the auction sale was held as a propaganda scheme to stimulate ticket sales for the Dinner. Nowadays tickets to the affair are limited. But tradition has it that the show must go on, for as long as there have been School Dinners there have been auction sales.

It is rumoured that an attempt may be made to auction off a weird specimen which was captured at the beginning

Prime Minister Traces Evolution of Dress, Defining Accepted Male Attire as 'Suit, Shirt, and Tie'

COMFORT STRESSED

An overwhelming majority decided in favour of the opposition at the opening debate of the S.P.S. Debates Club in the Engineering Building yesterday afternoon. The resolution, "Resolved: that business clothes should be worn on the U. of T. campus."

The Prime Minister and leader of the affirmative, Peter Cahn, IV Electrical Engineering, traced the evolution of conventional dress through the ages to the present accepted male attire, which he defined as "suit, shirt, and tie." He stressed the importance of maintaining dignity in conforming to accepted standards and pointed out that "familiarity breeds contempt."

Peregrine Sygne, V Architecture, first speaker for the negative, warned the audience that the opposition was not considering merely freedom of dress but freedom of the individual—the essence of democracy. She condemned the practice of comparing a university with the world of business, and concluded by stating that "business clothes do not make the college student."

The second speaker for the affirmative, Art Jackson, upheld the desirability of maintaining the dignity of an institution that has produced great men. He stated that a university is not a "glorified high school," but a preparation for business life and the standards to which we will be forced to follow to gain success after graduation should be introduced now.

Fred Kalin, IV Civil, second speaker for the opposition, warned against the fallacy of overrating the importance of convention. He cited the example of Mr. Churchill's appearance in Washington in a suit of "glorified overalls," so stressing the desirability of comfort over convention.

In summing up the debate, Prime Minister Cahn said that the controversy now rested as a choice between "elegance and sloppiness, respectability and familiarity, and the hiding of physical defects and freedom of motion."

Worn laboratory gowns and fashionable black "veloches" were exhibited in support of the speakers' convictions in the heated discussion which followed, after which the audience voted in favour of the opposition by rising from their seats.

Bob Singer, III Mech, announced a coming interfaculty debate with Trinity, with the subject, "Resolved, that Arts men have contributed more to the development of civilization than the Science men."

Ministry Among Russian Peasantry Recalled by Dr. A. Salter in Interview

By Frank Rasky

On Sundays they came from 30 miles around.

The Russian peasants, proudly dressed in their best homespun linens, set off from the farms with big chukches of black bread in their leather wallets, jugs of milk hanging from their belts. The women were in their finest embroidered blouses and thick matted skirts.

Then they would all walk barefooted, as was the custom, along the roads, avoiding the Pripiat marshes, and finally arriving in the little village church in Novosel, Ruthenia.

"They were wonderful to preach to," recalled Dr. A. Salter, Dean of the American Bible Institute, as he remembered yesterday how he used to conduct services before the Russian-speaking congregations in Ruthenia, Poland, immediately before the war.

"They crowded into the church and even stood shoulder by shoulder to listen," said Dr. Salter in an interview yesterday after an address before the Med's group of the Varsity Christian Fellowship. "I can remember how the Russians used to listen in the warm room, even though perspiration was streaming on their brow. They were far from atheists—in fact religious almost to the point of fanaticism. After the services they would eat and drink and make the long 30-mile pilgrimage back to their vineyards and farms."

Dr. Salter was speaking of the 450,000 Russians who were under Polish rule, prior to the war days. He was church pastor in Ruthenia for three years and left only in 1938 immediately before the Nazis made their ultimatum. He returned to Canada to become Toronto agent for the European Christian Mission and in 1941 was made Dean of the American Bible Institute.

He has nothing but praise for the Russians in Ruthenia. "The Russians," he says, "were simple-hearted people, open, and deeply religious. Since they lived simple peasant lives, and travelled little, their tastes were plain."

"I did not, of course, preach to them in English. I learned the language of the people; though I wasn't too eloquent. I acquired the essentials. Many of the words are tongue-twisters, but it was important that I knew well one word. That was the word 'Buli'—and that is the word for God."

The minister said he was probably the most zealous reader of the war news in recent weeks, for much of the fighting on the eastern front recently has centred around his former parishes. Only last week he was pleased to see that the Russians had captured Ushval, capital of Ruthenia, the location of his first church.

Though the Soviet Government permits the proletariat to attend the Russian Orthodox Church, Dr. Salter says he also hopes it will see fit to allow evangelical religious freedom for the Ruthenian Russians.

"America seems somehow strangely new. There is something about Europe—something I can't explain—something which the people on this side of the water cannot understand. The easy-going ways of the Russians. The old buildings mellowed with age. The peasant costumes hundreds of years old in their beauty."

"What shall I call it?" he asks. "Maybe it's tradition—I don't know. But then, when the bad things over there are over it will be nice. Yes, it would be nice to see Europe in the spring again."

Canadian Letters

The recent publication of Professor Pratt's new book adds greatly to Canadian literary efforts. It has been well stated in the past that Canadian literature has been a fiction.

The sad tale regarding talent in our country arises from two facts. Canada has been simmering between the fires of England and the United States. Any warmth found in our literary efforts has been carefully derived from the flames of our neighbours or mother country. We have been content to attempt imitation of Sandburg or Chesterton, who represent literature peculiar to their own country.

Economic barriers of publishing costs and low wage rates have almost made Canadian letters impossible. Many authors have been attracted to the States by the decreased cost of printing. Once there, however, they have been swamped by the competition rampant under national encouragement, and have been discouraged from further effort.

There is still a third element which contributes much to our passive realm of letters. The conservative quality of Canadians, themselves, results in the lack of recognition of ability. In the matter of Music and Drama, Toronto audiences are famed for their deficiency in appreciation and spontaneity. If you doubt this fact, compare the broadcasts of any series at Carnegie and Massey Halls.

It has been argued that Canada has nothing to give to literature. We admit that a Canadian scene would not have the smooth sophistication of Fifth Avenue or Sir John's London flat. Such pictures are merely ornaments dictated by the structure of their respective societies. Canada has a social and scenic formation which is typical. The remark of a tourist holidaying in Muskoka still rangles in our minds, "Why, there's enough material here to almost write a book!"

We can never hope to establish a completely Canadian literature. Even Emerson and his group found their beginnings in writings influenced by Kantian philosophers. We can only attempt to assimilate the best from the flames on either side of us and integrate it into writing which will symbolize Canada.

The economic barriers would seem to categorize such talk as idealistic. But only through individual effort can aid arise to relieve our predicament. The University student will play a great role in Canadian arts and letters. A constant production of sound material will have as great an effect as any in the building up of our art, music and drama.

If the universities were to offer a course in dramatics and writing, would spontaneity disappear from the efforts of future actors and authors? It is obvious that any creative ability needs training to elicit its full powers. But we hardly think such a fear justified since any free impulse in Canadian literature is smothered in economic barriers.

POLITICAL FUTURES

An analysis of current election possibilities would seem to indicate that almost any guess that might be made as to the complexion of our next government would be valid, to some extent at least. As far as indications now available show, it's still anybody's fight.

There will certainly be a decrease in the present Liberal majority—and estimates run anywhere from thirty to one hundred seats less. Probably the Liberals will end up with the largest block of seats in the House of Commons, although even that is not definite.

The Liberals are in a difficult situation, even forgetting the really "controversial" issues, chiefly manpower: they are the government which has prosecuted this war, and they are reaping the resentment which has always been built up against any war government. Actually, to state, as one may quite honestly do, that the present government has probably, in most cases, proceeded at least as well as its opponents might have if given the opportunity, is to side-step the issue. Either now, or after the war, the government which ran the war is going to be replaced, chiefly because the voters will want a change.

The other parties of importance, Progressive Conservative and Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, lack the colourful appeal which would make the victory of the one or the other assured. The former is also up against the taunt "Reactionary" and the latter labours under the epithet "Socialistic." Those who are supporting these two minority groups, however, are extremely active, and are idealistic, definitely out for reform. Their strength and their appeal should not be underestimated.

Although it is anybody's show, one may, with great risks, and subject to many possible errors, divide the next parliament as follows:

Liberal.....80-110
Progressive Conservative.....80-100
Cooperative Commonwealth Federation 25-40

The balance will be distributed among "one-province" parties and small groups.

Not the least interesting of these small groups will be that from Quebec, which, report has it may be a thoroughly reactionary, divisive movement, led by ex-Mayor Houde of Montreal. Reports have it that he is carefully laying the network, around the old Bloc Populaire and elsewhere, for a "French Canada for French Canadians" party which will out-Bloc the Bloc Populaire.

We're still far enough away from victory in Europe that anything may happen to alter the above predictions before the election is called. It's still anyone's guess.

"Deck Thyself, My Soul . . ."

Convocation Hall

This University is particularly fortunate in having as its official University Organist, Dr. Healey Willan, Mus.D., F.R.C.O., who is well-known here and across Canada as composer and teacher. The first recital of the thirty-second season was given Monday afternoon in Convocation Hall.

Built in 1911-12 by Casavant Frères of St. Hyacinthe, the organ was remodelled and improved in 1929 when a new console was provided and several additional stops installed. The organ now contains eighty speaking stops and five thousand pipes.

An interesting programme, whose scope encompassed three centuries, opened with Bach's famous "Great C Minor" Prelude and Fugue. Written in the Weimar period, this work is distinctive for its simple, compact themes and a development no longer striving for effect.

Three Chorale-Preludes, written on a similar theme, "Deck thyself, my soul, with gladness," showed three entirely different treatments. The first Came the dawn. And not only that, but it got light, too. A super de luxe 478 model—"freshie" to y'all—came tripping across the campus. Tripping? Huh! She fell—into the arms of a nearby engineer. After apologies, names and phone numbers were exchanged, and she continued on her way.

"Ah," she breathed with an ecstatic sigh, "this building is U.C. The follies are coming along soon. I'll make like Cleopatra in the rotunda. I mean, in the rotunda I'll make like . . . oh, well!"

She did. But A. (for Airborne) Seagull was not around, so after posing patiently for several minutes she drifted on to her lecture.

"Hmmm," she hummed, "I'm sure room four used to be here. But this would seem to be . . ."

She opened the door and peered cautiously around.

"A poolroom!" she gasped. "Maybe we're starting our field work in Applied Physics."

She walked in, and was promptly thrown out by an athletic soul named Pesty Smartin.

Our freshie made her way to the rotunda.

"Tearful little earful, aren't you?" murmured a passing professor.

The rotunda was in a hubbub. Skulmen were talking to Medsmen—civilly. P. & H.E. students were giving U.C. freshmen demonstrations in jiu-jitsu. Dr. Kidney Myth was playing boogie on a piano which had mysteriously appeared in his office.

WHY? Suddenly one brighter-than-usual student hollered: "Last night was HALLOWE'EN."

A rasping laugh was heard, accompanied with, "Do you want to know what's wrong?"

"YES," shouted everyone, "but who are you?"

"I am the Hallowe'en cat—Mrs. Champus' favourite brother, the kitten's favourite uncle. Everybody loves me. Last night I was sitting down at the Press teaching the kitten to drink aspericokes when the Hallowe'en spirit hit me."

He chuckled reflectively. "I jumped into my Maxwell and careened around the front campus."

FLASHBACK—Zoom! Swish! Here comes Simeoe Hall. There it goes. "Gadzooks!" said Dr. Scotch 'n Sody, "air conditioning at last!"

"We-ell," continued the Cat, "there were some Skulmen on the corner. They didn't have the strength to walk to the poolroom so they draped themselves over my limousine. The fog lifted, and Hart House loomed in sight."

"I've got an idea," breathed an engineer, alcoholically "Let's move the poolroom to U.C. Hart House shows signs of becoming co-ed—the lights are gone, see—and, anyway, I'm afraid of the dark!"

"We had a whee of a time," burbled the Cat, "but now it's got to end. I've finished my Hallowe'en spirits. The spell is lifted. The campus will return to normal."

And he was right. Seagull re-appeared at his accustomed stand in the rotunda, carrying a pumpkin head. The Skulmen and Medsmen stopped speaking,

Andrews Sisters Sing For Toronto

Bombshells of Boogie-woogie! The Andrews Sisters, Patty, La Verne and Maxine, gave Toronto music lovers a real, honest-to-goodness Broadway performance at the Maple Leaf Gardens Monday night. In fact, one might say, they were extremely versatile in changing from the classical to their very own characteristic style.

Patty, centre of the musical trio, acted as master of ceremonies. The Sisters appropriately started off with "The Boogie-woogie Bugle Boy," followed by such selections as "Don't Fence Me In," "Tura-Lura-Lu" and "Down in the Valley." As a finale to the show, they offered a medley of past hits which had put them on the road to fame.

Off-stage, the Andrews Sisters appeared as vivacious and wholesome as they are portrayed on the screen and radio.

Thomas Richner, as supporting artist, gave a brilliant piano performance of "Toccata" by Ravel and Chopin's "Nocturne in F sharp major." As an encore, he played his own composition, an ultra-modern rendition, demonstrative of his genius.

Backstage, he told of his series of concerts at Town Hall in New York. He is at present working on his Ph.D. at Columbia University.

Included on the programme were Marie Nash, mezzo-soprano, and Mary Becker, violinist, with Lud Flato and his orchestra, all from New York.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

was unmistakably Bach, with a gentle-flowing rhythmic and figurative accompaniment derived from the various lines of the chorale, ornamented with numerous trills and turns. The second by Brahms was considerably shorter and an excellent example of three-part writing. The last, by Karg-Elert, in the form of an improvisation, was richly ornamented with characteristic chromatic harmonies. These three, composed roughly a century apart, illustrate the growth of harmony away from rigid contrapuntal rules.

A relatively modern Russian Sonata in A Minor by Borovskiy, while not containing any great depth of expression, was effective. Eastern in flavour, its lyrical themes are haunting and develop logically with the opening clarion theme linking the three movements. Two dance movements, Bourree by Krebs and Gavotte by J. C. Bach, were expressive of the days when dancing was a courtly and graceful accomplishment.

The recital was concluded with one of Dr. Willan's own compositions, Epilogue, written in 1908. A Pageant of St. Alban's was the inspiration for this short, but dramatic, work. Of rugged character throughout, there are two contrasting themes which develop along the general lines of sonata form.

The next recital of this series will be given by Dr. Willan on November 13, when the programme will be devoted to the works of J. S. Bach. It is hoped that more students will avail themselves of this opportunity.

Mt. Allison University Gives Grant to Fund

Sackville, N.B.—(CUP)—A special meeting of the Student Union of Mount Allison University was held last week to reconsider the matter of a $1,000 grant to the University Fund, after a previous bill covering this had been thrown out as being unconstitutional because of lack of sufficient pre-meeting notice concerning the issue.

The motion was made once again, and after a ballot vote, was passed with a large majority. It was pointed out at the meeting that Mount Allison had been the originator of such funds on Canadian camp.

Much as we hate to admit it, sophos do occasionally make a few mistakes. Take the whimsical gal who was in Murrays the other day. She carefully removed the cellophane from a package of cigarettes, rolled it up, and—zing! it flew through the air.

Five pairs of eyes followed it. Down! down! down! it zoomed. There was a splash. It had landed in a nearby cup of coffee.

An irate gentleman turned around and, unlike the judge in the City Hall court, didn't flip it back. He complained to the management.

The management arrived and said to the shrinking culprit: "There's something mysterious about those cigarettes."

"Oh really?"

"Yes," she continued, "the cellophane wafted into that man's coffee."

And with the air of one who had done her duty, she stalked away making nasty comments about liberal education.

Excuses for late-comers are getting more original. Instead of the old "I slept in," or "somebody hid my shoes," or "tie-up in traffic, sir," there was a muttered "woman drivers" from a lad who got to his 8.30 at 9.00. Despite the prof's coaxing he would say no more.

Curiously mounted. At the end of the lecture his friends gathered round and heard this tale:

"On the street car there was a woman driver. Wotta babe! Rush hour didn't mean a thing to her. We were passing a factory and there was a character hanging out of a window. So she stood on the brakes and opened the doors."

"Hiya, Joe," she hollered.

"Hiya" the character bellowed back.

"Are you coming down to Bill's to-night?"

"Yeh!"

"Have you got a case?"

"Yeh!"

"Fine, I'll be seeing you."

"Okay."

"She shut the doors and the car started off."

"Yeh!"

"Yep," said the late-comer, "I hate women drivers."

Contrary to popular opinion, there are a few professors who are not absent.

Professor Frye Lectures At Writers Meeting

The opening supper meeting of the Writers Group of the Women's Literary Society of Victoria College was held last night at Wynilwood. Fran Zieman, group leader, introduced Professor H. Frye, of the Department of English, who read the literary contributions of the members and led a critical discussion of them. Light verse, the form which most of the contributions took, must be technically perfect, Mr. Frye said. He criticized the violation of normal order of prose and of metrical schemes.

All women undergraduates of Victoria belong to the Women's Literary Society, which is subdivided into four groups—Arts, Writers, Music and French-Canadian. The purpose of the Society is to stimulate an interest in the Arts, and to encourage creative work on the part of the student.

Peace And Post-War Plans New Lecture Series Topic

History Department Aim to Connect History of International Organization with Peace Problems

OUTSTANDING LECTURERS

A series of public lectures entitled "Peace Making and World Order," concerning international and post-war plans, will be given by the Department of Modern History on Wednesday afternoons at 4:30 p.m. in Room 8, University College.

The aim of the series, according to Dr. R. Flenley of the History Department, is to try and link up the history of international organization with any such efforts of the future, showing the individual problems of securing peace.

Professor Edgar Melniss, of the Department of History, will deliver the first lecture on Wednesday, November 8. This will be a general historical background for the series entitled "Precedents for Peacemaking: 1815 and 1919."

Following this, Mr. Harold Butler, of the British Embassy in Washington, will address the public on "The League of Nations."

Mr. Butler was the head of the International Labour Office, and is the author of the book "Lost Peace" which attempts to show why we lost the last war.

As a member of the British Embassy in Washington he has been greatly concerned with the possibilities of correcting the mistakes made in peace settlements in the last war. His interests lie in reviving and revising the League of Nations so that the ideals and aims of the League may be fulfilled.

"Great Britain and World Organization" will be the topic of Professor David Owen, of Harvard University, on November 22.

On November 29 the lecture of Professor Bartlett Brechne, of Columbia University, will deal with the "United States and World Organization." He was a colleague of Professor Underhill and Professor Flenley in the Department of History and is now a professor at Columbia University. His lecture will concern "Canada and World Organization" and will be delivered December 6.

"The Judicial Basis of Peace," the last of this historical series of public lectures, will take place on December 13. Professor F. C. Auld, of the Department

Boat Trip Described By Prof. Maquis At French Club

The first meeting of the University College French Club was held last night at the Women's Union. President Ainslee Campbell conducted the meeting with the assistance of Doug Creighton, treasurer, and Kurt Levy, secretary. The other members of the executive are Doug Lloyd, vice-president, and Peggy Garnham, the social convener.

The meeting was opened with the singing of the Marseillaise. J. V. Jacobson, from the Young Men's Section of the Board of Trade, presented two French pictures: "Ottawa et ses Rivières," in colour, and "Chants Populaires," an animation of the songs including "Après de ma Blonde."

In the nomination of the year representatives, Harold Atin was chosen for first year and Emma Lou McKinnon for second year.

Miss Campbell announced the date for the production of the "Bourgeois Gentilhomme" would be November 9. The play will take place in the Hart House Theatre. A large attendance is expected.

Professor Paul A. Maquis, French lecturer at U.C., held a discourse on Quebec. He described a boat trip on the Saguenay River through the province. As the boat reached a place Professor Maquis would give the whole history of the area. Professor Maquis himself is from Quebec, and studied in Montreal. Through some well-selected words he made his audience see the territory.

The audience included Professors Jeanneret, Finch, Macdonald, Andison, and Humphries.

Refreshments were served and a dance ended the meeting.

of Law, will discuss the legal problems involved in international relations.

"The speakers are all men of wide experience and all, with the exception of Dr. Butler, professional historians," stated Dr. Flenley.

It is the hope of the History Department that these lectures will indicate to the public the common ground between the different nations concerned with the problems of securing peace.

Vic Music Club Holds Rehearsal For Pinafore

Full rehearsal of the Victoria College Music Club production of "H.M.S. Pinafore" was held last night in Alumni Hall at the College. This year's show is to have full orchestra accompaniment and will be presented on Friday evening, December 8, and Saturday afternoon and evening, December 9.

This season a new scheme has been adopted: understudies are being trained for the leading roles, and will play the Saturday matinee performance. Tickets go on sale at the V.C.U. office on November 22, but mail orders will be accepted after November 15.

Mr. Godfrey Ridout, of the C.B.C., in charge of musical direction of the production, said that putting on a show in two months was not exactly fun, but he was well pleased with the way it was progressing.

The entire company has already rehearsed stage directions, and Mr. Geoffrey Hatton, of the Eaton Operatic Society, who is stage manager, declared: "We shall have a very good show, fully up to the high standard set by previous Victoria Music Clubs."

Male leads are to be sung by Doug Thomas, Doug Spry, Charles Boyd, Bill Hossack, Helge Hongisto, and Roy Watson. Lois Bone, Betty Capes and Gwen Mihalco will take the feminine leading roles.

Mary Irwin is handling costume supervision, and Jack McAllister is in charge of stage properties.

Record Hour

The record hour programme, held daily from 3:45 to 5:00 in the Women's Common Room at U.C., is open to the men and women of every college and faculty. Today's programme: Mozart—Symphony No. 39 (E flat major).

Haydn—Quartet in F.
Chopin—Two Waltzes (A flat major and C sharp minor).
Mendelssohn—Violin Concerto.

Skule Personal Trivia Auctioned Off To Gullible Public Predominantly Male

By Mike O'Brien

There was a small meeting of about a hundred or so held under the auspices of the Engineering Society yesterday at around one o'clock. The meeting was a very informal one, the object being to get rid of some rather personal trivia which had been reposing in the Skule these many years.

The affair, characterized by a singular lack of the weaker sex, got going under the capable Sarge Smith, who introduced the auctioneer, M. Don Gibson, one of the leaders in his line. What a line!

The first article to go before the public was a U.C. flag, of faded red hue, more like pink than anything else. Your reporter was unable to see the article in question; all he heard was Gibson vehemently refusing to wear the flag. "I gotta sell this here thing, not try it for size," he said, with considerable sagacity.

The next article to be put on the block was a combination board, mixing table, and picture frame. This brought considerable comment from the bidders and went for the grand total of ten cents.

The proverbial Tangent McSlinder was introduced to the assembly, and had a few choice articles of chit-chat to dispense with. His mathematics are simply too good!

A pleasant interlude came when the auctioneer took time out to read a message from the "Votes for the Ladies" Committee, urging more mutual understanding of their problem. The message was well received.

The crowning event of the sale was

Outline Sale Plan For Follies Tickets In U.C. Rotunda

At a rehearsal of the U.C. Follies chorus, due for presentation on Friday, November 17, which was held last night in the Women's Union, Bob Marjoribanks, secretary-treasurer of the U.C. Men's Lit, made known the system by which tickets would be available to the students for this year's production.

"Well, this is it in a nutshell," he said. "Lists will be put up in the U.C. Rotunda on Friday, November 3, to be signed by those University College students and graduates desirous of tickets. These tickets will remain there until Wednesday, November 8, at 4:30 p.m. Now those that have signed the list, and only those, will pick up their tickets between Thursday, November 9, and Saturday, November 11, at noon in the U.C. Lit. Office in the Junior Common Room, and if they fail to do this their tickets will be sold to the general public."

"As for the general public," he went on, "meaning the other University faculties, of course, they will be able to buy their tickets, not having to sign any lists, starting Thursday, November 9, at 11:30 a.m. at the Hart House Box Office. U.C. students will be given no preference at that time, so it would be advisable for them to sign their lists as soon as possible. Also, since we are abiding by the rule of 'first come, first served,' it would be just as advisable for outside students to get their tickets early, in order that none would be left out at the end."

Alec Siegel, director of the U.C. Follies Revue, went into some more technical data regarding the actual production. "There are going to be three complete showings in the one evening," he said. "The first will be at 7:30, the second at 9:00, and the final show will be at 10:00; the tickets to each of these performances will be of different colours in order to avoid confusion."

Dr. Smith to Open Debating Season For U.C. Session

The University College Parliament will open the first session of the 12th Parliament in the Junior Common Room tomorrow at 4 p.m., it was announced last night.

The Parliament will be called into session by the Governor-General, Dr. Sidney Smith. This ritual will be followed by the introduction of a government bill "to enable Germany to re-assume her role as a major world power in the post-war period." The speakers for the Government will be the Right Honourable Paul Reeske and the Honourable M. Bean. The Opposition speakers will be the Right Honourable Robert Bell and the Honourable Ralph Shepherd.

Ben Orenstein, Literary Director of the Men's Lit, explained that he and the committee were endeavouring to make the Parliament a more serious institution this year and that they hoped the Freshman Year in particular would turn out for this first meeting and the many others to follow.

"In order to achieve this aim, we have asked a former Speaker of the House, Mr. Bryant Kassirer, to return this year in the same capacity. Those undergraduates who have debated within the past two years will remember Bryant as a brilliant orator in his own right, and a Speaker well qualified to keep the House in order and yet maintain that unique air of intellectual wit that has always been a feature of the U.C. Parliament."

As part of the opening ceremony, they intend to revive, for this special session, the old U.C. tradition of summoning members of the College to meeting by ringing the ancient "Lit. bell."

NOTICE

Every University student is asked to make sure, at once, that his correct Toronto address and telephone number are entered upon his registration card in the office of the University Registrar, Simcoe Hall, and in the office of his College Registrar or Faculty Secretary. The University Directory is now being prepared for the press and it is of the greatest importance that all addresses and telephone numbers be correct.

Law School Library Open Nights For Hard Working Students

By Reg Herman

Investigation of the lights beaming forth far into the night from the Law Library has brought out startling facts.

Miss J. A. Macbeth, chief librarian of the Law Library, explained that it was due to the increased pressure brought to bear by more than the accustomed number of third and fourth year students coming down at night that necessitated bringing in one of the staff to keep the Law Library open till 10:00 p.m. Since the first night last week an average of 50 books a night has been taken out by the increasingly industrious students.

Interviewed on the question, a third year man had this to say: "This year is so tough I've even had to give up women. They have hired a little boy to drag up those heavy volumes for the librarians upstairs after 5 o'clock. Sorry, I've got to dash back into the library now to look up ninety or so cases for Commercial Law."

One member of the Law Club executive, discovered in the Hart House poolroom, declared: "Aside from some

TWO RECORDS BROKEN

By Mickey Michasiv

Varsity Blues' track team walked off with the honours in the only extracurricular meet this semester as the Ontario Agricultural College from Guelph went down to defeat in the events held at Varsity Stadium yesterday afternoon. The meet was billed as an intramural event, as O.A.C. is a faculty in the federation of the University of Toronto.

The Blues walked off with all the first places in the fourteen events and through this means ran up their score to the extent of 96-25.

Two intercollegiate records were broken during the day. In the high jump, School's Bill Kerr maintained his keen edge by smashing the mark he chalked up in the correspondence meet with McGill shorts weeks ago. At that time he tied the official record set by R. O. Brett in 1940. Yesterday's mark of 5'11 1/4" will be substituted for the 5'10" now in the records.

In the two mile grind, James lowered the mark set by Frank Fordyce a year ago when the event was first originated. Fordyce's time of 11 minutes 5/10 seconds was whittled down to 10:43.6.

Cam Burgess was again the big gun of the local stars by leading them with three firsts and a second. Fordyce was credited with two red ribbons.

The Aggies tried hard but were never in the threatening class although a number of good performances were given. Raymond, with two second places, was the most consistent participant, although Graham showed class in the mile.

The complete results of the events are as follows:

120 Low Hurdles—15.1. 1, Burgess, Varsity; 2, Giles, Varsity; 3, Rawlings, O.A.C.
Discus—111'4 1/2". 1, Orr, Varsity;
2, Good, O.A.C.; 3, Thompson, O.A.C.
100 Yards—10.3. 1, Burgess, Varsity;
2, Buckley, Varsity; 3, Mathews, Varsity.
880 Yards—2:04.5. 1, Fordyce, Varsity; 2, Moulth, Varsity; 3, Harvey, O.A.C.
High Jump—5'11 1/4". 1, Kerr, Varsity;
2, Jackes, Varsity; 3, Thornton, Varsity.
220 Yards—23.7. 1, Lewis, Varsity;
2, Raymond, O.A.C.; 3, Johnson, O.A.C.
Mile—5. 1, Fordyce, Varsity; 2, Graham, Varsity.

Increased Demand For Physios Necessitates Shortening of Classes

"The course in Physiotherapy is one of the most popular for women at the University, although it is comparable in difficulty to any science course," said the Extension Offices when interviewed by The Varsity with regard to the therapy course. Since it is under the direction of the Department of University Extension and is a diploma course, the students are not registered with any college; but many of the girls take an active part in campus life—playing interfaculty games and also contributing to the musical and dramatic activities.

Last year the class president received the gold key presented by the S.A.C. for her work with the University Symphony Orchestra.

About 1930 the first training school for Canadian Physiotherapists was opened at the University of Toronto. Not until last fall did another university offer the course, when a branch was opened at McGill University. The first classes graduated approximately 11 students but the outbreak of war saw a great increase in enrolment and in graduates.

The present faculty comprises about 115 students, 40 of whom are expected to graduate in February. In Canada all recognized therapists are members of the Canadian Physiotherapy Association and to qualify as members the girls must undergo an intensive training which in normal times requires two years at University and an eight months' period of internship.

The demand for Physiotherapists in both civilian and military hospitals has greatly exceeded the supply, and to meet this increased need the graduating classes of both '44 and '45 have been accelerated. At the present time graduates are serving in the three branches of the services in England, Sicily, North Africa, Italy, France and wherever British and Canadian hospital units have gone.

The demand for Physiotherapists will not end with the war, for the part they will have to play in rehabilitation is already being clearly outlined in the plans of the Department of Pensions and National Health.

It is the fond dream of the students that in the not-too-distant future there will be a building available on the campus for the combined use of Occupational and Physiotherapy students and that the girls will once again have the opportunity of enjoying University residence life.

Money

At the present time the University of Toronto is attempting to raise $5,000,000 of a $7,000,000 budget by private subscription for the post-war expansion of the University. Last summer a booklet prepared by the Bursar, in collaboration with the University Solicitor, and published under the authority of the Board of Governors, was distributed to all graduates. This brochure outlined the proposed expansion projects, the commendable work now being done by special departments of the University, and the necessity of raising the needed money by private subscription. This marked the first public appeal for money on the part of the University.

Speaking at the Halifax Acadia Club at Halifax, N.S., last week, Dr. F. W. Patterson, the president of Acadia University, mooted the following scheme to raise money for the University.

"Suppose there are 150 graduates (normal times) of the University each year. Suppose that their actual earning powers should extend over a period of 40 years of graduation. Suppose that each one should make a contribution of $10 to Alma Mater each year.

"That would mean that in the run of a year, 6,000 people would be paying $60,000 into the university's coffers. Does this sound fantastic? At the present rates of interest it would take TWO MILLION dollars to produce that amount of money."

Dr. Patterson was, of course, referring to his own school in the figures he quoted. Acadia University, situated in Wolfville, N.S., is a relatively small Canadian university and is not state endowed as is the University of Toronto. In the case of a similar scheme being proposed at Toronto, the amount of money that it would be theoretically possible to raise would easily run into the millions.

The above scheme has not the sanction of any university or student authority, but it is felt that it contains much to be considered.

Victory Shares

On Monday, October 23, the Seventh Victory Loan Drive was opened across Canada, and one and all were urged and exhorted to invest in Canada's war effort and in the eventual victory. In this almost universal appeal, university students are more or less disregarded in view of the fact that the majority of them cannot figure on a financial surplus on the year's budget. There are, however, a few fortunate students who can and do invest in Victory Bonds.

At the S.A.C. Office in Hart House, application forms for the purchase of Victory Bonds can be secured. Individual students who do intend to buy bonds should remember that by doing so through the S.A.C., rather than through their local banks or canvassers, they add their purchase to the University quota.

A letter signed by Dr. Cody is now being circulated among the academic and administrative staff of the University, urging them to place their orders with the Victory Loan canvassers. The purchases of this part of the University, of course, make up the bulk of the quota for the institution. A relatively high figure for the University helps it to maintain its reputation during these difficult war years.

The efforts of students who have made sacrifices in order to buy Victory Bonds are commendable, and those students for whom it is utterly impossible to even consider this are reminded that War Savings Stamps and Certificates are available through the Students' Administrative Council, and that we are all expected to do our part and lend as much as we can.

The Blue Book

For the past few weeks there has appeared on the front page of The Varsity a box notice which requests that every University student make sure, at once, that his correct Toronto address and telephone number are entered upon his registration card down at the Registrar's Office in Simcoe Hall. The thoughtlessness of students who have disregarded this appeal has held up publication of that campus best-seller, The University Directory. This blue-bound volume which appears every fall as soon as all addresses and telephone numbers have been checked is indispensable to anyone connected with the University. Many a lonely Schoolman without a date a half-hour before a big dance has been saved from the horrible fate of doing lab. reports by this useful directory. The many busy office staffs about the University are saved much time and trouble by the existence of this book.

Remember that you are expected to check your card whether you have moved or not since you made it out. Drop in at the Registrar's Office today and get this little task done. Every day that you procrastinate delays the publication of the Directory.

ART-MUSIC Drama

Strings With Dignity

Conservatory Concert Hall

Lovers of Chamber music were enthusiastic about the concert given yesterday afternoon in the Conservatory Concert Hall by the Parlow String Quartet—Katherine Parlow, first violin; Samuel Hersenboern, second violin; Robert Warburton, viola; and Isaac Mamott, cello. This enthusiasm was aroused by the excellence of the playing, the equal of which has not been heard in Toronto for a long time.

The programme consisted of two works, the Haydn "Lark" Quartet and the Quartet in A minor by Fritz Kreisler. The Haydn was played with an appropriate spirit of good humour. The craftsmanship of Haydn is so perfect that we take it for granted, seldom stopping to consider the consummate skill which he displays. It is a tribute to the players to say that in this performance of the quartet the audience was aware only of the beauty of the music and not of the painstaking care that must have gone into its composition.

Those who know Kreisler only from his smaller violin pieces were surprised at the scope of his quartet. While the composer is out of his element when writing in this larger form, he is so well acquainted with the capabilities of stringed instruments that the quartet is at all times interesting.

The work might better have been scored for a larger group of instruments since there is no particular merit in making a quartet sound like a string orchestra. The performance of the quartet was sympathetic and as exact as one could expect for so fluid a score. The composer instructs that the finale be played "waggishly." However, the Parlow String Quartet managed to preserve its dignity without loss of effect.

The high standard of performance in the first of

Editor's Note—

Owing to the absence of a book-review column in The Varsity, we hereby present a plagiaristic review of the current popular novel, "Cranium Uncovered" or "Adrift in Oblivion", by Pearly Teethe. In a frantic endeavor to secure copies, students mobbed the Press yesterday. Statistics on the sales of the first edition show that students in the Department of Old Bones and Dinosaur Eggs have bought 73.9% of first copies. The remaining 1.5% of this total has been snaffled by Producer A. Seagull who is planning to adapt the story (abridged) for a production in Hart House later this month.

In an effort to increase sales yet further, The School of Partial Science, at their annual auction sale, managed to get rid of 3,576 1/4 copies to an enthusiastic crowd.

Dr. Buddin Glatz said that he expected the book to be a profound influence on the minds and morals (if any) of the campus populace.

Speaking OF SPORT

(Editor's Note: The following letter was one of a number received as the direct result of the column printed on Tuesday. On investigation, it has been disclosed that the writer is enrolled in graduate studies. He received his degrees at Saskatchewan, where he found time to play centre on the Huskies, that university's intercollegiate team.)

The Varsity.
Sir,

Your editorial referring to inter-varsity sports will, I hope, bring a storm of enthusiasm. Far too long the students of this university have remained dormant in this respect. We have acceded to the ruling on inter-varsity sports and have not taken any steps to review or repeal the order.

In my opinion the time has come to do both. In Western Canada Saskatchewan and Alberta universities discontinued play for the Hardy trophy (symbolic of western rugby supremacy) for only one year, 1940, and even that year Saskatchewan, at least, played exhibition games. University of British Columbia has fielded a rugby team every year to my knowledge, playing exhibition game with the Senior team Vancouver Grizzlies in 1941, and with United States teams since that time.

And now we find McGill, Queen's and Western playing exhibition and league games in the east. Toronto's team has not appeared and the honour of the Blue and White is at stake. We, as students, must investigate this problem.

The common reason given for the discontinuation of Varsity sports is, of course, the war and the limited travel facilities. The validity of this argument has faded. Western Canadian teams have continued to play; the O.R.F.U. have never stopped playing; the N.H.L. continues to function, and the Guelph Aggies continue to travel to Toronto. If these organizations can send teams from one town to another, why can't we?

Another reason given is that public opinion would not stand for it.

Public opinion is a broad field. I humbly submit to the authorities that 60 per cent of the Torontonians are barely conscious of the Universities' existence and that of the remaining 40 per cent one half would either welcome or at least tolerate the return of sports to our University. If the people, through the Government, have decided to admit students to the universities, I do not see any objection to letting these students lead a normal existence. I further submit that if, instead of trying to hide our University from the public we were to advertise our diverse activities, both in sports, dramatics, debating, research, and in academic fields, our reputation would be better.

I sincerely hope that the enthusiasm shown on the part of the students in favour of the return of intercollegiate sports will encourage all leaders of sports in all faculties, to take a firm stand. The hockey season is at hand; let us have those blue and white sweaters in our arena this winter.

Sincerely yours,

ALBERT W. JOHNSON

By Helen Stewart

We witnessed about every brand of basketball imaginable at O.C.E. last night. Some of the plays might have been considered outstanding, but on the whole it was rather disappointing to see such loose basketball. If we can count on the first games being so poor, in the ensuing encounters we expect to see the teams buckle down and show us some real basketball.

U.C. freshies chalked up their first win to the tune of 45-5 against Meds-S.P.S. freshies. As the score indicates, the girls from the Royal College carried the play. Their opponents' defence was not up to par, thus allowing the ball to slip through their lines. What the Meds-S.P.S. team lacked in technique they made up in enthusiasm.

The second tilt of the evening saw Meds-S.P.S. the victors by a score of 35-6 over U.C. Jrs. U.C. presented a balanced team, but Meds-S.P.S. were spurred on by their two stars, Mary Barnett and Natalie Staron. The passing was rather careless and the shooting in spots was wild, but both teams played a clean type of basketball.

Vic A netted a win as they downed St. Hilda Srs. 15-6 in what was the closest game of the night. Both teams played a tight game but the Scarlet and Gold had the edge in the play. Their interception was good and their passing was better synchronized than the Saints; but they were decidedly hampered by their opponents' strong guard line whose zone defence was quite commendable. Gloria Carpenter, the Saints' guard, who hails from Trinidad, seemed quite at ease as she played her first basketball game. Vic's forward line, led by Mary Coleman, set up some nice plays, ably supported by their defence. Other stars were Joan Campbell for Vic, and Barb. Wilson for the Saints. Nurses battled their way to a 20-12 win over St. Hilda Jrs. in the last fray. The play in the first half was quite bunched with the Saints having the edge, but Nurses asserted themselves in the last half to emerge as the victors. At times there was some nice teamwork but both teams spoiled it by rushing the play. Too many penalties were the result. Julie Murray of the Saints and Marg. Armon of the Nurses were the outstanding players for their teams.

Before signing off, we want to pass on a few notes to you regarding the basketball schedule. All games that were slated to be played on Thursday, November 2, are now to be played on Monday, November 6, as listed in yesterday's Varsity, so will the teams concerned please note the change. The schedule in yesterday's Varsity is the new one, so all other preceding schedules are invalid.

THEY HAD ENDURED POVERTY in Scotland. Many had died of typhus during long weeks at sea. All through the winter at Churchill on Hudson Bay they suffered from cold and hunger. In April they trudged 150 miles across the snow to York Factory—thence up the Nelson River, Lake Winnipeg and the Red River to the Selkirk Settlement where Winnipeg now stands.

It was a whole year's journey for this little band of Selkirk Settlers—a year of constant hardships. But these hardy pioneers were willing to undergo any hardships to reach a land where their effort and initiative could earn its reward, and where they could carve out a happy future for themselves and their children.

That is the heritage they have handed down to us. That is what we are defending in this second World War.

Victory Bonds are the means by which each Canadian can share in the war effort of his own free will. That is why Canadians have given their wholehearted support to each Victory Loan. That is why we will support the Seventh Victory Loan to the limit of our ability.

he skittered down the corridor in Blimpo Hall. "All of the $7.59 that we had in the cash box is gone. If only I hadn't taken it out of my sock yesterday, before I sent it to the Varsity Foot Laundry! How can we go on?"

Registrar Funnell appeared to console his friend. Handing him a large sized Kleenex, Funnell cried, "Alas, alack. O foul deed! Woe, woe is we."

After this brilliant and scintillating piece of monologue the two unhappy men went to meet the newsmen who waited on the steps of Blimpo Hall.

"A clue, a clue!" shrieked a burly figure bursting through the crowd. It was none other than the Blimpo Hall janitor, Flippant Dody.

"Last night, after I had finished sweeping the floor I caught a glimpse of a weird figure lurking among the shadows. He looked familiar. Ahhh, I know. Ernest of Meds."

Suddenly a shot rang out and the janitor clutched desperately at his throat. To the horror of all assembled, Dody began to vanish before their very eyes, slowly from the toes upwards.

"Quick, quick, who was it?" shouted Funnell as the vanishment extended up to the amazed man's mouth.

"Odessa," Dody gasped hoarsely.

"Odessa who?" urged Wigginside, breathlessly.

"Odessa Littleman" he gargled and then disappeared into oblivion.

And so we leave Dody among the Boojums. Who will be the next victim of the Mawruch of Oblivion? Who is Odessa? Will Wigginside get his sock back from the laundry? Be sure and read next week's episode of this gripping tale.

Progressive Trend In Older Russia Is Pares Subject

In his fourth lecture on "Contemporary Russia," in Convocation Hall yesterday, Sir Bernard Pares outlined the political and economic changes in Russia during the reign of Alexander III prior to the Russo-Japanese War. He declared that the object of these lectures was "to invite the public as such to come to a course of lectures really designed for students."

First, Sir Bernard explained the circumstances under which Alexander III mounted the throne after his father's assassination as "a soldier mounts the breach," in the words of Rombaud. Then he described the various advisers that Alexander had throughout his regime; the law officer Plichev, an ex-liberal but an opportunist, who restored order and prevented further revolutionary demonstrations; William I of Germany, who stood for reaction; and Pobedonostev, a man of integrity if not of liberal ideas.

According to Sir Bernard, Alexander had few liberal-minded ministers except Ignatyev, the statesman; Bunge, who abolished the poll tax; and Witte, who steered Russia very successfully through the financial changes in the nineteenth century. Other than these, he said that Russia was ruled by an autocratic policy that attempted to repeal in practice the reforms of Alexander II. "Never did they dare to pass a first-rate measure of reaction by the ordinary means of legislation through which the reforms had passed. That is the ugliest side of this period," he affirmed.

Marx's "Capital" was translated into Russian in 1872 but, Sir Bernard said, "few people could read or write, but those few people were of a very high standard of scholarship. In fact the standards of achievement for a doctor's degree at Moscow University was higher than those of Cambridge." In 1898 the Marxist party was founded but in 1903 it split into two factions, he continued, one for co-operation with the constitution and the other, under Lenin, opposed it.

Throughout the lecture Sir Bernard Pares emphasized the great liberal movement in Russia, very reminiscent of the movement in England but for one important difference. In England, he explained, social justice was taken for granted; in Russia it was just being established. He described how the "Zemstvo" or local county councils did their best to introduce health and labour measures although the national government prevented them from uniting.

This, he concluded, was the situation in Russia before the Russo-Japanese War, and he closed by quoting Plichev, who was one of the ministers at the time, "The country is on the eve of revolution and the only thing to stop it is a small victorious war."

Follies Chorine Answers Western

This is Miss Peggy Miller, Moderns I. She was chosen by Mr. Pasquale D'Angelo to prove to himself and the public generally that our Canadian girls are more beautiful than most American girls, which now appears to be perfectly obvious. In coinciding with Western's recent challenge, there is no doubt as to what their reactions will be "down there in the corn belt."

She Has Never Passed Thru' Western Portals

Pasquale D'Angelo, noted photographer, in trying to prove that Canadian girls are as beautiful, if not more beautiful, than American girls, chose Miss Peggy Miller, Moderns I, a U.C. Follies Revue chorine, as his example. The result of this can be viewed above.

This is our answer to the challenge of The Western Gazette. When they said that "the most beautiful girls in the world pass through Western's portals," they obviously had no conception of what the other universities had to offer. This ill-considered boast is evidence of their provincial outlook which underestimates the high standard of beauty beyond the trammels of Western's campus.

In an interview, Mr. D'Angelo revealed that "in such a search, one must secure a model with youthful vitality and yet she must have that certain glamour which is so prevalent in American models. And so, the logical place to come for any potential models in our community would naturally be the widely known U.C. Follies Revue chorus line."

Long Island Guest At All-U Service

The Varsity Christian Fellowship is conducting its All-University Worship Service this Sunday evening at 7:00 p.m. in Knox College Chapel, when Dr. Frank E. Gaebel, of Long Island, New York, will be the guest speaker. Charles Hay, past president of the Fellowship, will conduct the service and Harold Wardell, III S.P.S., will sing several numbers.

Dr. Gaebel, who is headmaster of Stony Brook School, Long Island, is a minister in the reformed Episcopal Church and a graduate of New York and Harvard Universities. Staying at Toronto until next Saturday, Dr. Gaebel will conduct meetings in Room 25 of the Engineering Building at 12:30 every day next week.

Dr. Gaebel has also won renown as a pianist, having appeared on the Red and Blue networks of the N.B.C.

McGill Censured By C.C.F. Leader

Referring to the policy practised by McGill University of barring Japanese students from the University and requiring a higher scholastic standing from Jewish students, M. J. Coldwell, leader of the C.C.F. party, stated before a group of Montreal teachers and university students that any university which practised such a policy "forfeits its right to be called a university."

"Any university that does that kind of thing would forfeit its right to receive such educational grants as would be made under a C.C.F. government," he said.

The statement followed an address by Mr. Coldwell in which he outlined the needs of Canadian education, and was made in answer to a question from the floor. He also stated in response to a question from the audience that the C.C.F. preferred publicly-owned universities and added that he hoped the time would come when universities would be free to all those who could benefit from university education.

S.C.M. Programme Outlined Tonight

The Student Christian Movement of University College will introduce their programme for this year's activities in an open house to be held in the Women's Union, Friday evening, at 8 p.m.

Tom Harris, treasurer of the S.C.M. on the campus, referred to the interest and value of the U.C. S.C.M. in past years and expressed the desire that there would be added numbers of first-year students who would take an active part in the work of the S.C.M.

Although U.C. students primarily are invited, others are also welcome. Added features of the evening will be games, skits and other entertainment with refreshments. All university students are invited to membership in the S.C.M.

Engineer's Post-War Role Defined At School Dinner

Undergraduate Meeting

There will be a meeting today in The Varsity news office at 3:45 of all those interested in doing work for "The Undergraduate" U.C. publication.

Moscow's Attack Refuted by Prof.

Prof. Watson Kirkconnell, of McMaster University, yesterday refuted the attack made upon him by the Moscow newspaper Trud, describing him as a "satellite of Goebbels" and a "protector of Ukrainian Fascists in Canada."

The four-column article was the work of a well-known Soviet writer, David Zaslavsky. It asserted that Prof. Kirkconnell, a member of the Council of National Minorities in the Department of National Military Services, has used his position to spread anti-Soviet propaganda and that Kirkconnell's book, "The Seven Pillars of Freedom," had been intended for Berlin publication by Goebbels.

Kirkconnell described these statements as a fantastic lie from beginning to end. His statement follows:

"I have always opposed Fascism. No Canadian has more fully and publicly denounced and exposed Hitler and Goebbels during the past 10 years, and my books are as strongly opposed to Fascism as to Communism. The charge that my latest book was intended for Berlin publication is therefore utterly absurd."

"Moreover, my documentation on Communism and the Soviet system is based on Communist and Soviet publications and does not draw on Nazi sources in a single sentence."

Show Bird Movies At R.C.I. Lecture

An all-colour moving film of birds and other wild-life by Mr. John H. Storer, A.B. (Harvard), of Waltham, Mass., will be featured by the Royal Canadian Institute in a public lecture to be held on Saturday, Nov. 5, in Convocation Hall. The film is entitled "Wings West of Florida" and includes pictures of birds in their natural environment from Florida, Texas, Washington State and Maine.

For several years Mr. Storer has used these motion pictures to aid in illustrating the need for the conservation of natural resources.

Four Year Course in Pharmacy Is Committee's Tentative Proposal

Dean R. O. Hurst, of the College of Pharmacy, gave the following statement to The Varsity yesterday, concerning tentative plans for a change in the Pharmacy course. It was emphasized, however, that these are just the committee's proposals, and that they must be adopted by the Governing Board of the College before they come into force.

"Pharmacy is contemplating a four-year plan which will lead to the degree of Bachelor of Science in Pharmacy. The plan under consideration by the committee of the College will not require apprenticeship as a prerequisite, but if a graduate desires to own or operate a pharmacy an internship of about a year will be required in order that the operator may become familiar with the practical applications."

"The suggested four-year course will be broad, including English, Economics, Psychology, etc. and more inclusive in Science than the present course."

Dr. Wickenden says Recon-

War

PRES. CODY PRESENT

At the fifty-fifth annual School Dinner last night in the Great Hall of Hart House, Dr. W. E. Wickenden, the guest speaker of the evening, defined and illustrated the role and responsibilities of the engineer in the post-war world.

In opening his address, Dr. Wickenden, of the Case School of Applied Science, said that there are many problems for the engineer in the post-war world, of which reconversion will be the chief and most pressing, and that economic collapse in the reconversion would be catastrophic. For this problem, Canada will be better equipped in engineering brains and skill than the United States because in Canada engineering education has been safeguarded, he said. Furthermore, he continued, the engineers of the States' forces will remain in uniform long after their untrained comrades have returned to their civilian pursuits.

Another problem of immediate interest will be that of disposing of the high stocks of war material now piled up in ordnance depots of the fighting nations, said the speaker. In the long list of problems will be the rapid drain on our natural resources, which must be solved in the research laboratories of the technician, upon whom the public is placing the greatest trust, he said.

Dr. Wickenden discussed the need for equilibrium between our present cultural and industrial economies, and the need to change from our present "grab and run" policy to that of producing more wealth in order to provide a better life for all.

"Ignorance remains the greatest barrier between the common man and his greatest good," stated the speaker, referring to the introspective attitude of certain political and governmental groups who squelch advancement by their actions and their speech.

Concluding his remarks, the speaker noted a new sense of heightened responsibility for the engineer of tomorrow, "new levels of literacy, new levels of technical endeavour," and that only by common participation in disposing of these problems could the engineer overcome them.

President H. J. Cody, in reply to a toast to Varsity, expressed his gratitude to the faculty in general for its co-operation with him in his tenure of office as president, which he will shortly vacate.

NOTICE

Every University student is asked to make sure, at once, that his correct Toronto address and telephone number are entered upon his registration card in the office of the University Registrar, Simcoe Hall, and in the office of his College Registrar or Faculty Secretary. The University Directory is now being prepared for the press and it is of the greatest importance that all addresses and telephone numbers be correct.

Minority Group

Our society is composed of a number of small groups. They are participation groups and are the basis of our social life. For it is only in these groups that man can grow and mature, and it is through these groups that our society is integrated. They provide a meeting place where problems are solved and where we come to a better understanding of each other. A university is one of these groups. It is more than an education—it is a way of life.

Most of us are members of some group, where we find people who are congenial and where we go and unburden our worries and talk in a congenial atmosphere. We feel that the groups to which we belong give us satisfaction, and as a result are apt to think they are superior to all other groups. This idea of superiority breeds with it a feeling of the right to exclude others from our group.

Let us think for a moment of these others who are excluded from our groups. They have no place to go where they can find friends and enjoy good fellowship and secure comfort—for the groups that we participate in act as a buffer to the outside world—they are our haven of refuge—the members are our friends and they will protect us. However, those excluded have no refuge—they are forced to bear the brunt of the world alone. We are members of groups responsible for this: for the frustration of individuals who are not permitted entrance to our exclusive groups.

The walls we set up around our groups prevent intruders, they also cut us off from outside communication and thus the groups become narrow and stereotyped and their purpose becomes ossified. Superiority leads to a stagnation of mind and an unwillingness to assume new responsibilities and a failure to provide an adequate social mechanism for the expression of opinion.

Thus when McGill University refuses admission to Japanese students and discriminates against their participation in University life—there that University has lost its purpose—it is no longer an institution of the community because it is detrimental to the very democratic principles for which a University stands, namely, tolerance, co-operation, and equality of opportunity.

School Dinner

One of the most enjoyable evenings we have spent for quite some time was last night at the School Dinner held in Hart House. The organization and timing of the entire programme was such that would put many other faculty and college arrangements to shame. It is doubtful whether any other campus entertainment has had its whole evening's programme actually blueprinted and conducted with minute timing by the master of ceremonies.

Efficiently run off without a hitch, the dinner contained a varied programme of excellent speeches and musical comedy. The main speaker of the evening, Dr. Wickenden, presented a rather forceful point of view concerning the post-war economic policy of the engineering student. According to Dr. Wickenden, free enterprise must be the keynote of economic security. Such a stand offers one possible solution to the status of the school men in the post-war world. As Dr. Wickenden pointed out, the majority of graduates within fifteen years will hold executive positions. Consequently students should decide now their policy with regard to free enterprise or planned economy. Conditions after the declaration of peace will be such that will necessitate a great amount of organization. Dr. Wickenden has suggested that the government will encourage free enterprise by financial backing. But he also upheld Sweden as a prototype of governmental organization. The question is a timely and serious one. S.P.S. men will undoubtedly play a major role in the ultimate conclusions reached concerning our future economic and industrial policy.

Correspondence

(Editor's Note.—It is not the custom of The Varsity to publish unsigned letters; however, we feel obliged to publish the following letter which has just arrived.)

H.M.C.S.—

Dear Sir:

Appropos of the article "Smarten Up Men" in the issue of Monday, Oct. 16, I wish to tell you that Mr. W. J. McNeil's statement, that is "after being in this uniform which is like a male corset three times a week, it is a relief to get into something comfortable." Made me mad, to put it mildly. What would Mr. McNeil do, I wonder, if he had to wear the same male corset day in and day out, weeks on end, sleep in the thing, work in it? It is about time that some of those so-called students realized that there is a war on, and that wearing a uniform three nights a week is little enough sacrifice of a man's life in any service. I am a Varsity grad myself and it is most depressing to find that the people we are fighting for have the time to quibble about insignificant detail. I agree with Josephine Barwash that if a man cannot be in uniform, he can at least be neat. You may not think this poor attempt is worth printing, but believe me it is the opinion of all of us in uniform, especially those of us in the R.C.N. who don't think our uniform is in the least like a corset. Would be amuse Mr. McNeil very much if I said that we are all terribly proud of it?

ART MUSIC Drama

Kaleidoscope

Eaton Auditorium

Expressing herself in one of the most difficult of dramatic mediums, Ruth Draper, monologist, opened the Musical Arts Series at the Eaton Auditorium last night with a kaleidoscope of character studies which exploited the wide range of her talent to the full.

Now, the soignée sophisticate, now the toothless harsh-voiced crone, Miss Draper's vocal inflections, mannerisms, and even her posture all contributed to the reality of her witty monologues.

If the first section of the programme was rather stiff and routine, it was more than amply compensated for by the latter half, which began with the riotous, near-slapstick sketch of "A Class in Greek Poise." Aside from the fun which Miss Draper and the audience seemed to share in this portrait, we noticed especially her beautifully expressive hands and arms which were exhibited here to their best advantage.

Only in the last two selections on the varied programme did the artist resort to the use of costume props and special lighting effects. Although, as she admitted to the audience in an explanatory aside, she is not noted for her singing voice, Miss Draper presented three of her own impressions of Middle European Folk Songs which were naively charming.

The final selection of the programme, "A Scottish Immigrant at Elts Island," a tender mixture of pathos and kindly humour which she executed with just the right degree of burr, brought to a close an evening in which not a member of the capacity audience could have failed to recognize in Miss Draper's studies one of their neighbours, a close friend or even himself.

BARBARA HOOD

RALSTON QUELLS RIOTS

Ottawa—(BURP)—The formation of a new branch of the Department of National Defence was announced late last night by Sir Walter Hut-Sut Ralston. The new branch, to be known as the Society for Protection of Science-men (i.e., loose variety), was created as a result of a series of campus riots emanating from Smitene Hall. It was found that Smitene Hall was the centre of a vicious and pernicious underground network joining similar institutions on the campus such as At. Howler's and Femmesley Hall.

A board of references has been called to deal with the case of the nefarious gangstress, Red-Hot-Mamma Gersufson, reputed to be the ringleader of the gang. "Harp!" was Dody's muffled comment from behind locked doors in an interview with The Varsity.

Professor Birdie Whistletweet of the School of Old Museum Pieces and Marriage has transferred his studies of the sex-life of Kaintucky Billhillies to this campus, as offering brighter fields.

Warden J. Burpin' Lickbreth complacently commented: "I say, if those silly Engineers had only dressed in Eton suits with high collars the way I told 'em to, the girls would have avoided them. They would have retained their Victorian dignity and aloofness."

"I told ya so!" smirked Gilhooley, patting him on the back.

It was difficult to obtain interviews from the Schoolmen who were entrenched in fox-holes behind barricades of electrified green bottles. However, Root-Toot-Zoot-Soot McSliderool in a speech over the short-wave radio said, "Schoolmen can hold their own (what?—Ed. note) regardless, and needless of any governmental interference. Besides, we reiterate—women are unessential. So there!"

The broadcast was broken off abruptly by disgusting noises in the transmitter. EIZA AND LIL EVA

OF SPORT

A Big Game . . .
The Group II rugby game scheduled for the stadium at 4:15 today brings together those two traditional rivals U.C. and Jr. School, and should be one of the best games of the year. These same two teams battled it out a couple of weeks ago with S.P.S. coming from behind in the last quarter with two single points to eke out a 2-1 win. Neither team had any kind of faint resemblance of proper condition among its players for this game and now that both of them claim to be in first-class shape, today's affair should really be worth while seeing.

Jr. School made valiant efforts to strengthen their team to match U.C.'s acquisitions of Colin Graham from Balmy Beach of the O.R.F.U. and Neil Kuhn, an end last year with Oakwood Indians, but could only come up with a dark-horse backfielder named Phil Cardinal. They tried hard to secure the fleet-footed Mr. Murray Jacobs of this year's Indian backfield when this same team withdrew their entry from the O.R.F.U. a week ago. He numbers among School's from this fall but becomes ineligible to play for an intra-mural team after he has played two games up in the higher brackets due to a ruling of the Athletic Directorate, so he has to watch Jr. S.P.S.'s games from the sidelines. What a difference he'd make if he could play! Then there was also a boy by the name of Bill McAnn who used to star with Jarvis C.I., who they tried to lure out of retirement but, though he was willing, strong parental opposition arose at home and kept him off the field. All of which seems to put U.C. one up on School.

Art Staley of U.C. is without doubt the best kicker in the league and it's rather a big task for Jack McReynolds to tackle in endeavouring to match him for hoofing distance. McReynolds got a couple of good kicks away in the Jr. S.P.S.-Jr. Meds game the other day, however, and might prove more of his merit against Staley's terrific left-footed spirals. McReynolds holds a slight edge in the forward-passing department over Staley and Co. in the U.C. backfield with his accurate bullet-like heaves.

Smith of Jr. School is one of the hardest-hitting plungers in the circuit but he'll get some real opposition from U.C.'s Cranham. Cranham is a very shifty boy who handles the ball well either side, using a straight-arm to its best advantage. Salzman pits his wits against Volpe of S.P.S. in the quarter-backing role this afternoon with Volpe also handling the placements. Wade kicks them for U.C. with able left-footed assistance from Cranham.

Jr. School should have a slight advantage along the line. Their snap, insides, and middles are all good men. Their ends, Boyd, Hennessy, Todd, and McClymont, are reputed to be the best four that any team in the league can boast. U.C.'s line is rather light with Rosen at snap, Wade at end, and Kuhn at middle being their best men. I don't know why we bother because we're always wrong, anyway, but we think U.C. is the better team and will cop this afternoon's game. But get up there and see what goes on for yourselves at 4:15.

Since the schedule changes are in effect as of yesterday, there are no basketball games to discuss and we can move on to other things. Before we do, however, there is one thing regarding the write-up of games that we must make clear. There is never anything personal in the criticisms given in this column, nor do we intentionally censure any one team. Last night, for example, there were four games, consequently eight teams playing, and the write-ups must be graded so that the best games received the best write-up, and so on down the line. Certain freshes, we were told, felt that they should have gotten more space perhaps than they did, but when viewed from this angle we are sure they will see the light.

Don't worry, gals—play the same kind of heads-up basketball that you did in your first and you'll get the write-ups. Remember our article on smoking a while back? Well, it seems that others share the same sentiments, b'gosh. For those of you who are interested in such things, there is a "Sports College of the Air" which is broadcasted over CBL at 12:15 on Saturdays. This Saturday a prominent coach from the Winnipeg Physical Education Association is going to speak on "Smoking and the Athlete." Although this programme is mainly for boys there are many of us who get out of breath on a basketball floor, so it behooves us to find out what to do about it, n'es-ce pas?

At long last someone has found out what was wrong with the Lillian Massey swimming pool. It seems that there has been a gas or water leakage under the tiles of the pool floor and every time they drained the thing to clean it out THE FLOOR BUCKLED—and then they would have to fill it up with water to hold it down, and so on ad nauseum. So now the floor has been torn up and retiled and swimming will soon commence without the pool's going up in smoke.

For the girls still playing baseball, let us remind you that the play-off is begin next week and consequently time is a-wasting and there are still some preliminary games to be played off.

Sr. School Whips Meds In Closely Fought Game

S.P.S. Scores in First Quarter:
Rarely Enforced Rule Dis-heartens Meds Who Didn't

VERY CLOSE GAME

By A. Cowan

Sr. School again showed the fans why they are considered the top team in interfaculty rugby by whipping Sr. Meds 15-0 yesterday. Play in the game was much closer than the score would seem to indicate. All S.P.S. points came as the result of Medical miscues which placed them in scoring positions. Their fifteen point total came from two converted touches, one from a pass and one from a pass interception, and a placement kick. The turning point in the game came early in the second quarter when Meds were down three points and had possession on the School five but lost the ball on the seldom-enforced rule which allows only twenty seconds per down to put the ball into motion. This tough break seemed to take the heart out of the Meds and they never seriously threatened the School goal line again.

S.P.S. started the scoring early in the first quarter when they picked up a loose ball on the Meds 25-yard line, here they made yards on two plunges to bring the ball in close enough to allow Clare to boot a placement for a three point score. Meds came to life in the second quarter when Lewis and Probert made nice catches on long passes on successive downs to carry the ball to the School 8-yard line. Two plunges were held for little gain, but the medics spent too long planning their last down strategy and lost the ball. On the next play Uppr made a nice

Wycliffe, S.P.S.
Fail to Score

Wycliffe and S.P.S. II fought to a scoreless deadlock yesterday on the back campus in a fast-moving soccer game. Both teams had plenty of chances but neither could capitalize on them. The theologians were favoured to win, but could do no better than hold a slim edge in the play at several points in the game. In the first half Bourne, Lyall and Harris of Wycliffe performed some very neat passing plays, made possible by heady work on their part. Emms, Morrison, and Klassen played well for School but ran up against a tight Wycliffe defence system when they got into scoring position from their attacks. Both goalkeepers played very well in the final half.

twenty-five yard run to take the ball out of danger. Shortly after this, a bad snap by Meds gave the Schoolmen the ball on Meds' 40. Vern Booth made yards on an end run and then Clare passed to Bus Booth across the line for a major score. Clare's convert made the half-time score 9-0 for School.

Play was confined to the Meds' end of the field for the rest of the game. There was no scoring in the third quarter and pass interceptions by Shaw and MacMichael of School broke up the only Meds' threats. In the final period Major intercepted another Meds' pass and lateralled to Uppr who ran the remaining distance for a touchdown. Clare again converted to make the score 15-0. The rest of the game found Meds trying unsuccessfully to break through the School defence.

Any Time's SHOPPING TIME

FASHIONS With a story to tell, a story of good honest common sense, those are the Evangeline mix or match fashions which you can mix in assorted combinations or match up to a solid one way colour scheme. It's smart to get the habit of mix or match fashions because it's an easy way to keep a costume looking new—just add a new splash of colour here or there, juggle around with a different component part, and presto! it's a new set-up. Remember, the Evangeline Shops are the largest chain of Women's Specialty Shops in Ontario. Your nearest branch—751 Yonge, just above Bloor.

NOW IS THE TIME for all good women to come to the aid of their complexion; now, when furnaces are nervously burning out the air's humidity and taking their toll of your good complexion at the same time. Du Barry Face Cream is made for the specific purpose of repairing damage done sun-dried or furnace-dried complexions, while going after dirt which ordinary washing does not dislodge. Its purpose, (a) to clean deep-logged dirt, (b) to leave the complexion moist and dewy-soft as a flower petal.

EVERY WELL-STOCKED bathroom cabinet has its bottle of liniment, and since liniment is not a purchase you make every day or every week it might as well be the best liniment in the first place, because that bottle will last a long time. Sloan's has the reputation of being at the top of the class among liniments; stronger, quicker acting, more effective. And remember, for muscular soreness after an orgy of distinguishing yourself as an athlete, there's nothing more soothing than a good rub of Sloan's.

THE PURCHASING OF a fur coat is an important transaction and should be given ample consideration. One of the most pleasant shops in the world in which to discuss that purchase is B. F. Springer's where the showrooms are among the most beautiful fur salons in Canada, and where you have the pick of Canada's top-notch fur fashions from which to make your choice. Fifty-six Bloor Street West, just east of Bay, is fast becoming a Varsity rendezvous as more and more of the College crowd learn the advantages of shopping for quality-plus. Prices are conservative, too, at Springer's.

TWELVE-NINETY-FIVE TO SIXTEEN-NINETY-FIVE is all you need pay, on Fairweather's Main Floor, for one of those all-purpose shirtwaist or bow style wool dresses in plain or fluffy cashmere materials... they're naturals for the classroom, and will do you proud all through the evening if it's informal. They come in sizes 11 to 18 and 12 to 20, in "wake up and live" colours, coral, orchid, powder blue, aqua, natural, green. Fairweather's Main Floor is an interesting shopping spot, where clothes with price appeal have been assembled from the large Fairweather stock.

IT'S CONSIDERED definitely bad business around these parts to let a cut or a burn or a boil become infected. Mecca Ointment, price only 25 cents and worth plenty more, is soothing, healing. It's the "family doctor" away from home, ready to take the hazard out of playing-field skid-burns; grand, too, for a cold if it gets the better of you (apply to chest with a mustard poultice). Ship a tin of Mecca into your next parcel to a soldier, sailor or airman. Soldiers like to carry Mecca in their kits to insure against personal discomforts such as sore feet, abrasions, athlete's foot, etc.

BRIGHT THINGS are finding their way to Northway's Third Floor FASHIONLAND, where the fashion story is told in coats, dresses, millinery, all in fashion's best accents. Northway's coats are coming in for their usual share of attention right now, and the goodly array of classroom and date dresses is a close runner-up. There are numbers for every gal with that "get there" look in her eye, because Northway's is up in pretty strongly for fashions with a way of doing things for a career girl. Just say "FASHIONLAND" to the elevator operator.

hither and yon

with frank rasky

It happened at High Park. The C.O.T.C. warriors were on Saturday military deployment manoeuvres. Which is a fancy name that means the boys were on hands and knees, looking silly as anything, and under the officers' orders pretending they were crawling forward in battle.

Along came a couple of wandering juvenile delinquents, two tough kids as tho' from out of a Steig cartoon, who looked at these proceedings with unabated curiosity.

"Who are dose guys?" asked one small fry. "Soldiers?"

"Nah," said the other young mobster. "Any dope can see dey're from dah university."

The first s.f. watched the cadets snaking about the grass.

"Yah," he murmured reflectively. "I thought dah boys looked educated."

SHADES OF VELUT ARBOR
AEVO.

It happened at dear old Vic College. Now as everybody knows, the girls who eat in residences at Vic sit at tables under different profs.

So it happened the other day that a freshe was eating at that table where a French prof presides, and, naturally, the students had to speak French during the entire meal.

In the strain that came from trying to recall her dim high school French, this babe, to her dismay, upset a glass of water.

Turning to the prof, the worried freshe stammered brokenly, "Madame, je fais de l'eau sur la table."

WHAT, NOT HOUSE-BROKEN YET?

It happened on the front campus. One division of the C.O.T.C. were up for inspection, and the second looie, brisk, polished, and in bad temper, walked up and down the lines, squinting assiduously at each brass button and haircut, yelling like anything, as seconds looies will, at each indication of poor deportment.

So he finally stopped before one University Private Hargrove, whose great coat, to put it mildly, was somewhat wrinkled.

Not putting his remarks mildly, though, the looie smiled craftily and asked, "You saw, I trust, the orders in The Varsity which advised that great coats would be worn?"

"Yessir," replied the Hargrove, quivering.

"Well," snapped the looie, "when they said great coats would be worn, they didn't mean, I assure you, that the coats should be that worn."

OH TO BE MIFTED IN MUFT!

It happens in a certain college every day. In this anonymous college it so happens that the prof's offices have no phones. So it's pretty hard, of course, for the secretary's office to see whenever a certain prof is in or not.

With one prof, though, they have little trouble, for his study is on the first floor just above the sec's office. Whenever anybody phones and asks for this prof, the sec says, "Hold the line, please," leans over from her chair, and raps on the water pipe leading to the ceiling.

If a responsive rap sounds from above, the sec turns back to the phone and says: "Yes, he's in."
DIT DA DIT DIT DA.

It happens every other day between the Economics Building and Baldwin House.

This note is to inform you that this wartime luxury spending is really hitting a new high. Yes, it seems that a group of male students, lazy ones, now all chip in eight cents and go from lectures at the E.B. mentioned above to B.H. mentioned above, all via a taxi cab.

INVASIONS COST MORE MONEY.

It happened at the Undertakers' Ball. One of The Varsity staffers tells us the story of a very young freshe who finally managed to get herself invited to this swanky function.

Well, during the usual rugcutting excursions, this babe's partner on exchange asked her age, a practice which all wise males know is very foolish.

Though foolish, this male undertaker was fascinatingly mature, and our little freshe wasn't going to let on, of course, that she was merely seventeen. So appropriately fluttering her eyelids, this coy number whispers, "Why, Don, (that's not his name) why, Don, I'll be 23 next Christmas."

But this undertaker wasn't that foolish. "No listen, kid," he said, also showing he was no gentleman, "I know my bodies better than that."

ET TU BRUTE.

It happened during initiation time. Though maybe a little late now, here's a poem we snaffled from a frosh, wailing bitterly as he recalled those tie-cutting days. The silly poem runs:

I wis I wuz a wittle egg
A settin in a twee
I wis I wuz a wittle egg as wotten as could be
And when some nasty sofmore
Would pounce on me in glee
I'd frow my wotten wittle self
And spatter him with me.
SAVE IT FOR NEXT YEAR,
PAL.

The Youth Commissions Programme

A number of pamphlets have reached the editorial desk of The Varsity outlining some phases of the study programme sponsored by the Canadian Youth Commission, Ontario Committee. These bulletins cover an extremely broad field which includes the titles, "Citizenship," "Post-war Employment," "Education," "Health," "Recreation," "Family Life," and "Religion."

The work of the C.Y.C. is an indication of the growing awareness of the difficult situation which faces young folk today. For five years our young men and women have been torn away from the normal functions of life and thrown into battlefields around the globe. When the world turns once again to peace the problem will not be solved. Perhaps even more serious difficulties will face us here in Canada, among them the terrific problem of readjustment. The programme of the C.Y.C. appears to be an intelligent attempt to guide young people through to a solid and more abundant life. In the words of the C.Y.C. pamphlets themselves, "Youth Makes Tomorrow."

The pamphlet entitled "Religion" outlines a frank approach to one of the thorniest problems facing youth today. And inherent in any discussion of religion in the world today is religion's place in regard to the war. The commission's programme on this subject says: "We hear a great deal nowadays about prayer and the need of Divine assistance felt by those who have found themselves faced with dangers and privations hitherto unthought of. . . . Thinking persons have been asking themselves just where the blame (for war) should be placed; whether we have not been condemning our enemies in a wholesale fashion when perhaps there are a number of grave faults on our side which have been a contributory factor in bringing about the conditions which led to this war. . . . In seeking a solution to these questions, many are considering such problems as the basic justifiability of war. Is this just a war? If so, what elements go to make it so? Is there any justice on the side of the enemy?"

The pamphlet goes on to outline the problem in connection with the various difficulties facing the creation of a free, tolerant world. The splits and divided ideologies which played no small part in preparing the way for the present conflict are still present and only an intelligent, far-sighted plan for the future can overcome bigotry and misunderstanding which might lead to another war.

The programme outlined by the Canadian Youth Commission is somewhat vague, as it is still too young to be a detailed and comprehensive plan for bringing such divergent and widely separated faiths as the Roman Catholic, Judaic, and Protestant around a council table. In order to create understanding and sympathy between our various religious faiths, far more than vague assurances of good will are necessary. There must be clear understanding of the pattern and aims of each religious group by the whole, in order that the youth of today and tomorrow can escape from the bitter hatred and ruthless intolerance which burned down Europe and singed the shores of North America.

Many of the well meaning progressive groups fall into the same pitfall. And, proverbially, the road to hell is paved with good intentions. Despite this danger, however, the youth commission can perform a valuable function to the community in stating the problem clearly to our various ethnic, racial and religious groups and bringing out a broader understanding of the steps necessary for us to create a bright and shining world in which Protestant, Catholic, Jew and Mohammedan can share their differences of opinion by reason rather than by force. It seems evident that the solution to bigotry and hatred lies in education, and if the Canadian Youth Commission can provide honest, unbiased education to the young people of the Dominion it will be fulfilling a function of a value far out of proportion to its cost and labour.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA
A Meal Without Meat Given by Fraser

Hart House Concert

An unbalanced programme—the sin of many musicians—is probably what made the Sunday Evening Concert last night by Agnes Butcher, young Canadian pianist, rather disappointing.

Miss Butcher, who has studied for more than two years in Budapest, Hungary, was probably influenced by that environment when she selected a repertoire dominated by little-known Hungarian composers—Dohnanyi, Bartok, and Poulenc—and as a consequence her programme, apart from a Bach piece, lacked anything profound.

It was as though she had presented a menu of fish, soup and ice cream sundae while forgetting the meat source. A serving of a Beethoven or some other classicist would have made for a more tempting musical meal.

If lacking in discrimination, Miss Butcher made up for it in technical ability. A pupil of the distinguished Viggo Kihl, she has a dexterous if not brilliant command over the keyboard.

She did a handsome, workmanlike job with Bach's Three Part Inventions and particularly with Bella Bartok's Strange Allegro Barbaro. It was rather too bad for the audience though that she chose Franz Liszt's Vallee d'Obermann, a diffuse piece which is difficult to play but which, unfortunately, is equally difficult to listen to. We suspect the pianist chose this one to show off her technical powers rather than to delight the susceptibilities of her listeners.

It was pleasant to hear, on the other hand, four vignettes from Bartok, three of which are rather brittle numbers, the fourth being as light-hearted as its title—From the Diary of a Fly.

She did a nice bit of work with Dohnanyi's Rhapsody No. 4—though there was a little too much thumping with some E flat notes—and she finished the musical with a fitting little encore,

Physics Lecture
Given by Fraser

Dr. C. G. Fraser gave his first lecture in the series on the History of Physics last Saturday at 9:00 a.m. in Room 41 of the MacLennan Laboratories.

He said that all the fundamental machines except the hydraulic press were discovered and used in pre-historic times. The pyramids were built by using the principle of the inclined plane on a tremendous scale.

The advancement of a race or nation, said Dr. Fraser, is allied to its progress in mechanics, although mechanics is not the only criterion.

The second lecture in the series will be on Saturday, Nov. 18, at 9:00 a.m.

Restoration Of Germany Voted In Debates

Germany to be Free
Is Close Decision
In Newman Debate

Speaker Breaks 33-33 Tie to Carry Resolution "That Post-War Germany be a Free and United Nation"

CONFIDENCE VOTE GAINED

"That Post-war Germany be a Free and United Nation" was the resolution carried by a margin of one vote at the first meeting of the Newman Club Debating Society last night. The decision was only reached after the Speaker cast his vote for the affirmative to break a 33-33 tie.

Mike O'Brien, speaking for the Government, began by saying that "We must offer the hand of friendship to Germany, offering her eventually complete freedom and unity, in order to remove from her mind those thoughts which were rampant therein after the last war, the thoughts that she was an underdog among nations, trampled upon by the militaristic heel of the then Allied Nations."

The leader of the Opposition, Bunny Joyce, started by stating that "if the forces of true liberalism receive the military and moral support necessary to the performance of their task during the long period it will require, the nation as a whole may yet work its way into harmony with the rest of Europe."

The second speaker for the affirmative, Ruth O'Shaughnessy, stated: "Freedom is the God-given right of every man, and how can we, who cherish our own freedom so highly, deprive another man or group of it—and so it must be with Germany. The prosperity of Germany will be ensured when the German people all work together under a national government for the betterment of their own state."

Dez Molecki, in rebuttal for the Opposition, said: "Since the Prussian ideal of a Germanic super-race has been the motivating force in Germany's aggression, and Prussian leadership the guiding hand, we feel that Germany should be relieved of Prussianism."

After the meeting was thrown open for discussion, spontaneous appeals were brought forth for both sides. Then the Government asked for a vote of confidence, which they gained.

"Thunder Rock"
Is Guild Choice

Although Alfred Hitchcock and Noel Coward, who were invited by Producer John K. Peck to assist in the direction of the University College Players' Guild production of "Thunder Rock," are unable to come to this campus because of heavy schedules in Hollywood, the play promises to be a successful dramatic event of this season.

Robert Ardrey's play, which had successful runs on Broadway and in London, will be presented at Hart House Theatre on Nov. 23, 24 and 25.

Henry Kreisel, who was a member of the "Thunder Rock" cast when it played in Vienna, will take one of the leading roles. Charmaine King and Mel Breen will also have leading parts.

Several secondary-school dramatic society representatives have been invited to attend rehearsals to glean what they can from these experienced actors. The pre-sale tickets to these groups necessitated holding the production one extra night. Due to the increased demands for tickets the Guild has devised a scheme whereby a certain number will be allotted to each faculty.

Hungry Skulemen Are Well Fed
At Victoria College House Party

By Elizabeth Cleaver

"Who is taking you to the houseparty on the third of November, Clib?" asked a Freshie last week without beating around the proverbial bush back of Amesley Hall, "and could you get me a blind date with a big, strong Skuleman—you know, the kind that turn up at the Vic class parties?"

Time has since fidgeted and the next time we have a chance to eavesdrop, Clib and her man friend plus the Freshie and the big, strong Skuleman are spending intermission in Clib's room, eating apple pie topped with ice-cream.

No one spoke until Clib's man friend stopped being hungry long enough to ask if all the other residences were making a Halloween party of it, too.

"Well," answered Clib as glibly as she could with her mouth half-full of apple pie, "Wynmilwood and Emmanuel are using the same theme although I'm sure their ghosts aren't as well draped over their cats as ours, but of course there's one way to find out what's what."

"I wish I were in Amesley Hall this year," the Freshie dreamed aloud, "because I saw the girls decorating down stairs this afternoon. Over the stairs they spelled out the words 'S.S.' 'Ludos Amigos' in huge letters. I saw the coloured posters in Mexican theme which they fitted into the gilt framed oil paintings in the reception room and Tackberry Library."

"You mean we could crash the other houseparties tonight?" asked the Skuleman, hopefully. "What about Addison House? I hear it's a 'Polar Party'—everything cold but the women. Then there's one house that is illustrating songs on the Hit Parade. Would you like me to attach myself to one of their posters?" asked the big, strong Skuleman.

"What posters?" asked a voice from the doorway, looking at the piece of orange cardboard in the hands of the b.s.s. (big, strong Skuleman, in case you don't remember). "Have some of the decorations fallen down?"

"Well, no," retorted the Freshie as fast as she could without thinking, "that's just Jack."

"Mark that down for a 'Hither,' glibbed Clib to her man friend, "a let's leave now for Wynmilwood. Perhaps we'll be there in time for food again."

Films & Artwork
Illustrate Lecture

The contribution of the Chinese philosophers to the Classical Age was discussed by Bishop White last Friday afternoon at the Museum Theatre in continuation of his series of lectures on China.

Illustrating his theme with the aid of a technicolour film, Bishop White emphasized the accomplishments of Confucius in the development of religious ideals and the proper structure of family and political life.

Decorating the sides of the stage were reproductions of Chinese writings engraved on smooth limestone, made to last for centuries. It was advantageous for the folk to have these inspiring works on display. Furthermore, scholars who wished to obtain copies of these writings directly from the limestone could do so with a special kind of substance which stamped the lettering on to their own paper.

Professor Chang-tsu, Chinese artist, was shown in the film drawing three water-colour pictures. They consisted of a kneeling Chinese lady wrought in pastel shades, a delicate portrayal of some fluffy chickens, and a scene of white and pink blossoms strewn on branches. Professor Chang-tsu has recently been touring Canada and the United States, and is now working in Western Canada.

There will be a news lecture this morning at 12:30 in Room 37 U.C. for all those interested in writing for The Varsity. The lecture will be delivered by Mr. Rex Wilson of the Globe and Mail.

Gabelein to Speak
At Conference

This week's Monday-to-Friday conferences of the Varsity Christian Fellowship are to present Dr. Frank E. Gabelein, who will speak each day from 12:30 to 1:30 in Room 25 of the Engineering Building, on the following topics: Monday—"The Most Wonderful Book in the World"; Tuesday—"God's Greatest Problem and Its Solution"; Wednesday—"Why Everyone Needs a Saviour"; Thursday—"The Serpent and the Saviour"; Friday—"The Living Christ."

Daily discussions on these subjects will be open to students from 4:30 to 5:30, in this same room.

Students from all faculties are welcome to this series of conferences and discussions.

Government Motion
Upheld by Members
At U.C. Parliament

Proceedings Begun with Speech by His Excellency, Dr. Sidney Smith, Acting as Governor-General at Opening Session

EXAMS ABOLISHED

U.C. Parliament voted 48-33 at its opening session in the Junior Common Room Friday afternoon to uphold a resolution allowing "Germany to re-assume her role as a major world power in the post-war period," following a vigorous exchange between Government forces supporting the motion and the Opposition who attacked it.

When the bells, heralding the opening of the Parliament, had died down, His Excellency, Dr. Sidney Smith, acting as Governor-General, officially opened the proceedings, Bryant Kassirer, B.A., as Speaker, welcomed all the "foreign colleges of S.P.S., Victoria, Trinity, and Medicine." A baseball bat was substituted for the mace as the symbol of parliamentary order.

Rt. Hon. J. P. Reece, Prime Minister, advocated an economic federation of Europe whereby Germany could take an active part in building up her economic and political status, pay retribution to wronged countries, and increase her trade throughout the world.

Rt. Hon. R. W. Bell, Leader of the Opposition, claimed the Nazi regime was an outgrowth of past Germany and could not be relied upon to assume the role of a democratic country. Besides, Russia will overshadow Germany as a power in Europe.

Rt. Hon. M. Bean, second speaker for the Government, pointed out that German labour will have a major part in the reconstruction of Germany.

Rt. Hon. R. G. Shepherd, second speaker for the Opposition, advocated annihilation of Nazi ideology, to ban future wars and to prevent Germany from being a buffer state against communism. He suggested a "realistic attitude" in dealing with the "nation of fighters."

Parliament enacted a measure forbidding the use of quotations from Scripture in debate and approved a motion abolishing examinations.

Arts vs Science
To be Debated

"Graduates of Liberal Arts Courses are more essential to the development of our civilization than graduates in the Practical Sciences" is the topic to be discussed at this year's first meeting of the Interfaculty Debating Union to be held on Wednesday evening at 8 p.m. in Strachan Hall, Trinity College.

The speakers for the Government will be Pat Orr, III Trinity, and Millwood O'Shaughnessy, II Loretto. The Opposition will be upheld by Cyril Fry, III S.P.S., and Flora Moffat, III St. Hilda's.

S.P.S., a new member of the Union, is expected to take an active part in the present debate because the topic is of such interest to them, said Gyneth Stencil, secretary of the Interfaculty Debating Union.

The Interfaculty Debating Union was founded last year to continue debating on the campus in the place of the Hart House Debating Society and the University Women's Debating Union, and to discuss topics of current interest.

On this year's executive of the Union are Dave Kirkwood, IV Trinity, president; Dorothy Clarke, III Victoria, vice-president; Gyneth Stencil, III Loretto, secretary and treasurer; Catherine Bliss, III St. Hilda's.

THE WORM HAS TURNED

Outstanding oil men throughout the world were astounded over the week-end when Professor I. M. Poor, R.U. (Real University) of the local geology department, announced the greatest discovery in petroleum geology during the past century. After extensive research, development and testing in Hare Oil Valley region, scientists of this campus proclaimed the discovery to the leading oil companies of the greatest boon to science—the Geologists' Sreworm.

In the press conference, the noted professor explained that the Sreworm, as the name implies, is a worm shaped like a corkscrew. He would not confirm the queries as to whether the worm was a cross between an earthworm and corkscrew. He went on to say that there are two types, left and right hand threads, the former for use above the equator and the latter below. Only the left-handed sreworm had been tested to date (they travel in the best of coiles and know their way around). In spite of their agility and strength, they have one weakness—alcohol. It is by this means that they are captured for use. Alcohol is spread over a designated area and as they emerge, the rare creatures are trapped.

The worm is employed in the following manner. A derrick is built from which the sreworm is suspended by means of a string. Embarrassed in this undignified position, the worm bores downward at a furious rate. Oil pipes are sent down the hole which he leaves behind him. When the oil-pocket is struck the force of the liquid shoots the well-oiled worm to the surface. Being of no more use, he is allowed to wiggle off.

Here's a lad who doesn't worry about gasoline rationing. Drawing all the needed octane power from an ordinary pair of gym shoes, he gets around. By name, he's Jack Goering, and last Saturday morning he led about eighty-three finishers across the line in the annual junior harrier held on the local campus. Goering, a sophomore Schoolman, but also a Trinity resident, has been running under the Trinity banner much to the indignation of the rabid School supporters.

A short while back he won the honours in the yearly Trinity harrier. A year ago he placed second to Johnny Watts, who established the unofficial record of 15.26 for the three-lap marathon: unofficial, as Athletic Wing officials do not recognize the time due to the fact that the course is not a standard one.

Goering's time was 16.15, which marks him as a definite threat in the senior event to be held at High Park on the eighteenth. Emmanuel's Rutherford placed second, while close behind was Wood of U.C.

Trinity also took the team honours as their first four finishers totalled the lowest score. Vic, U.C. and School followed in that order.

Two to Go

In the most outstanding grid fixture to be played this season, U.C. came from behind to defeat the favoured Junior School squad by the score of 8-2 at the Stadium Friday afternoon. The result left the teams tied for the top spot in the second group.

The game was hard fought which resulted in injuries to Smith of School and Currah of U.C.

The only scoring in the first half was a single by McReynolds, whose kicking kept the Artsmen in continuous trouble throughout the first half. Another single came about in the same manner early in the third quarter.

Then the winners came to life as Cranham ran a kick back 45 yards. He plunged again for the first down. As two bucks failed from a drive, Wade kicked the placement from a difficult angle. Leitch intercepted a forward and dashed twenty yards for the unconverted major.

The fall baseball schedule is beginning to boil down to a fight to the finish between St. Mike's, U.C., and P.H.E. St. Mike's and P.H.E. B team still have to play that game left over from last Saturday to decide who is the winner of Group 1. The semi-final in that group will then be between said winners and P.H.E. A team. On the other side of the schedule, Meds have defaulted to U.C. B, who will be the other team contending for the Varsity Baseball Championship. Coaches should plan to get these games by Wednesday at the latest so that the finals can begin on Friday or Saturday of this week.

Just a slight reminder to all basketball players—the schedule printed in last Wednesday's paper is the final one to date and all others are thereby invalidated. So look up your games again, gals, and make sure you have your dates straight. This applies especially to teams who were to have played last Thursday. Those games were postponed and in the revised schedule they are called for tonight at O.C.E.

U.C. finally finished their tennis tournament this week-end when Betsy Mosbach defeated Janet Hughes to win the Royal College Singles Championship. The match went 6-3, 3-6, 6-3, three sets of well-played, hard-fought tennis which was a treat to watch. And so—ave atque vale as we relegate our tennis racquets to the store-room for yet another year.

let's go places

Noel Coward has again come up with a special treat for movie fans with "This Happy Breed", playing now at the Uptown Theatre. This picture is one of England's first technical colour productions, and though not as startling as "UPTOWN" at Hollywood colour films, it is pleasingly realistic.

One becomes completely unconscious of the colour whereas in American technical colour films unnatural hues constantly distract the attention from the action.

For once, the portrayal of an average family is typical and natural without Hollywood extravagance and dramatization. The life of this English family, recorded between the years 1919 and 1939, contains humour and touching pathos.

The acting is as superb as any English acting can be. Celia Johnson, as the mother of the family, gives an inspired performance at the head of an inspired cast.

Australian Change To War A Success Says D. Copeland

Australian Price Controller Expects the "Down Under" Continent to Meet Peace Economy With Resolution

INCREASE WAR EFFORT

It was the threat of invasion, the desperate need for defence of Australian soil that enabled the Canberra government to put into operation the most far-reaching economic reorganization in its history, said Professor D. B. Copeland, Australia's Price Controller, in describing the Australian War Economy yesterday afternoon in a lecture at the Economics Building.

Professor Copeland explained that by calling up to industry its unemployed and idle classes, the Australian government was able to register a 30 per cent increase in its national effort in the first two years of the War.

Within one year after the fall of Singapore, however, the Australian government was up to 150 per cent of its peacetime production. All over the country great military and defence centres have been built for an army of almost 750,000.

To achieve this record effort, Australia set up a number of new offices. The office of the Co-ordinator of Public Works was established to divert all possible labour and material resources into essential industries. To rush the national defences to completion it was necessary to create a National Works Council while a number of National Economic Service regulations were adopted to fix wages, salaries, rents, interest rates and profits, and also to offset any tendencies toward inflation.

A system of rationing was adopted to fit the increased demand to the sharply reduced supply, and to ensure an equitable distribution of foodstuffs, clothing, and most unessential manufactured goods.

It was emphasized by Professor Copeland that the Australians met their first great challenge with resolution and speed, although, he continued, there remains yet another, the reconversion from a war to a peace economy.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

In The Grecian Mode

Eaton Auditorium

Greece, that sturdy little peninsula whose independent spirit has thrilled the modern world, came to life last night on the stage of Eaton Auditorium with the Ontario Classical Association's initial Greek Festival.

From Euripides to modern times a comprehensive cross-section of classical art was vividly expressed through song and dance. With its beginnings in the days of Homer at the dawn of European civilization, Greek art has continued as a living influence through the centuries.

Presenting both the old and the new, the thread of history was outlined by Mrs. Homer Thompson by the use of lantern slides. A Hymn to Apollo (ca. 138 B.C.), a traditional chant sung by the Greek Community Choir, was originally sung by the procession which made an annual pilgrimage from Athens to Delphi. This hymn, the words and music of which were recorded on the Treasury of the Athenians, was introduced not only for its antiquity but also for its strange ethereal and high-pitched delicacy. More interested in startling intervals than harmony, this hymn, with clarinet accompaniment, sounded strange to our ears, which have been trained to absorb awkward jumps of augmented and diminished intervals. As the hymn was written in praise of the final victory of the Greeks over the marauding Gallic barbarians in 279 B.C. it is particularly fitting for Greek voices to sing at this time.

The elusive rhythms and transcendental wanderings of melody in the even-more-ancient Chorus from the Ion of Euripides formed the background for the dance of Ion, presented with graceful charm by Miss Arravou. Greek influence on the art and ideas of the western world is part of the immortal legacy of Greece.

Received Degree Here, Field Marshal Dill Dies in Washington

Field Marshal Sir John Greer Dill, Head of British Joint Staff Mission in the United States and former Chief of the Imperial General Staff, who died on November 4 in Washington, visited the University of Toronto in 1943 and was presented with the degree of Doctor of Laws (honoris causa).

At a special convocation held on February 26 of that year, Harold Beresford Butler, Minister of the British Embassy, Washington; the Honorable James Layton Ralston, former Minister of National Defence, Ottawa; the Honorable Sumner Welles, Under Secretary of State, Washington; and Sir John Dill received honorary degrees.

Shortly before his death, Sir John Dill wrote a letter to President Cody expressing his regrets at the death of Sir William Mulock.

The text of the letter, dated October 6, follows:

"I feel I must write you a line on the passing of your late venerable and distinguished Chancellor.

"I am very happy that I should have had not only the privilege of meeting such a distinguished public servant but that I should have had the honour of having the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Laws conferred upon me by him.

"I had the pleasure of seeing the Prime Minister in Quebec and he then told me that Sir William was failing and we talked much about his early career in the Laurier Cabinet.

"I often think of that great day at the University of Toronto where I felt so sincerely that I was among real friends."

President Roosevelt has awarded a posthumous Distinguished Service Medal to Sir John.

Care in Fact-Finding Needed by Cub Reporter Says Ex-Varsity Editor

The fourth in a series of news lectures delivered at noon yesterday by Mr. Rex Wilson, former editor-in-chief of The Varsity, and now a reporter for the Globe and Mail.

Mr. Wilson outlined a brief resume of the previous three lectures, emphasizing the correct and incorrect methods of writing a news story. He dwelt mainly on the topic of "leads," accompanying his lecture by lengthy examples of incorrect ones.

He pointed out the need for careful reporting and the importance to every cub reporter to know the standards and style of the Canadian Press.

Bible is Greatest Book Says Dr. F. E. Gabelein At First V.C.F. Lecture

Dr. Frank E. Gabelein, headmaster of Stoney Brook School, Long Island, New York, was the speaker at the first of the Varsity Christian Fellowship week of meetings held yesterday in Room S25 of the Engineering Building.

In speaking of the Bible as "the greatest book in the world," Dr. Gabelein gave three reasons for his belief that the Bible was unique.

Fifty Years an Editor Honoured by University, David Williams Dies

Mr. David Williams, who received an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws at a special convocation in December, 1941, died recently at his Collingwood home. For 50 years an editor, Mr. Williams was a past-president of the Canadian Press Association.

Mr. Williams also held the offices of president of the Ontario and Quebec division of Canadian Weekly Newspapers' Association.

EDITORIAL

Intercollegiate Sport And Campus Unity

In recent weeks The McGill Daily, The Queen's Journal, and The Varsity have been conducting vigorous campaigns with regard to the revival of intercollegiate sport this winter, or at the latest, next fall, weather and war conditions permitting. It seems apparent that the students at all four universities of the Queen's-Western-McGill-Toronto loop consider that the return of intercollegiate sport, especially intercollegiate football, absolutely necessary for the revival of the college spirit which has all but died out during the five long, tedious war years.

At the University of Toronto the disappearance of a Varsity football squad, a Varsity hockey team, and other manifestations of the University as a single, integrated body has led to widening of the rifts between the many colleges and faculties on this campus.

As has been pointed out in previous editorials, the wide divergence of interests and aims among these many groups is one of the more deplorable features of this University. One might very well say that at a university as large as the University of Toronto it is unavoidable; this, however, is a passive attitude, one which would rather make excuses for an undesirable condition than make any constructive steps toward the betterment of that condition. The condition is not unavoidable in a university such as ours, replete as it is with talent, initiative, and aggressiveness. This abundance of talent in student organization is evident in the success with which the separate faculties carry off their undertakings. In the days when intercollegiate sport flourished, the colleges pooled the best of their athletes to the greater glory of the University, and the burgeoning forth of a university, rather than a college, spirit. Why could not the same procedure be adopted in the case of a University Music Club, Drama Guild, or an All-University Follies?

The objection that might very well be raised to these ambitious proposals is that the diverse colleges and faculties are justly proud of the spirit and individuality which they have built up and if the best of their leaders were pooled in a common cause, while a pan-University spirit would be aroused among the many, active participation in student activity would be reduced to a very few. Our retort to this objection is that intramural sport functioned alongside intercollegiate sport, keeping college spirit alive and giving all prospective athletes a chance at active participation besides providing a training ground and proving field for men good enough to make the Varsity teams. In the same way, the various colleges and faculties could carry on their programmes as they are now laid out only on a less ambitious scale. The Victoria Music Club could still produce an opera and the U.C. Players' Guild could continue to produce plays, each giving even more students in their colleges a chance at participation when the star performers from these and similar organizations were devoting their time to University productions.

Intercollegiate sport is the foremost and most obvious means of promoting Varsity unity, but it is not the only means. All-University dances, Blood Drives, and Charity Days are also immense aids to this end which are at the present time practised. However, true University spirit producing results of which we can be justly proud of as a University will not come until the student ceases to think along faculty lines and begin to think in University terms. When this does come about, the student at the University of Toronto, like students at other universities, will be able to point with pride at his University rather than at some small component thereof.

Embryonic Artists

Directed by Artist Caven Atkins, the Hart House Art Classes Relax Yet Find an Outlet for Self Expression

By Loggie Klans

The Hart House Art Classes, begun in the early twenties, have been under the direction of several Canadian artists, including Charles Comfort, Gordon Webster, Carl Shaeffer, and at present, Caven Atkins. The aim of the classes is to foster an interest in art, to offer an outlet for artistic talent and to provide relaxation for the members of Hart House.

This year's class, which numbers 33 at present, is composed not only of undergraduates but also members of the faculty and graduates, many of whom are in the armed forces. In this pot-pourri S.P.S. men, Medical students, and Artists meet all come together for an evening of relaxation and self-expression.

Mr. Atkins tries to teach these embryonic artists to express their personal aesthetic ideas in such media as chalk, charcoal, tempera, and pastels. He seldom encourages accurate draftsmanship but stresses individuality of approach and the development of a personal technique.

Dr. R. E. Haist, chairman of the Art Committee, expressed his opinion that "this Art Class is valuable in that it serves to acquaint the participants with good art and to broaden their interests. The ability to draw well is not a requirement for membership."

Mr. W. B. Burwell, secretary of Hart

House, spoke of two coming exhibitions. One is to be held in the last three weeks of April, and will exhibit the paintings of the Art Class. The other, to be held in March, will show the works of any members of Hart House done outside of the Art Class.

At present the Art Gallery is exhibiting watercolours by Fred Bridgen, a member of the Advisory Committee of Artists for Hart House.

Mr. Burwell also spoke of the Arts and Crafts Club, which features etching, dry-point, modelling, and wood-carving. This club is also under the direction of Caven Atkins and meets every Tuesday. Mr. Atkins succeeded Carl Shaeffer, who is now a war records artist in the Forces.

Irwin Burns, II Mechanical, stated: "I like being given the opportunity to come down and give vent to a little self-expression, art being the medium through which I find expression the easiest."

Jim Sorbara, III Meds, thinks that the classes are "interesting but strenuous." When asked if he had received any previous art training, he replied: "The only place I've ever used chalk before was on my pool cue."

Professor I. W. Smith stated that he was enjoying the course. "Anyone interested in drawing would find the course extremely useful from the standpoint of practice alone."

Near East Nationalism Affects Half of Globe Declares Prof. Saunders

The rise of nationalism in the Near East has produced a problem which affects half the world, said Professor R. M. Saunders, in his discussion of "Some Problems of the Near East" yesterday afternoon, at a meeting of the International Affairs Club.

Turkey is the most important factor in this problem; in fact, it is the only nation that has completely freed itself from its old thought and its old form of government, said Professor Saunders.

The revolution in Turkey which upset the government produced a counter-revolution in the Balkan nations which weakened Turkey's position at the outbreak of the last war.

Mustapha Kemal Pasha, aided by a new army, which was actually fighting for the safety of the homeland, drove out the foreigners and began to form the present Turkey.

According to Prof. Saunders, the development in the government has been astounding. Kemal Pasha, since 1921, has changed the whole system of society. Moslemism is no longer the moving power in Turkey, and there is no state religion. Turkey is one of the first eastern countries to recognize women's part in society and politics.

Both Persia and Arabia are nationally minded, he continued, but they have not reached the stage achieved by Turkey. Arabia is still striving for independence and this struggle has influenced her part in the present war.

Oil is the important factor, especially in Saudi Arabia, which has attracted the interest of both Great Britain and the U.S.A. Much of their naval power depends on it, stated Prof. Saunders.

Dr. Norman MacKenzie Assumes Presidency At B.C. Convocation

Vancouver — (CUP) — Dr. Norman Archibald MacKenzie was formally installed as President of the University of British Columbia at the annual Fall Convocation last week. This is the first time that a president has been installed on the university campus.

Four honorary degrees of Doctor of Laws were conferred. Recipients were The Hon. Ray Atherton, American Ambassador to Canada; Hon. Liu Shih-Shun, Ambassador of the Republic of China to Canada; Rt. Hon. Malcolm MacDonald, British High Commissioner to Canada; and Maj.-Gen. G. R. Peakes, V.C., Commanding Officer, Pacific Command.

Untrained Psychologists May Exploit the Public Says College Principal

Montreal — (CUP) — Principal K. E. Norris, of Sir George Williams College, president of the newly-formed Psychological Association of the Province of Quebec, recently expressed the fear that the general public might be exploited by insufficiently trained psychologists.

The purpose of the Association is to act in the same capacity regarding psychologists as do similar professional organizations for the medical and other professions.

NEWSFRONTS

Ottawa — Gen. McNaughton says he plans to use home defence men as "soldiers," and withdraw them from civilian tasks.

London — Premier Stalin urged last night the creation of a special post-war organization of peace-loving nations empowered to act immediately "to avert or suppress aggression."

Town Planning

Four Universities Agree To Conduct Extension Courses

Universities of Toronto, McMaster, Western and Queen's Begin Courses January and February

CONFERENCE HELD

Courses in community planning will be given by the extension departments of the University of Toronto, the University of Western Ontario, Queen's University and McMaster University, it was decided over the week-end at a conference held in Toronto by representatives from each of these four universities.

Held in conjunction with the Department of Planning and Developing for the Ontario Government, headed by Mr. Dana Porter, the conference agreed that the new courses would be conducted only in the months of January and February.

"The courses will be taught by popular lecturers with a view to stimulating interest," said Mr. A. E. K. Bunnell, Government Consultant on Community Planning. "If enough interest appears to justify it, these lectures will be followed by courses of a more technical nature for the sake of professional people—architects and engineers."

Besides Mr. Bunnell, the Government was represented by Dr. George B. Langford, Director of Community Planning for Ontario.

From the University of Toronto, conference members included Pres. H. J. Cody, Principal Sidney Smith of University College and Dr. C. R. Young, Dean of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering. Other members from S.P.S. were: Prof. T. R. Loudon, Professor of Civil Engineering and Aeronautics; Prof. E. R. Arthur, Professor of Architectural Design; Associate Prof. R. F. Leggett, of the Department of Civil Engineering; and Mr. A. P. C. Adamson, Lecturer in Architecture.

Dr. W. J. Dunlop, head of the University of Toronto's Department of Extension, served as representative of his department.

There were several representatives from each of the other three universities, including Dr. Sherwood Fox, who spoke at the meeting on behalf of the University of Western Ontario.

Comical Plots Highlight Play By Victoria Group

After a long period of inactivity, Hart House Theatre opens again on Friday and Saturday, with Oliver Goldsmith's period play, "She Stoops to Conquer," presented by the Victoria College Dramatic Society.

Mrs. Dora Mavor Moore, the producer, has been active on the stage in London, England, and New York, and has, at one time or another during her career, taken all the female roles in the comedy she now directs. At present she is the head of the Village Players.

The sets, which were designed by Bob Simkins, stage manager, and Maurice Kelly, were completed after many trials and tribulations caused by lack of space, somewhere in the caves below Little Vic gym, and are said to be of a very high standard.

The play itself, which has the subtitle of "The Mistakes of a Night," was written during the latter part of the eighteenth century, and is dedicated to Samuel Johnson.

The plot centres around the mistake made by two gentlemen from London, who, misled by a young "play-boy," mistake the house of a respectable country gentleman for the "Three Pigeons"—the village inn.

There are many schemes of marriages, complications and subterfuges, all adding to the comical situations caused by the varied characters of the cast.

Tickets are for sale in Hart House in the afternoon and at the Victoria College Union in the morning. Simkins reports that ninety per cent of the tickets have already been sold.

Organization Of Labour Will Insure Employment States Law Club Speaker

Union Organizer, John Eldon, Stresses Importance of Training in Labour Relations for Members of Legal Profession

BORA LASKIN PRESIDES

"Organized labour is the only solution to post-war full employment and prosperity," said Mr. John Eldon, guest speaker at the Law Club meeting last night. Mr. Eldon, an internationally renowned figure in the field of union organization, is at present associated with the C.I.O. in Canada.

The speaker, who was introduced by Professor Bora Laskin of the School of Law, emphasized in his "Experiences of a Labour Organizer," the tremendous problems confronting the unions today; these unions are primarily made up of young workers attempting to get some kind of security both for themselves and their families.

His practical experiences in organizing the workers of various plants provided the speaker with interesting anecdotes to illustrate the many and varied problems with which labour has to contend today. He stressed that the legal profession should be trained in labour relations in order to take advantage of this field which is now opening up, and that the approach should be much more humanistic than that found in precedent law today in our labour courts.

Service of Remembrance and Consecration

The annual Service of Remembrance and Consecration will be held on Saturday, Nov. 11, in front of University College, commencing at 10.40 a.m.

All lecture and laboratory classes will be withdrawn from 9.30 a.m. to 12.30 p.m. on that day.

Russia and Peace Topic of Pares

Without Russia we can have no permanent peace, said Sir Bernard Pares, speaking on "Russia and the Peace" before the English-speaking Union yesterday.

"It is far harder to gain a permanent peace settlement than to win a war," he continued. The Russians are their own enemies, insofar as it is instinctive in them that all the profit should accrue to them and any such crisis in the settlement should be rigorously avoided, he said.

Pre-revolutionists like Trotsky placed all their faith in a world revolution. That theory went out of date, said Sir Bernard, when Stalin turned to vigorous home construction. Stalin felt that Mein Kampf threatened Russia alone: "The Russian state is ripe for collapse"; therefore there was an urgent need to raise Russian industry to the level of German industry, he said.

Sir Bernard stated that in the war with Germany, Stalin had passed from a sheer dictator to a national leader. Although there is more individual thinking and enterprise in Russia since the revolution, Russia has not achieved Communism, and Stalin will return to his home construction when the war is over.

NEW REGULATIONS ISSUED REGARDING POSTPONEMENTS

ROUTINE TO BE FOLLOWED IN DEALING WITH
I AN ORDER—MEDICAL EXAMINATION
II AN ORDER—MILITARY TRAINING

I ORDER—MEDICAL EXAMINATION

1. Each student who receives an Order—Medical Examination from the Divisional Registrar "B" must comply with the instructions contained in the order and present himself for medical examination at the time and place indicated. If the time set for the medical examination conflicts with important University work, such as an academic examination, he may, on applying to the Divisional Registrar, have the date changed; or if he should be called for a medical examination outside Toronto, the Divisional Registrar will, on request, arrange for him to take the examination in Toronto.
2. If he is rejected for military service by the Army Medical Board he will receive a certificate (M14), which he must present for noting to the Orderly Room of the unit in which he is enrolled.
3. If he is found fit for military service he will receive a note from the Reception Centre to that effect, advising him that he will be called for military service in the near future.
4. Upon receiving the note referred to in Section 3 above, the student must, if he wishes to obtain postponement of military service in order that he may continue at the University, make application in writing to the Divisional Registrar within 14 days, taking care to include his call number in this application. With this application he must submit a certificate from the University Registrar stating that he is a student in good standing, in full time attendance at classes, and taking military training satisfactorily. Before applying for this certificate at the University Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall, he must obtain from the Orderly Room of the unit in which he is enrolled a certificate that he is taking military training satisfactorily, and present this at the Registrar's Office.
5. This application will be dealt with by the Mobilization Board and, if approved by the Board, a postponement order will be issued to the student. This order, when received, will be presented for noting to the Orderly Room of his unit.

II ORDER—MILITARY TRAINING

6. The Order—Military Training, will not be issued unless:
(a) the Mobilization Board has rejected the student's application for postponement of military training, or
(b) no application for postponement has been made by the student.
7. The student may appeal against this order to the Mobilization Board either in writing or in person.
8. The student, however, must report for military service as ordered unless he is officially advised otherwise by the Mobilization Board before the date on which he has been ordered to report.

"Authority of Life" Discussed by Taylor in S.C.M. Lectures

Religion is the expression of a personality which lies behind life and to which we must adjust ourselves, said Prof. W. R. Taylor. Each generation must devise for itself a creed based on the experiences of past generations.

Prof. Taylor, head of the U.C. Orientals department, was speaking before a meeting of the U.C. S.C.M. yesterday. Mr. Ed. Lute, secretary of the U.C. S.C.M., outlined the purposes of this series of six lectures dealing with the authority of life.

Prof. Taylor expressed the belief that people of today are in danger of becoming completely pagan. He spoke of a Gallup poll taken recently in the U.S. in which only six per cent of the people questioned admitted they carried out private religious devotions and less than three per cent did so daily. He contends movies and cheap novels are the sources of ideals for modern youth. Few post-war plans have been made to face the problem of how long a society based on economic satisfaction can last.

The adoption of religion is primarily an act of will and, secondly, an emotional experience.

Chemical Club Excursion To Take Place Monday

On Monday, November 13, the Chemical Club will hold its first excursion since the war. Tickets can be obtained from Harold Schiff, Room 15, Mining Building, or Daphne Line in the Chemical Building. There are only sixty tickets available and these should be applied for early.

Before the war these trips were a regular thing, and were stag. This year, however, women will be present. Schiff said they will leave Toronto for Hamilton at noon next Monday. On their arrival they will be shown through the Steel Company. The party will split into two groups for the benefit of those who want to be home early. In this way those who want to do more chemical investigating on the way back won't have to hurry.

It is expected that electrical and chemical labs. will be cancelled Monday afternoon, said Schiff.

Debating Union Meets Tonight

The Interfaculty Debating Union will hold its first debate of the year tonight at 8 p.m. in Strachan Hall, Trinity College. According to Interfaculty tradition, the debate will follow the general procedure of meeting the host faculty, this time Trinity's Literary Institute.

The topic of the debate is: Resolved that graduates of the liberal arts courses are more essential to the development of our civilization than graduates in practical science.

The first speaker for the government, Pat Orr, III Trinity, said in an interview that practical science men so easily forget that their origin and aims are determined by the rational abstract thinking of artmen. Millwood O'Shaughnessy, II Loretto, is his colleague.

Cyril Fry, II S.P.S., stated the case of the opposition: "Our theory is that engineers, doctors and other men engaged in a practical line are more useful in the preservation of civilization than artmen." Flora Moffat, III St. Hilda's, is his colleague.

The president of the Union, David Kirkwood, said that there now are six component members in the Union, which was organized last year to replace the separate men's and women's Debating Societies.

February Invasion By Campus Lovelies Predicted at Queen's

Kingston, Nov. 1—(CUP)—Four of the most beautiful and photographic Queen's University co-eds, one from each class year, will be selected to model professionally for the Robert Simpson Co. Ltd. advertisements which will appear in this year's Tricolor, the University yearbook.

The plan, whereby the four girls will travel, expenses paid, to Toronto some time in February, was originated by A. Garth Gunter, editor-in-chief of the Tricolor. While in Toronto, they will pose professionally for the Simpson's advertisements which will be run in the Tricolor next spring.

Serious Music, Students Choice States U.C. Pianist, Macdonald

By Ernst R. Deutsch

"No one can say that undergraduates are oblivious to music," said Jim Macdonald, his face expressing a sense of achievement after a short piano recital in Hart House which brought him tremendous applause, at noon yesterday.

Interviewed afterwards, the young pianist, who came to Toronto three years ago, described some of the steps on his ladder to success.

"It all started when I was seven years old," he reflected. "Though I cannot claim the acoustical music as particularly represented in my family, I grew interested in the piano and, later, the violin. I had several teachers, among them the well-known Reginald Godden."

Jim's progress was so rapid that, at the age of thirteen, he played over the radio in his native city of Hamilton.

Senate and Board of Governors Discuss Details of Plan. Benefits Available to All Discharged Personnel

LIVING COSTS GRANTED

Joint meetings of the University's Senate and Board of Governors now are in session to discuss plans with regard to the Dominion benefit scheme for veterans of the armed forces.

This scheme is so arranged as to assist in the provision of advanced educational facilities for both men and women veterans of the present war. The individual need not have been in attendance at a university and interrupted in his course of study to serve in the armed forces. The opportunities are open to all service members regardless of their previous education.

The benefits are to work in the following manner: each veteran is to be paid tuition fees plus a month's living allowance for each month served in the armed forces. Should the veteran be married, adequate provision will be made for additional living allowance. If the individual acquires and maintains a scholastic standing within the top quarter of his university class the government will finance him in any sort of postgraduate work that he might care to pursue, over and above his university course.

In the event that the individual did not obtain his senior matriculation, he will be granted fifteen months in which to obtain his upper school certificate and during this period he will be financed in the manner already outlined by the government. The month-for-month benefit will not be applied during these fifteen months. (Continued on page 4)

Victory Loan Drive Lagging at McGill

Montreal—(CUP)—The McGill Loan Campaign now is entering its final week, with only 49 per cent of its objective reached, the Victory Loan Committee announced there recently.

"There is an urgent need for as many subscriptions as possible to be obtained this week," the announcement read, "if the full objective is to be reached."

"Well, mine came when, a few years ago, I played as soloist at a Toronto Symphony concert. I was sixteen then," he added not without a flourish of satisfaction.

In his musical tastes, Jim Macdonald is more or less conventional, yet not impervious to evolution. In general his favourite composers are the three B's—Bach, Brahms, and Beethoven—but as for the piano, the crowning pedestal belongs to Chopin. Jim doesn't like the ultra-modern piano music, yet he shares a general sympathy for Shostakovich and for some pure jazz, Gershwin and Chicago style. As far as piano playing is concerned, Arthur Rubinstein is his idol and guiding light.

"These informal recitals are a good thing," Macdonald continued, "for once, they give us a fine chance for displaying our technique to an appreciative and reasonably large audience. Moreover, they show that in Hart House, even after having been exposed all day to everything from Bach to boogie-woogie, the students still come flocking to listen to a serious musical programme."

Tolling of West Tower Bell Heralds First U.C. Parliament

By John Ryan

Last Friday, for the first time in so many years that no authority on the campus knows when, the bell in the U.C. west tower was tolled. The occasion was the opening of the U.C. Parliament. It marked the rebirth of a tradition that has long been dead.

When University College was built in 1860, this bell was placed in the tower above the refectory to summon the resident students to meals and to wake them in the morning. It was planned that three other bells also be added and a clock, but this was never done. The entrance to the bell tower was just off the gallery in the dining hall (now Junior Common Room). This was convenient as the executive of the Literary Society and Staff sat up there for meals and if they had an important announcement to make they rang the bell for order and to summon students not present. The bell was rung before all important meetings such as the parliamentary debates.

It is most definite that the bell has not been tolled since 1919, when Hart House was opened, but it may have been stopped before that, due to the fact that the noise disturbed the neighbouring residents. Most of the older personages on the campus believed up until last Friday that the bell had been broken or removed from the tower.

Dr. Cody, in a recent speech at the U.C. Soph-Frosh Banquet, made reference to the bell when he related a Halloween prank concerning it. It seems that one October 31st in the late eighteen hundreds some of the more playful students decided late at night to play a joke on the steward. In the middle of the night the steward was awakened by the tolling of the bell. Determining to find out the trouble, he made his way to the tower. On entering, he found to his amazement that his cow's tail was tied to the bell rope. Unfastening the animal, he, with the help of several students, endeavoured to lead the cow back down the stairs, but the cow would not move with any amount of persuasion. Finally it was necessary to put planks on the staircase and slide the poor animal down from whence it came.

Ben Orenstein, Literary Director of U.C. Lit., when interviewed concerning the bell's reincarnation on the campus, stated that "the executive of this year has decided that the custom of ringing the bell before meetings of parliament should be revived. As we plan to have a session of the U.C. Parliament every second Friday, the bell will be rung then and also on important occasions. We feel that this is such a fine tradition of this college that it should not be allowed to pass into the realm of the forgotten."

Of Universal Interest

Students of St. Francis Xavier University are in the heart of one of the most rapidly expanding movements in Canada. The Antigonish co-operatives should be of paramount interest to every member enrolled on this and other camps. Thus we do not feel that we are transgressing any editorial bounds in discussing its more recent advances.

The fact that after the war these co-operatives will influence economic life has been recognized by the present government. A Co-operative Union of Canada has been established in Ottawa. It is a general headquarters for the movement throughout the Dominion and is headed by Professor A. B. MacDonald, of St. Francis Xavier.

The Maritimes and British Columbia have successfully utilized co-operatives in their fishing industries. They market and process the fish, and the members make bulk purchases of fishing gear and nets through their associations, which also operate grocery, meat and dairy stores for their members. Statistics show that approximately a third of all the main farm products passing through commercial channels have been sold by marketing co-operatives. The most impressive and largest membership in the co-operatives has been in the wheat pools in the West, which in 1941 handled forty per cent or more of grain received at country elevators. In 1942 co-ops did a business which amounted to almost $250,000,000.

The impetus with which this movement is being pushed forward obviously demands attention from any person who plans to aid in the making of an improved Canada. The basis of the plan is agricultural. Of necessity the movement must extend to the political realm. But an organization founded on agrarian policies is comparatively new for Canada. Heretofore, co-operatives have been superimposed on a political platform.

Speak Now

With the cessation of hostilities there will be wide and varied fields for employment of both men and women. Students graduating from the University at this time will have before them one of the broadest of vocations that has been found on this continent.

The green graduate will be faced with the major problem of selecting a career from this welter of potential positions. He will naturally feel bewildered and incompetent to decide his future alone. Women, more so than men, will find new avenues open to them. How they will be adequately placed in such jobs is a problem which has not yet been considered by university authorities.

Former attempts as such placements have been tried by offices without proper guidance. In the past few years university students have been directed to positions by inexperienced people who know nothing of the capabilities or tastes of the applicants.

The best answer to the uncertainty which must inevitably come is the establishment of an officially recognized "guider" at the University who would act as a liaison officer between industry and the students. The need of such an office is great. Its lack was felt even after the last war whose repercussions were not as tremulous as those which will be felt within a few years.

Suspense!

Royal Alexandra

The youngest member of the theatre's Royal Family nobly upheld the histrionic tradition of her forebearers in last night's moving performance of "Rebecca." Diana Barrymore, daughter of the late John Barrymore, playing the role of Maxim de Winter's uncertain young second wife, exhibited both charm and talent in her unexpected interpretation of this difficult part.

Responsible for the moving quality of the production was Bramwell Fletcher as Maxim de Winter, Rebecca's tortured husband and murderer, displaying

DORSON DELLS RETURNS

All was serene and quiet in the Observatory when suddenly the dozing students were awakened by the shouts of Prof. Dorson Dells.

"Rocket ships!" he screamed, "dozens of them. All headed for the U.C. Quad." A more ambitious student muttered to the lethargic group, "He's done this before. Just a publicity gag."

But the Professor was right. In ten minutes there were thirteen scarlet and pink Space-Flyers settled in the quad. Curious Artsmen watched the proceedings from the cloisters as the strange visitors disembarked. The leader, an imposing figure, immediately on alighting from his ship was heard to demand, "Where is Seagull? Where is Piller? I must see them at once."

A guard was detailed to fetch the pale, timid Artsman. After a prolonged chase through the Hart House Pool Room and Swimming Pool, Seagull was captured and brought before the leader.

Silently he handed Seagull on impressive manuscript, bound with Blue and Yellow ribbons.

"Skule!" screeched Seagull, and tried to break away from the clutches of his captors. He was calmed down and the proclamation was read to him.

Hear ye, hear ye. Let it be known to all that we, the students of the mighty University of Hash Kash in Mars, do strongly disagree with the recent publications of the universities of Ontario which stated that all beautiful co-eds are found below. We Challenge.

Stunned, the gathered throng silently drew back from the invaders. A large portrait was raised for all to see.

"It's Miss O'Toole, from Skule," observed Seagull. "Now we haven't a chance. But how did she get to Mars?"

That was the $63.98 question and the crowd waited with bated breath for the answer.

The Martian Leader spoke. "You know the Skule cannon? And remember the S.P.S. Annual Auction? Well, they fired it that day. Miss O'Toole had been snoozing blissfully in the cannon. She arrived on the Hash Kash Campus very suddenly. She made a terrific impression. Now we have a wishing well."

"Why didn't you bring her down with you?" sobbed the bereaved Skulemen assembled.

"Well, we asked her for her particulars, of course. Without them, she naturally couldn't appear in public, not even in Skule."

Headed by Artshend Razbry, the thirsty crowd mobbed the rocket, shouting their war-cry, "Rocket is Still."

Frightened by this demonstration, and retreating behind white W.C.T.U. flags, the Martians took to their Space-Ships and swooshed back to Miss O'Toole of Skule.

unusual emotional restraint. Florence Reed, in a convincing character study of the brooding housekeeper, Mrs. Danvers, moves eerily through the play. Notable among the supporting cast was Reginald Mason who contributed the most flawless performance of the evening with his fine dramatic control. The only disappointment was Miss Barrymore's slight tendency to overact in the opening scenes, but as the play progressed her dramatic instinct seemed to overcome this inclination.

Proving the exception to the rule that successful novels do not make successful plays, the dramatic adaptation of Daphne teen months but will begin only when the individual commences his university training. In this manner there will be no lowering of the entrance requirements already in force.

It has also been arranged that these veterans can claim exemption under the Income Tax regulations during this period.

Under the Dominion Government, the plan is being adopted in all Canadian universities. Dr. W. J. Dunlop, Director of University Extension, stated that already about 100 discharged servicemen and two ex-servicewomen are attending the University of Toronto. There is no criterion available by which an estimate of the number of persons wishing to avail themselves of the scheme can be made.

However, in pre-war days there were 35,000 students in attendance at Canadian universities and approximately one-seventh of these were at the University of Toronto. Thus preparations are being made to accommodate at least this number of students; and it has been suggested that in view of the fact that so many of the service personnel have been travelling about the Dominion that there is a likelihood that many of these will wish to enroll at Toronto.

Great extension will be required to present facilities to accommodate the extra number of students and at the present time the problem of erecting temporary buildings or of using existing buildings is being debated by the committee.

A few weeks ago, a chappie was using the phone in a second floor apartment on St. George St. The phone was in front of a large window looking down on the street, where a dignified middle-aged matron was walking by. On an impulse this chappie waved at her. To his consternation, she stopped, turned, smiled, waved back and started briskly for the door. Our frightened hero dashed madly to his hostess to explain what was about to happen . . . then the doorbell rang. With much temerity he opened the door and while he was still groping desperately for something to say, his hostess ran down the flight of stairs calling. "Mother, what brings you here?" . . . Curtain.

The operator of a Bloor streetcar recently improved his lyrics immensely with the following variation to the approach to Avenue Rd., "Avenue Rd., University Ave., Queen's Park, Park Plaza, King Cole Room, SOLD OUT!!!!"

Last year a Toronto newspaper printed this little honey, (we've waited a long time to get this one in), "Incompetent students will not be permitted to continue at the University unless they get special permission from Selective Service" . . . who are experts in the field no doubt.

Several co-eds, out walking Halloween evening underwent a rather harrowing experience. Of course the girls shouldn't have been abroad without their brooms but they paid for it. It seems that the gnomes and goblins of yesteryear who just asked for candies or turned in a false alarm or two were nothing like their modern ilk. Two frightened co-eds were chased furiously up St. George St. only to be overhauled by their pursuers in short order. Then, the bad lads, none of whom placed a hair over five feet, refused to release their captives until kissed—and me without my mask!!!

On a recent Sunday a woman was seen standing in a doorway weeping copious tears . . . and the name above the doorway read—GLAD TIDINGS TABERNACLE . . . ya never can tell.

Who is the stern character that stole Calvin the Carp? A certain Greek-letter House would like to get its hands on that brazen fish-napper for now they are without their novel form of amusement. The Mounted Police and G. Men were notified, circulars were printed, and an ad was even put in the Varsity, but to no avail.

It seems that last week the boys had their initiations and decided to purchase Calvin to aid in the merriment. A good friend indeed was Calvin for besides being almost human, he guzzled with the best of them. Many was the young freshee who had to put up with Calvin on a double date. He lived in style in a bathtub upstairs until one inebriated brother left him outside and then he was stolen.

If you hear anything about him please notify the Varsity although personally we think he has joined the Navy.

The copy readers of the Varsity may be pretty dumb, but how about The Globe and Mail. The following ad appeared in a recent issue.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

du Maurier's powerful book is quite as engrossing as the original. The suspense, which is the keynote of the novel, has been cleverly transferred intact into the play. However, we could not help but wonder if the dramatic version could be wholly appreciated by one who has not had the privilege of reading the book.

Western Hears Cronyn On National Theatre

London, Ont.—(CUP)—Hume Cronyn, Hollywood screen star, speaking to five hundred students in the University of Western Ontario recently, expressed the need Canada has for a national theatre.

"Few active little theatres exist in Canada today, with the exception of the London Little Theatre," he said.

Orson Welles was cited as an example of courage and leadership in the world of drama. He had the fortitude to try new methods of heightening dramatic effect, even a Martian invasion, said the speaker.

Treaty-Making Only a Step In Task of Establishing Peace Says Speaker Starting Series

First of Series of Public Lectures on Peacemaking and World Order Held Under Auspices of History Dept.

PROF. E. MCINNIS SPEAKER

The establishment of peace is a continuous task which does not end with the drawing up of a treaty, Prof. E. McInnis, U. of T., stated yesterday in the first of a series of public lectures on Peacemaking and World Order. The lectures are given in University College Wednesday afternoons, under the auspices of the department of Modern History.

Prof. McInnis discussed "Precedents for Peacemaking: 1815 and 1919," outlining the aims, methods, and results of these two treaties. He explained how the hopes for peace in 1815 were based on a restoration of the forces of authority and privilege, embodied in monarchy, and in 1919, on preservation of the democratic ideals of liberty and free enterprise, while at the same time guarding against the threat of communism.

Each of these attempts at peacemaking met checks which the treaty was not elastic enough to envisage and meet. In 1815, he said, the Allies, except Britain, insisted on maintenance of the old system of absolute monarchy, and the Treaty of Vienna ignored the things legitimacy failed to satisfy. In using the settlement as a barrier to liberalism and nationalism, there was no alternative

Vic Music Club Ends Rehearsals

The Victoria College Music Club concluded its rehearsal of "H.M.S. Pinafore" last night with dancing and refreshments in Alumni Hall, in the College. For about an hour and a half Mr. Ridout rehearsed the principals, while Mr. Hutton coached the chorus in dance steps and stage actions.

The Music Club is unanimous in its praise of the directors, both of whom are enthusiastic about the response they are getting. We dropped in just in time to listen to leading lady Lois Bouck, who is considered by the cast the perfect Josephine: "she sings, acts, and looks the part."

The executive expects most of the seats for the evening performance to be snapped up by mail-orders and advises students to write for tickets, enclosing a stamped self-addressed envelope. Mail-orders will be accepted at Victoria College after Wednesday, Nov. 15.

but to break this barrier, and consequently the treaty, by force, when unrest grew too great.

In 1919 the Allies wanted to ensure the gains of liberalism and nationalism made in the social and political transformation of Europe during the war. However, they were thrust into a reluctant conservatism when confronted with

Dr. H. S. M. Coxeter Speaker of M & P Club

Vari-coloured models, ranging in colour from red to sky-blue, and in shape from cubes to many-pointed stars, illustrated Dr. H. S. M. Coxeter's lecture to the Math. and Physics Club yesterday.

Speaking on the topic of "The Nine Regular Solids," he outlined some of their history. The five most common forms were known to Plato, Euclid, and the earlier mathematicians, but it remained for Kepler, a German, to introduce four additional solids in the 17th century. This was done by allowing star-shaped solids to be classed as "regular." Dr. Coxeter gave many more historical details, and showed how formulae were derived to express the shape of the solid.

Asked where he had gotten the models, he stated that a friend of his in Florida made them, and had given a set. They are made of heavy coloured paper, cut to size and bound together into the desired shape.

Dr. Coxeter is a graduate of Cambridge University, England, and has done post-graduate work at Princeton. For the last eight years he has been on the teaching staff at Toronto.

Biology Club Hears Grads

The second meeting of the University Biological Club, held in Wymilwood last night featured informal talks by graduate members of the club on their work during the past summer, and illustrated by coloured slides.

Perhaps the most unexpected of the three occupations was that described by Ron Taylor, a botanist, who spent the summer in the Arctic on a geodetic survey. "Geodesics," he explained, "is a method of surveying large areas of land." The work of his particular party was simply fixing the exact positions of certain spots which could later be photographed from the air.

Transportation was chiefly provided by the R.C.A.F. and a couple of Eskimo families. One of the highlights of the expedition was when the Eskimos caught a white whale and its cub. The mother whale was preserved for winter food, but they ate the cub. The skin, he stated, tasted like a mixture of nuts and eggwhite. "You get so sick of canned food," the speaker declared, "that anything tastes good. I don't want to think of dehydrated cabbage again."

Dorothy McLean, the second speaker, described a summer spent at the big Marine Biological Station at Wood's Hole, Mass., where many of the famous biologists from the United States and Canada go to do research on fresh marine material. The informal atmosphere and summer resort setting on the Cape Cod coast, she said, has given rise to the question of whether biologists go to Wood's Hole to do marine biology, or do marine biology in order to get a chance to spend their summers at Wood's Hole.

The oyster industry on the coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence was described by Charlotte Sullivan. Along the Northumberland Straits the water is so much warmer than in the surrounding districts that a flourishing oyster industry has grown up as a side line for those who own property along the ocean. Asked if she ever found pearls in the oysters, the speaker regretfully admitted that she had, but that they were not marketable.

Dr. Frank E. Gabelein Speaks on God's Problem In V.C.F. Address

Dr. Frank E. Gabelein, of Long Island, New York, gave his third noon-hour address yesterday. The meeting was held in Room S-25 of the Engineering Building.

In speaking of "God's greatest problem and its solution," Dr. Gabelein said that God's problem was to forgive men and still be just. He said its solution lay in men's acceptance of Jesus Christ as saviour. If God solved this greatest of all problems, Dr. Gabelein continued, He was able to solve all our daily problems also.

Prof. Havelock C.C.F. Speaker

"C.C.F. party structure is the only structure insuring that the people will control the regulating of party policies," stated Professor E. H. Havelock, of Victoria College, speaking at the second general meeting of the University C.C.F. Club held last night in the U.C. Women's Union.

Prof. Havelock, in analyzing the party structure in regard to the needs of our times, told of the organization of the party on the local unit, or club basis. He enlarged upon the four functions of this unit, stating that it may draft resolutions on current policies, which are passed on to the yearly provincial convention for amendment and vote. Thus the individual member has a say in the organization of party policy, which is unique in Canada.

The local unit also raises the money to support the party, by individual contributions only. The C.C.F. does not accept contributions from corporations, as is common with other political parties, and C.C.F. candidates are nominated for merit only, not for any financial backing gained, Prof. Havelock said.

Although there is loose talk about the country being overgoverned, he continued, the government grew up because of the way the country has been settled, making provincial government necessary. Even with the development of air transport, it will be prohibitive for ordinary people to travel from province to province. Therefore the provincial convention will of necessity be the real governing body.

Prof. Havelock concluded his address by stating that the C.C.F. is a people's party, not a party for any specific workers' union or industrial class.

The meeting was then turned over to the members for open discussion.

Bar and Business Ball Will Benefit I.S.S.

The I.S.S. will receive the profits from this year's Bar and Business Ball, Gordon Stulberg, of the Law Club said yesterday. "In view of this, the dance is open to students of all faculties and colleges."

It will be held at Casa Loma on Tuesday, Nov. 28, at 9 p.m.—Ellis McInlock, his trumpet and his orchestra, providing the musical bill of fare.

The floor show, under the direction of A. Siegel, B. Orenstein and G. Stulberg, will feature a contest at which the queen of the ball will be chosen.

"Her tentative title," said Stulberg, "is the girl we'd most like to take to the bar and do business with."

In former years the Bar and Business Ball has been sponsored by students in Law and Commerce and Finance. This year's dance will also have the sponsorship of the Political Science and Economics Course.

Rev. Hay From Scotland Inducted in Knox Service

The Rev. D. W. Hay, M.A., was inducted into the Chair of Systematic Theology in Knox College Chapel on Tuesday evening.

Professor Hay, of Dunfermline, Scotland, was appointed to the staff at Knox College in 1940 but was unable to take the post at that time as he was serving overseas. As the chaplain of the 1st Batt. Scots Guards, Professor Hay was stationed in Great Britain and, later, Italy. When Prof. Hay left his men in June they were just beyond Rome. Asked by The Varsity about conditions in Italy, Prof. Hay stated that the squalor and poverty of the Italian peasants is indescribable; however, "Rome is a beautiful city—a different world."

Graduating in 1929 from the University of Edinburgh, Prof. Hay studied theology at the Universities of Bonn and Elberfeld in Germany in 1932-3.

Water Skiing Banned by War Is Fear of Varsity Student

By Jack Shapiro

The war has surely had some effect on practically all walks of life and this we dedicate to one of the lesser publicized—that of water skiing.

One of our own students here in the University, Ruth Cohen, Pass Arts II, has the privilege of considering herself an authority on this question since she has probably been hit as hard as any in this particular line of athletics. Until the war started, she used to go to France every year, where this sport originated.

Now all she can do is dream of her hey-day and reminisce over the many clippings of her that appeared in Life magazine, all the Toronto newspapers, and many American newspapers as well. Aside from newspaper publicity, Pathe News, 20th Century Fox, and British Gaumont Films have all filmed her. Ruth hopes to return to her given field as soon as the war is over.

But to get down to the facts of the case, her progress can best be understood chronologically. It all started in 1936 when Ruth was visiting Juan-les-Pins between recently-recaptured Cannes and Nice in southern France, just a few years after the sport was founded there by a few snow skiers who thought that the same thing could be done on water. The sport consists of a boat towing

Trinity Literature Institute is Host to Debating Union; Speakers Representative of Campus Societies

GOVERNMENT WINS

The resolution of the first debate of the Interfaculty Debating Union that "Graduates of the liberal arts courses are more essential to the development of our civilization than graduates in practical science" was carried by a large majority last night in Strachan Hall, Trinity College. The host was the Trinity Literary Institute and the speakers represented the best of the individual societies on the campus.

The President of the Union, David Kirkwood, was the Speaker and opened the debate.

Prime Minister Pat Orr, III Trinity, introduced the case for the government, saying that the liberal arts have existed longer than practical science. He spoke on the rational aspect versus the practical. He went on to say that the intellectual training of the liberal arts course is necessary to carry out the practical works of science.

The leader of the opposition, Flora Moffat, III St. Hilda's, said that life does not begin with thought but with action. She defined the word "practical" as meaning action rather than theory, therefore including in the scope of practical science the courses of Medicine, Dentistry, Forestry, and Applied Mathematics. She said that in ancient times philosophy, one of the main subjects of modern liberal study, incorporated the learning of medicine, physics, and various other branches of science. However, as each of these fields developed and became more specialized, it broke away from philosophy and formed its own school of study. This process continued until at the present time philosophy merely offers a history of its own existence. "Art has become stagnant," she declared.

Man, in order to exist, had to have his basic needs such as shelter and transportation attended to—needs which only the practical scientist could provide. The settlement of the content was

The opening concert of the Casavant Society of Toronto, featuring the distinguished organist, E. Power Biggs, and the Boy Choristers of St. Michael's Cathedral, was outstanding for its variety, virtuosity and precision.

Most impressive among first group of organ solos was Bach's Sheep May Safely Graze, with its flowing counter-melodies. After hearing the original organ work, one realizes the limitations of the piano arrangements. Also of interest in the first group was a 19th century work by Julius Reubke, a pupil of Liszt, which was characterized by its free treatment of sonata form and its surging energy.

The choral work of the boy choristers made a stimulating contrast in their enthusiasm and precision under the masterful and inspired direction of Rev. Dr. J. E. Ronan. The diction and discipline of the choir was clearly shown in Cesar Franck's Panis Angelicus. The novel choral arrangement of Strauss' Blue Danube was a fitting contrast to the ecclesiastical character of the other choral selections. Master Stephen Somerville, soprano soloist, sang Schubert's Ave Maria with mature feeling and clear enunciation.

The programme was concluded by a predominantly modern group of organ solos. Byrd's exquisitely graceful Pavane touched off the impressionistic Reed Grouse Waters of Sigfrid Karg-Elert, remarkable for its strange reedy tone.

Litanies by Jehan Alain was a modern treatment of an ancient plainsong theme which the composer prefaced with these words: "Reason has reached its limit, faith alone can go further." Mr. Biggs' technique was shown in its full brilliancy in Variations on an Old Christmas

Post War Employment

One of the pamphlets issued by the Canadian Youth Commission concerns post-war employment. It discusses increased social legislation as a means of raising employment. "Raising our domestic standards will aid full employment," concludes the pamphlet.

One aspect of this problem is not mentioned in the pamphlet. It is true that poverty is a great evil, but it is not true that material prosperity is in itself a great good. As long as the material prosperity is utilized towards the achievement of certain ends it will remain innocuous. One of the best ends to which the distribution of money can be aimed is that of education. At present a student must either come to University by accident of being born into a family who can support him or else he must exhibit such intelligence from an early age that he will gain scholarships all the way through. For the majority of people today, economic barriers hinder the liberty to follow any creative impulses or bent. The commercialistic and utilitarian tendency of our present society can only result in a lack of spontaneous creation.

The removal of poverty will mean the diminution of work and decrease in the present economic burden. The more free time, the greater will be the hours devoted to pure enjoyment of life, as Eric Gill points out. But education for adjustment to freedom must be made or lack of initiative will arise. With proper guidance, the increase of leisure time will ultimately create a more widespread knowledge of science or an understanding of art.

Correspondence

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Dear Madam,

As a general rule it would be useless to write to The Varsity to register disapproval of the result of a University debate. However, the decisions recently reached about the restoration of Germany have such important implications that we think they deserve further comment.

We must confess that when we saw the poster announcing the subject of the debate our thoughts were that whoever was upholding the affirmative side would be properly squelched. We were not at either of the debates; our knowledge of the result comes from the report in The Varsity in Monday's issue.

As the story is reported, and we trust that it is correct, the majority of debaters are willing to restore Germany to her former glory—and there seem to be no important qualifications.

Our question is, how can any person in their right senses come to such a decision? How is it that a free Germany can be compatible with a free world? In the past the combination has proved impossible and we see no reason to believe that it can be achieved in the near future—especially when the Germans admit that they are now planning another war in the near future. No doubt they expect an "easy out" from the democracies which the debates are willing to offer.

When are we going to learn that offering "the heart of friendship" to millions of Germans who hate us like poison will only bring ultimate disaster? There is absolutely no use taking the benign and credulous attitude that the Germans are really not so bad after all. If they were not, we would not have had these five years of hell. Our only hope for security lies in strict control of the Germans until the idea of world domination (which, by the way, was not born yesterday) is completely banished from their minds. This is a tremendous task which will require not decades but generations. Furthermore, we cannot achieve our aim by meek, mild and wine-coloured measures. Thank the Lord that the top men today, including General Eisenhower, Marshal Stalin, Lord Vansittart, and Secretary Morgenthau do not share our debaters' beliefs.

The point was mentioned that Germany felt herself an underdog after the last war. This is natural. Any nation that has her aims thwarted and is beaten in war will feel this. Germany will again feel it when she is defeated in this war. Moreover, this feeling breeds contempt and desire for revenge. This contempt can only be eradicated by strong measures, which were conspicuous by their absence after World War I. Yes, in spite of the "militaristic heel of the Allies," Germany got away with murder.

What, we wonder, would the boys who are fighting say? We can well imagine that those who are sacrificing their lives might be thoroughly disgusted with the result of the debate.

The debaters emphasize that Germans must have their "God-given freedom"—yes, freedom in which to start another war to make us slaves. You know, if we give them enough chances some day they might succeed! Which is more important, the freedom of our fighting men or that of the Germans?

It is impossible here to cover all the arguments which might have been put forward, but we do wish to state that false liberal-mindedness over the fate of the enemy will surely lead us to our doom. The two extremes—wholesale butchery and restoration as a free nation—should be avoided. Strong measures are needed to make sure that Germany will not perpetuate her crimes once more.

Yours till the next war,

W. J. STODDER, III Pol. Sci.
S. STYKOLT, III Pol. Sci.

(Editor's reply.—The two debates about which the above irate correspondents are writing did not, we feel, properly express student opinion on the matter. Neither side seized upon the phrase "major power" but rather argued the extremes on post-war settlement. Had the debaters fully comprehended this fact, we are certain that their thoughts would have been other than hymns of hate or democratic sops. An effective balance can be maintained between those two opposites. There seems to be a contradiction in the above letter when the authors state first that we must take no meek and mild measures and then mention that a compromise must be made between butchery and freedom, in regard to Germany's status after the war. One theory that has been recently promulgated is that Germany's present civilization results from a war three centuries ago in which the French so overran and devastated Germany that her culture has been retarded for many years. Such are the very effects of strong measures which you condone in one part of your letter and decry in another. You are assuming that the German racial ideals cannot be changed without force. It is evident that within the last fifteen years Hitler effected a complete change in ideology mainly by education of the youth. Another generation is being born into the world in Germany at the present time. Is it not possible to wipe out former ideas and instill more democratic ones in their stead by other than having a policed Germany? We agree that the two extremes should be avoided. We do not condone the implications found in the "strong measures" which you suggest.)

REVIVAL OR NO . . .

The dark depth of Varsity Stadium was lit eerily by a drifting luminous blob that circled aimlessly around the field to finally settle slowly onto the cross arm of the south goal posts. Soft sobs came from its greenish interior, to be followed by sighs and low moans. Then it spoke, in a haze of dank foggy breath.

"He's lost—lost—and I almost found him a shaver's age."

It shivered and the goal posts shook in a clatter of sudden noise.

"Whaddya mean, lost?" two cold wooden voices interrupted. "Who's lost?"

The speakers, a pair of mouldy old blue and white yardsticks, gathered up their chain and rattled on. "You intrigue me, hub—what cooks?"

The blob rose to sit atop the south-west goal post and spoke again. Its tones were low and all the yard lines on the field crowded to the south end to listen.

"I had a friend, a dear old friend, who used to visit me regularly every autumn. He was a noisy sort, and a rumpot to boot, but he was vigorous, too, and never did anyone any harm. Then, one day a few years back, he disappeared—and without telling me, his old pal, where he was going."

The yardsticks looked up sympathetically and chorused: "We know how ya feel; we've been going around together for years. We're awfully attached to each other."

The blob made a disgusting noise with his ectoplasm and continued: "I suspect that my friend met with foul play. Ever since he left I've been looking for him. I've been living in the centre field stripe, you know, No. 55, and I've searched the stadium high and low. I can't find him."

It moaned again and a couple seated in the bleachers left hurriedly.

"You know," it sighed, "a few days ago I thought he had come back. I heard a band and a lot of cheering, but when I stole out and hid in an empty coke bottle to watch, it wasn't him after all. It was a bunch of high school students. They reminded me of him, though—you should have seen those . . ."

"Nix!" muttered the yardsticks, rattling their chain ominously. "Yer giving me the galloping heeby-jeebies."

The blob slid down from the top of the south-west post and lit with a plop on the cross bar.

"Gee, I hope he'll come back soon," he moaned. "I loved that guy."

The yardsticks looked up politely.

"What was the guy's name?"

The blob shivered and sobbed out, "People called him 'Intercollegiate'."

"Then who are you?" asked the astounded yardsticks.

"Me?" moaned the blob, "my name's Ripparty. My full name is Ripparty Rapparty Ree—you must have heard of me."

The yardsticks broke their chain and grabbed each other in surprise. "Sure we've heard of you—and we knew that other guy Intercollegiate—he ran out on us, too." And with that they raced for their hideout in a locker under the covered stands.

Old Ripparty, with a final moan, drifted to the centre field stripe and sank slowly out of sight into the ground.

Meds Chalk up 6-0 Score in Group Four Soccer Championship with Foresters—Winning All Four Games

PEARSON STARS FOR MEDS

The Meds II soccer squad wound up their regular season of play yesterday afternoon by trouncing Forestry 6-0. This win not only gave the Meds the Group Four soccer championship, but also a perfect record of four wins out of four games.

There was a lot at stake in the game—a possible tie between Meds and Forestry for the group leadership—a possible play-off berth for either team—and Meds threw most everything they had into the game right from the first kick-off until the last whistle. Pearson played an exceptional game for Meds, and he was ably supported by Howarth and Wilson. Robinson was the pick of the losers, but his team-mates did not pass quite enough to capitalize on his skill.

The play during the first part of the first half was even. The game started with Meds on the attack, led by Lewis. Cannon broke up the spearhead; then the Meds returned. Cox and Carr snatched the play to the far end, but they missed their shot. Pearson, Wilson and Strathern rescued the play for Meds, took the ball right up the field, placed themselves around the Foresters' goal, and Carr Pearson was able to drive the ball in.

Pearson advanced, as soon as he received the kick-off, and Wilson made it 2-0 on a fluke, when his kick was deflected into the net by a Forester. After this, Forestry carried the play for a few minutes, but a charging penalty gave it back to Meds. Pearson and Irwin again combined, and this time Irwin was the scorer, who made it 3-0 on about the last play of the half.

The second half should have been more even but after the first few plays it was Meds all the way. Carr, Jenkins and Robinson started attacking at first, but Strathern managed to steal the ball, pass it to Howarth, who passed to Pearson, who passed back to Howarth, who scored, to make it 4-0. These same three carried the play alone, after the kick-off, until Pearson was able to deflect the ball in, off a pass across the goal mouth.

Jenkins, Robinson and Phillips were able to break through the tight Meds' defence, but goalie Krahan could not be beaten. Meds took the ball out with a series of passes, and while their whole team was up about the Forestry net, Wilson popped his second one in for the day.

With their six-goal margin and only a few minutes left in the game, Meds saw fit to cool their heels and the play was carried to the end of the game with no further scoring.

REVIVAL OR NO

From a recent editorial in the McGill Daily, we plagiarize the following excerpt: "That owing to the continued unwillingness of Toronto and Queen's authorities, our Athletics Advisory Board is going to press merely for a meeting of the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union. This meeting will plan for post-war resumption of intercollegiate activities."

In concluding, the editor states: "There appears to be no easy way in which the Athletics Board of the Universities of Toronto and Queen's can be made to co-operate in the re-institution of intercollegiate activities."

From these pointed and determined statements one cannot but pause to analyze the accusations more thoroughly.

Of the Intercollegiate Big Four, two universities, Western and McGill, are privately-endowed institutions. Queen's and Toronto are not in similar positions. Taking the McGill editorial at face value, the circumstance is one with privately-endowed institutions on one side of the proverbial fence and the publicly-endowed universities on the other.

To add further fuel to the argument, both McGill and Western have fielded rugby squads for the concluding two years. Each participated in games with the convenient clubs available. To their credit, however, neither travelled from its restricted boundaries. The circumstances were similar in hockey, with Queen's and Varsity on the outside looking in.

This fall the unwilling authorities at Queen's sanctioned a Tricolor football club. We in Toronto, with our unwilling authorities, are the lone remnant of a determined stand. True, these three have not tampered with the agreement of 1940, but the first step has been taken. The feeling of the students of the three campi brought admission.

McGill has actively agitated for the revival of intercollegiate competition during the present school year. Basketball and hockey were the goals of that mental disturbance. The mark was not attained, due to the aforementioned unwillingness of the Queen's and Toronto authorities to co-operate.

The daily inhabitants of this campus are in a very peculiar position. They look with envious eyes at their counterpart enjoying games in which their university teams are participating. They look towards the Athletic Directorate for restitution to the same standard found in the other three.

We have been severely criticized for our stand on this issue. We have been criticized for believing that the pen is still mightier than the sword. Perhaps our opinion is biased but from contacts with the student body we are certain that the athletic leaders of different faculties and colleges look upon the Directorate with no little animosity. And yet these leaders are not unreasonable. We have urged before, and do so again, that a public statement be made why Varsity has not kept pace with McGill, Western, and the "unwilling authorities" at Queen's.

HOT AND HEAVY

We are afraid that the O.C.E. gym will have to be rejuvenated after the pounding it took last night. Dental Nurses lost to U.C. Freshies 6-18 in a fast well-played game in which Mary Hicks and Jean Kaufman sank many a shot for U.C. with Anne Shepherd & Co. doing nobly on the guard line. Marg. Yorick and Pat Silversen played their usual fine game as the Dents struggled hard against superior odds—they deserve a lot of credit for one of the scrappiest teams on the campus.

P.H.E. Jrs., sparked by Ruth Wellstead, Sally Fox and Betty Jackes, waltzed to a 35-5 decision over U.C. Jrs. in the second feature. June Ward played a grand game for the losers but to no avail, as the P.H.E. stars swamped the weaker team.

In the third tilt, Saint Hilda's lost to the Meds-SPS. gals 41-5 in spite of the outstanding effort of Helen McNeil and Marg. Duff. Mary Barnett was outstanding for the winners and scored most of the points, although the whole team has improved and settled down to playing some real basketball.

The last game between Nurses and O.T. fell a bit short of the others in technical skill, but the players more than compensated for this by their terrific enthusiasm. The score was 25-10 for Nurses when the final whistle blew on a very close game.

ORDER OUT OF CHAOS

P.H.E. A team defeated Saint Mike's 15-6 yesterday in the semi-final baseball game. This means that P.H.E. has a corner on the baseball market since the final will be entirely in that faculty. P.H.E. A will meet P.H.E. B in the final game for the University Baseball Championship at Trinity field on Friday afternoon at 4:30 p.m. P.H.E. is noted for perfection in the line of sports, so it will be well worth your while to come out and see this final tilt. Baseball as played on the Varsity campus is not up to that seen in the various girls' leagues around town, but none-the-less it should prove to be an interesting encounter from the spectator's point of view.

PLEASE NOTE

Lois Dowson has asked us to reprint this notice for those of you who may have missed it yesterday. The P.H.E. Sr. game with Vic A originally called for at 8:30 tonight has been cancelled and will be rescheduled for a later date. All other games for that night will go on as usual. Watch our column for the new time on this game.

IT MAKES A DIFFERENCE, having a sense of assurance about your clothes. Not that you think of 'em unduly when they're right, but you're apt to worry when they're wrong. Therefore Northway's idea of assembling all the top-notchers for the college girl, both in coats, dresses and millinery on one floor for a complete fashion round-up is a grand gesture and one which merits your applause. Go to Fashionland, Third Floor, for your last-minute fashion inspirations, then try on coat, dress, hat, all in one fitting-room if you like. Gives you a chance to get the effect together, which helps, no fooling.

TAKE CARE of those lovely locks because they're likely to be the only one's you'll ever have. The Antoine Salon's scalp reconditioning treatments are designed to co-operate with nature to keep your hair soft, lustrous and healthy. It's remarkable what a difference a treatment or two does make . . . leaves the hair easier to handle, no matter how you do it, gives it sparkle and life and a becoming new freshness. World famous in the beauty business, the Antoine Salon is at Holt Renfrew's Phone AD 9441 for appointment.

IN JOE E. BROWN'S NEW BOOK, "Your Kids and Mine," in which he takes you entertaining the boys on a 150,000-mile trip of the war zones, he remarks that one of the wonders of the war is the way those army nurses can keep their faces clean and feminine-looking in the midst of dirt, work and gunfire. Well, it's every woman's secret that a reliable cleansing cream like Du Barry is standard equipment for complexion-care, whether the going is rough or smooth. After hours of workout in a gym, a swim in the tank, or even a clean-up after a busy day of shopping, Du Barry is tops with the gal who knows the value of daintiness.

THE SMART E. F. SPRINGER SHOP at 56 Bloor Street West is all set with the news in furs for 1945, and you are invited to go in and try on those smartly designed numbers in muskrat with a look of good mink, Hudson, Persian, etc. Springer's build fur coats for tomorrow and tomorrow. They have a knack of expressing the ultimate in luxury plus durability. Once you get to know the E. F. Springer shop, the salon with the sort of definitely ultra modern interior which makes you realize that Bloor Street is Toronto's "Fifth Avenue," you're likely to make Springer's a habit for fur shopping.

A GOOD LINIMENT is a pretty handy thing to have around the locker. Sloan's is tops in the liniment field. Doctors recommend it because they say it's more effective than the average liniment. A rub with Sloan's over an area of muscular aches and pains stimulates surface circulation, drives out the pain by getting nature to get busy and work a little harder, while the anaesthetic qualities of the liniment ease the pain at the same time. If you want to be certain you're asking for the best, ask for Sloan's when you ask for a liniment. Want proof? Just inquire of your family doctor.

FOR WIMMEN ONLY! an' let this be a lesson to yahl!

One day a newsy letter arrived from overseas for a Wynmwood gal. That same night she decided to show it to her girl friend who was on door duty, since the writer of the epistle was a mutual acquaintance. And what happened! The little friend on door duty, card that she was, began reading it aloud, grossly distorting the innocent facts as she ad-libbed for three passionate paragraphs—to the vast amusement of the fast-gathering crowd whose guffaws got louder and louder with each succulent addition. Just then two serious-minded Soc. & Phil. men, emerging from a meeting, passed by and one of them was heard to mutter as he slunk out the door, "That teaches me! I'll never write to a girl in residence again!" . . . no doubt making a disgusting noise with his teeth. . . .

A lot of stories have come out about the Babes in Burwash. At the beginning of the term, two usually sophisticated seniors were making their debut in the dining hall. But all unconscious of the Burwash dinner hour, they came fully five minutes late. A MAN approached them and cheerfully exclaimed: "Next time you girls will be locked out . . . with a key." Thinking this was perhaps part of a welcoming committee, or one of the benevolent Emmanuel students having his little joke, they blandly beamed back . . . and beamed . . . and beamed . . . while the more enterprising one barely suppressed a wink. 'Twas not till later—and much later—that they were to learn the identity of their new-found friend . . . the Burwash porter—and he wasn't kidding.

Oh, what with the man-power shortage . . .

A Hither would not be complete without a perfunctory story. Here is our mainly due to improved transportation and the invention of the printing press was the means of spreading the new and liberal thoughts in the world. She concluded by saying that Arts theories were useful as they were functions of practical science.

"The post-war problems in Germany and the re-education of the German child's mind from the urge to kill to the urge to live a peaceful life is purely a matter for the schools and with the schools' liberal arts," stated Millwood O'Shaughnessy, in defence of the government. "The ability to manufacture and to make better tanks will be no help in the righting of this problem."

"It is impossible to have any form of democratic government without liberal arts as liberal arts develops man's free will and initiative." She went on to say that any man who is specialized in one field, and has no knowledge of any of the other branches of study, is not in the intellectual sense a true man, and that harmony in life and in our outlook on life is attainable only in the study of liberal arts.

Cyril Fry, II S.P.S., admitted that artsmen were essential to modern society, but "not as essential as the engineer." The first things studied by man were not liberal arts but the manufacture of spears and other implements which were necessary to his mode of life. He stated that the reason for the fall of the ancient civilizations was the lack of transportation and that in the future the vast advances which this science is now making will tend to make future wars impossible.

He attributed the cause of wars to bungling diplomacy rather than to the scientist. The motion was then put to the house for open discussion.

Treaty-Making

the threat of more radical ideas in the rapidly growing Russian Bolshevism.

Just as mistrust and desire for a balance of power in Europe in 1815 resulted in early disputes, so fears of Germany and Russia, coupled with a knowledge of individual weakness and a lack of confidence in democracy as a strong influence for peace, prevented lasting stability after 1919. Prof. McInnis pointed out. Since there was no concerted attempt either to uphold wholeheartedly, or modify, the treaty, it was left to work itself out with disastrous effects, he said.

The outstanding failure of the treaty, Prof. McInnis asserted, was its lack of economic elasticity, evident when the small countries, finding themselves by no means economically self-sufficient, discovered the system of free enterprise was impossible in the face of economic barriers. Thus, Fascist states, intent upon acquiring raw materials at the expense of their neighbours, rose to smash the settlement.

Prof. McInnis submitted that our post-war plans in Europe this time must effect an initial compromise to avoid the most explosive grievances, then adjust the old order to the needs that arise. He stated it was essential that public opinion believe the settlement is the best possible, and that adjustments for faults will be made, for the working of the peace settlement is more important than the treaty, and it is what we do after we start that counts.

DOUG LLOYD

Student Concert

Massey Hall

It augurs well for the cultural life of Toronto that the programme of the Secondary School Concerts have to be given twice this year to accommodate the students. At Tuesday night's concert Sir Ernest MacMillan conducted the orchestra with Lillian Smith, soprano, as the guest artist.

The orchestra began with the gay and colourful Overture, "Roman Carnival," by Berlioz. This composer knew how to use each instrument to get the most varied and subtle effects, and the orchestra as well as the audience enjoyed it. Bizet's Suite, "L'Arlesienne" No. 1 followed. The highlight of this melodic piece was the saxophone solo in the first movement.

Miss Smith has excellent control of her voice, and her high tones are especially beautiful and clear. Most successful musically was her first number, the Aria and Recitative, "Ballata" from "Pagliacci" by Leoncavallo. Schubert's Avie Maria was pleasant, but not moving. Interest was added by the flute obligato in Lo, Hear the Gentle Lark, by Bishop.

Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1 concluded the first half of the programme. The orchestra abandoned themselves to the exhilarating spirit of the gypsy music.

The musical climax of the evening was Dvorak's "New World" Symphony. Unfortunately, it suffered from a little ruggedness and lack of polish, not having the easy flow of the perfectly mastered work. On the whole, the carefully chosen programme was well played and enthusiastically received.

Sir Robert Watson-Watts English Inventor Of Radar To Talk On Scientists' Role

Lecture in Convocation Hall Tomorrow Night will be on "Scientists at War." Speaker is F.R.S.

R.C.I. MEET

The inventor of radar, Sir Robert Watson-Watts, F.R.S., will be the speaker at the Royal Canadian Institute lecture Saturday night at 8:15 in Convocation Hall. His subject will be "Scientists at War."

Sir Robert is Scientific Adviser to the Air Ministry (London) on Telecommunications, and Vice-Controller of Communications Equipment, Ministry of Aircraft Production.

After graduating in Electrical Engineering, Sir Robert became interested in Meteorology. While studying a device for locating the direction and path of thunderstorms, he noticed airplanes interfered with the reception. From this developed the radio-locator, a secret device which enabled R.A.F. fighters to be forewarned of the approach of enemy fighters, and which helped to win the Battle of Britain.

Sir Robert is the mainspring of the whole allied organization dealing with radar.

He flew from England, arriving in Montreal last Wednesday.

The lecture is open to the public.

Origin of 'Zoot Suit' Traced by Professor At Commerce Meeting

The Commerce Club met last evening in the Women's Union to hear Mr. R. L. Birdwhistel, of the Anthropology department, discuss the race situation in the United States. Mr. Birdwhistel showed the race situation to be a dangerous one, easily aggravated by big business or even enemy forces who capitalize on popular discontent by breeding artificial hatred among minorities.

With this hatred they no longer see the faults of law or education or political policies, he said, but blame instead an unfortunate minority for the state of affairs. He said that the United States was likely to become an extremely reactionary nation after the war.

Tracing the history and development of the "Zoot suit," Birdwhistel went back to the history of California and the surrounding states where Mexican emigrants came up as farm labourers a century ago. The Mexicans felt lost in a new environment, where their beliefs and customs meant nothing to any but themselves, he said. To show their equality and to identify themselves, they developed a "uniform"—the "Zoot suit," he explained.

Birdwhistel showed a similar picture of the situation in Detroit, where southern hill people and also Negroes, were brought up to alleviate the labour shortage. They were unaccustomed to laws, and to high wages, he explained. "Encouraged and abetted" by big business interests, religious organizations and private individuals, the minorities came to hate and fear one another, he pointed out. "Divide and conquer" is the policy of these men at the top who, like Hitler, are afraid of democracy, he emphasized.

Birdwhistel drew an analogy here, showing how in Canada the French are blamed for the zombie army, the liquor situation in Ontario, and anything else causing discontent.

For the remainder of the meeting, Birdwhistel answered questions on the political and racial situation in the United States.

Vince Regan, vice-president of the Commerce Club, thanked him on behalf of the members, and refreshments were then served.

McGill Takes Action For Special Courses For Ex-Servicemen

Desire to Accommodate by January Those Who Are Applying for Entrance to University

KEYES HEADS BOARD

Montreal—(CUP)—Executive action is now being taken at McGill to set up courses by January to accommodate the ex-servicemen who are currently applying for entrance to the university. This may require the institution of additional courses for students who commence their work in January, as well as special courses in the summer school. Professor David A. Keyes has been appointed director of the special courses and will act as the chairman of the Board set up by the university.

It is estimated that the accommodations for the faculties of Engineering, Arts and Commerce will be increased to three times the present number, those of Honour Science to twice the number and those of General Science to two and a half times as many as there are now.

Among the suggestions for this reconstruction is to make the university day from 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., with lectures until 4:00 p.m. and labs and tutorial hours in the morning.

Major E. D. E. Hoskin, president of the Veterans' Association, said in an interview with the McGill Daily: "This is a very commendable programme and will enable discharged men to recommence their education with the minimum of time wasted. Experience gained now in adjusting timetables to suit a few veterans will be invaluable after the war when ex-servicemen will be coming to McGill in ever-increasing numbers."

St. Mike's Debate Upholds C.C.F.

At the debate between St. Mike's Senate Club and Loretto held last night the resolution that the C.C.F. should form the post-war government of Canada was upheld 23-18. The affirmative, upheld by Ruth O'Shaughnessy and Sally Chioveti, stated that the C.C.F. was the only party with a planned development of our resources. They maintained that the old parties had failed to provide adequate planning after the last war.

Senator Lyons and Desmond Fitzgerald, speakers for the negative, said that the C.C.F. lacked leaders of astuteness and diplomacy for the troubled days ahead. There was no disagreement about the end of both sides, which was social justice, but the danger lay in the wrong means to the end. The same end could be attained under the traditional parties with no risk, said the negative.

London Health Officer Visits Nursing School

Dr. George F. Buchan, Health Officer of Willesden Borough, London, England, visited the University School of Nursing yesterday morning. He discussed the various branches of nursing in England and future plans for social security in that country.

Dr. Buchan also stated that although the English government is pledged to give complete health and nursing service in the future to 100 per cent of her population, at the present time there is only half the required accommodation and nursing personnel.

His first-hand information on the work of nurses and doctors during the blitz was of special interest to students at the School of Nursing.

The Indispensable Man To be Theolog's Topic

Dr. Frederiek Bronkema, M.A., Ph.D., Th.D., noted author and theologian of the Dutch Reformed Church, will speak at a V.C.F. meeting Monday at 12:30 in Room 211, Anatomy Building.

His subject for the Monday meeting will be "The Indispensable Man." An opportunity will be given for questions and discussion. Lunches will be available.

Record Hour

The record programme, held daily from 3:45 to 5 in the Women's Common Room at U.C., is open to the men and women of every college and faculty. The programme: Hindemith—Kleine Kammer Musik. Bach—Prelude and Fugue in C minor. Schubert—Quintet for Strings.

Ethiopian Church Is S.C.M. Topic

"The Church in Ethiopia" was the subject of an address given by Dr. Samuel B. Mercer yesterday at noon in the Board Room of Trinity College.

He gave a brief outline of the history of Ethiopia in which he stressed the backward nature of the civilization. He outlined the religious history from the beginning of the first church in 340 A.D. up to the present time.

After describing the interior and ceremonies of their church, Dr. Mercer emphasized the fact that they were a great religious people, stressing ritual, and that about four-fifths of their population is Christian.

Dr. Mercer went to Ethiopia as a representative of a group of ecclesiastical scholars in 1929 and later compiled a standard text, "Ethiopic Text of Book of Ecclesiastics."

After the address there was an open discussion.

F. H. Brigden Lectures on Art

Yesterday afternoon Mr. F. H. Brigden gave a lecture on his exhibition of watercolours in Hart House. Afterwards, in an interview with The Varsity, Mr. Brigden stated that his own insistence of a high technique in painting was probably due to the teachings of his father. Mr. Brigden's father was a pioneer in wood-engraving process work and he impressed on his son the same essentials for details and precision, said the artist.

In contrast to the work of many moderns who refer to his work as "representative" or even "photographic," he said that his watercolours are comprehensible. He belongs to the older conservative school of Bryan and F. L. Smith, who believe that depth of feeling and artistic individuality are necessary to make a landscape painting a work of art, he explained.

Mr. Brigden also stated that Cochrane and Russel Fyvie were his ideals in the handling of design and watercolour. His work in watercolours is only a hobby or, rather a side-line, because he has found, like other Canadian artists, that it is impossible to support himself by his art alone, he admitted.

Fallen Of Two Wars To Be Commemorated On Remembrance Day

Russian Foreign Policy From 1885 to 1905 Discussed by Pares

Sir Bernard Pares yesterday continued his series of lectures on contemporary Russia, with particular reference to Russia's foreign policy during the years from 1881 to 1905, and the effect of the Japanese War of 1905 on this policy.

During the autocracy which existed in the reign of Alexander III there co-existed a period of peace for Russia, but when Alexander died, in 1894, Russian autocracy and the period of peace died with him, said Sir Bernard.

At that time Russia adopted the policy of spreading eastward into Asia, he said. Liberation of the Balkans from German domination was impossible because of internal strife, the speaker explained.

Russia tried to eliminate this reactionism by removing or converting the foreign elements within, said Sir Bernard.

By 1899 the Japanese had treaties on an equal basis with all countries, and began to make great strides toward civilization, said Sir Bernard. In 1894 the Japanese won the war with China for the Korean Peninsula, but Russia, Germany and France radically changed the peace terms which the Japanese had dictated to China and put Japan in the position of an outcast, he said. Thus, he explained, developed the germ of war between Japan and Russia.

The Japanese opened war on Russia without a declaration, by a lightning blow which crippled the Russian fleet at Port Arthur, continued Sir Bernard. The remainder of the Russian fleet, stationed in the Baltic, was sent around the world to attack the Japs from the rear, but they were completely destroyed, he said.

According to Sir Frederick Morris the Japanese were victorious because they understood that war was the affair of the whole nation, whereas the Russian intelligentsia showed complete disinterest, quoted Sir Bernard.

The subject of Sir Bernard's next lecture will be the first Russian Revolution of 1904-5.

Founder of World SCM To Speak Next Sunday

Dr. John R. Mott, Christian World statesman and Student Christian Movement pioneer, will speak at a special student church service in St. Paul's Church, Bloor Street East, this Sunday evening, Nov. 12, at 7:00 p.m. His topic will be "Students Rebuilding a Broken World."

Dr. Mott has travelled across Canada as a secretary for the Y.M.C.A. and in this capacity made his first visit to the University campus. Since then his travelling experience has been extensive.

He has worked with the World Commission of the Y.M.C.A. and was organizer of the International Missionary Council and founder of the World Student Christian Movement. He is known on camp all over the world as one of the outstanding leaders of the student world, said Rev. H. E. Lute, of the University S.C.M.

Mr. Lute remembers Dr. Mott as a man "with a firm grasp upon essential things of the Christian faith combined with a tremendous range of experience in world affairs."

Dr. Mott will meet the students after the service and will welcome questions and discussion.

Officiating at the service will be Canon F. H. Wilkinson, Rev. Victor Sathianadhan, Rev. G. M. Hutchinson, of the Canadian S.C.M., and Rev. H. Lute.

Representatives of Various Organizations to Place Wreaths at Base of Tablets at Foot of Memorial Tower

UNITS TO MARCH PAST

Tomorrow, at a Remembrance Day Service conducted by the Alumni Federation, the University will commemorate the fallen of two wars. The fourth list of those former students who have lost their lives in the present conflict has been included in the order of service.

Representatives of the Canadian Government, the University, the Alumni Federation, and the Students' Administrative Council will place wreaths at the base of the tablets in front of the Memorial Tower at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Following this, the procession from Simcoe Hall—including Hon. Albert Matthews, the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, President H. J. Cody, the Senate of the University, and representatives of the different faculties and schools—will proceed to the saluting base in front of University College.

The University training organizations, the U.N.T.D., the C.O.T.C., the U.A.S., and the C.R.C.C., will be formed up on the front campus. At the conclusion of the service the Lieutenant-Governor will take the salute as the units march past. The troops will then proceed to the Memorial Tower to salute the Tablets honouring those who fell in World War I.

An invitation to attend the service has been extended to relatives of the fallen.

Round Table Discussion Hears W. Woodside On German Peace Terms

Mr. Willson Woodside, well-known writer and radio commentator, together with Prof. Ralph Flentley, of the Dept. of History, and Dr. Karl F. Helleiner, of the Dept. of Political Economy, took part in the first "Round Table Discussion" at the Economics Building last night. The subject of the discussion was "How Hard a Peace for Germany?" Chairman of the meeting was Prof. B. Wilkinson, of the Dept. of History.

The discussion took the form of a series of questions asked by the chairman and answered by the committee. To the question "With what sort of Germany will we make peace?" Mr. Woodside replied that we should not deal with Nazis. Professor Flentley then made the suggestion that we could deal with exiled Germans. Difficulty was anticipated, however, for a democratic German government could not be formed until long after the end of the war.

Mr. Wilkinson stated that economics professors were inclined to discuss political problems too detachedly. "That's why I am here," retorted Mr. Woodside, amid laughter.

In answer to the question, "Are we going to leave a German state?" Prof. Flentley said that he thought Germany should be reduced in size, but that it was a very serious matter to hand over East Prussia to Poland, as the former country contains about two and a quarter million Germans whose ancestors have lived there for a long time. "The repatriation involved," declared Prof. Helleiner, "would require the transfer of about six million people." Mr. Woodside approved giving part of Germany to Holland to compensate for Holland's loss of lands through flooding. On one point the entire committee agreed—Germany should not be decentralized.

Deindustrialization, stated Prof. Helleiner, would create real starvation in Germany. "Can we actually afford," continued the professor, "to shut down coal deposits, iron mines and copper mines, and to write them off our balance sheet?"

The discussion by the economics experts was followed by a free discussion period, in which the audience asked questions.

In Memoriam

Twenty-six years ago armistice celebrants swept through their requiems and parades, streamers and jazz bands with an attitude very antithetical to that of many of us attending the service tomorrow morning. When we pause to turn back the pages of history, it will be manifest that the passage of time has ironed out former joys and sorrows so keenly felt two decades ago.

The spirit of '18 with the utterance of its pious sentiments and plans for permanent peace will almost be impossible to recapture. Slightly more than twenty years has shown us that the war to end wars did not fulfil its proclamations. The peace of 1918 was climaxed with depression, while the war of '39 was prefaced with plebiscites and annexations. And now in the sixth year of a ferocious struggle we are again faced with the seemingly hopeless task of rebuilding and reconstructing.

The disillusionment which has descended upon those holding great expectations must be turned into a dual weapon. We cannot dwell upon the contemplation of past failures. From the '20's to the '40's we pointed out the doubtful side of democracy and compared it to the better aspects of socialism. We desecrated the sombre economic shadows which engulfed us from time to time. The hour now approaches when we must build upon the very realization of our complaints. Sceptical and cynical attitudes alone are symbolic of nascent thought. Constructive planning can be effected if we are prepared to accept some hypothesis on which to erect our proposed system.

The issue for which we are fighting and for which generations before us have fought is relatively simple. We are checking a power before it dominates the world and destroys our economic, political and social liberties. Whatever may be the faults of the set-up of Britain and her allies, they are still, nevertheless, the bulwarks of freedom.

One fact that we have learned from our second World War is that the old bones of neutrality and international fellowship are dead issues. The last two universal struggles have respected no such ideals. Ideas of pacifism have only been played upon to weaken national strength. The awareness of these factors is the basis of future planning. The Armistice Service tomorrow serves as a rather terrifying reminder of the number of lives in this University alone which have been given up for the maintenance of an equal balance of power and its liberalizing commitments. As the Honour Roll increases day by day, we must strive towards the establishment of a new order which will decrease the expendability of our youth as well as avoid the culmination of events to an overbalance of power.

The men whom we honour tomorrow represent the belief in a solid ideal. The peace which we will commemorate symbolises an attempt towards the achievement of these two ideals. "Nothing is here for tears, nothing to wail or knock the breast; no weakness, no contempt, dispraise or blame; nothing but well and fair and what may quiet us in a death so noble."

CAMSI

One of the most enterprising University organizations within the last eight years has been that of the Canadian Association of Medical students and Internes. Representatives from all over Canada will gather in Montreal this week-end to discuss medical health planning for Canada, as well as other briefs prepared by universities across Canada.

The work of CAMSI has shown intelligent planning. In the last few years it has persuaded the government to admit medical students of fifth and sixth year standing into the Canadian Army Medical Corps. They have also set up a Canadian Internes Board to satisfy students and hospitals with internships. To date this plan has worked very well but does not find all the co-operation that it should in Quebec.

The briefs selected for consideration will have far reaching effects if they are ever brought into actuality. The University of Western Ontario has prepared data on methods of making a film library of medical films available for loan to universities and students. The University of Toronto will discuss the possibilities of improvement in medical curriculum while the University of Alberta has made a study of interne conditions and opportunities for improving them.

CAMSI has a difficult future ahead of it in the decisions which it must consider in the post-war era. Already exhibiting progressive thought, there is little doubt that it will be adequate to its future problems.

Correspondence

The Editor,
The Varsity.
Dear Sir,

In your edition of Nov. 3rd a letter appears, signed "A Member of the R.C.N." to which I feel obliged to reply.

In the first place, if the anonymous writer reads into my letter any slur against what the Navy uniform stands for, I do indeed owe him an apology for even the possibility of such an interpretation.

My remark was made jocularly about the uniform as a garment not as a symbol. Even as I first took jocular issue with the astonishing caption, "Clothes Make the Man." It is with this basically false philosophy of satisfying externals rather than ideals that I have taken issue.

Incidentally, as you yourself know, I have been misquoted on the statement of your October 16th issue, and I would ask that you retract it as freely as you printed it in the first place.

Sincerely,

W. J. MACNEILL

(Editor's Note.—We do not think that every reader of The Varsity took Mr. MacNeill's remarks as seriously as the anonymous members of the R.C.N. It was quite obvious that he intended no such ill-founded reference. What we do take exception to is the fact that MacNeill states that we know that he was misquoted. We regret that we know no such thing. The reporter who quoted his statement maintains that she did not misconstrue what he told her. If, however, such was the case, and the three witnesses which the young cub claims to have had, were wrong, then we apologize profusely.)

Eaton Auditorium

Heard in joint recital last night at the Eaton Auditorium were two young Toronto artists, Phyllis Knight, pianist, and Josef Pach, violinist.

The gracious concert manner of the shy young violinist won his audience almost before a single note was played. Opening with the Handel Sonata in D, No. 4, he gave a neat and precise performance.

Supersonics Rock Nation's Capital: Research Council Bigwig Immediately Solves Problem

EARMUG WEEPS

The entire city of Ottawa was rocked by a peculiar earthquake the other day. The tremblings were experienced only in the immediate vicinity of Ottawa, and the seismograph at the Dominion Observatory recorded no unnatural disturbances. Because of this, the news was not allowed to be published and it was by mere chance that one of the Cat's kittens happened to be in the city that day visiting the Milk Controller that the gruesome details came to light.

Professor K. B. Johnstone, of the Research Council, immediately went to work on the problem and by means of secret scientific apparatus (radarsound direction finder) discovered that because of the geographical location of the city certain sonic vibrations emanating from Toronto had caused sympathetic vibrations to occur in Ottawa.

Further investigation traced the source of the sounds to the campus of the University of Toronto and to the BELL IN THE U.C. TOWER!

Have a Coca-Cola = Come on over

... or keeping youth happy at home

Keeping young folks happy at home is mostly a matter of having a house in which they and their friends feel welcome. A radio, or a phonograph and some records; a place to dance, a little food and they're happy. And don't forget Coca-Cola... it's always a big attraction for the young crowd. It says better than words, Come on over... we're glad to see you. Be sure there's "Coke" in your icebox. In all the world there's no more cordial invitation, nor one more refreshing, than the three simple words... Have a "Coke."

For Women...

In the first tilt of three games played in the U.T.S. gym last night, P.H.E. Freshies blanked Meds-S.P.S. Freshies 36-9. It was a slow game, particularly in the last quarter. Meds-S.P.S. had Mary Struthers as their best player, but P.H.E.'s Tracy Stinson and Grace Barnett were outstanding.

In the second game P.H.E. pulled out from Physio with a score of approximately 26-6. Unfortunately, nobody seems to know just what it was. Even we don't know.

The third game saw Vic Freshies trounce St. Hilda's Freshies 15-14. The play was close, but fairly slow. Both teams have improved and the game more like college stuff than any of the other Freshie teams, excepting P.H.E., who are really hot.

Knox Edges Wycliffe, Make Soccer Play-offs

Knox nosed out Wycliffe 2-1 in a closely-contested soccer game on the back campus last night. This gave Knox the championship of their group and assured them of one of the four play-off spots. Group IV was decided the day before when Meds II downed Forestry. Groups I and II are already conceded to Meds I and Trinity respectively. The dates for the semi-finals will be announced soon by the Athletic Office.

Knox and Wycliffe both scored in the first half to make it 1-1 as they changed ends. Knox got the deciding goal midway through the second, and successfully protected their lead for the remainder of the game. Wycliffe had a goal by them disallowed when a spectator got in the way of the play, and after this tough break they couldn't seem to click around the nets.

Gord Cunningham and Bye were the marksmen for Knox, each registering one of the tallies. Wright got the lone goal for Wycliffe.

displaying dramatic beauty in tone picture and modulation. The Wieniawski Second Concerto in D minor was in contrast to the spriteliness of the Handel and was also capably handled. The second movement is better known to the average listener than the remaining portion. Here the melody evolved itself to a sparkling mood reminiscent of the gypsy airs.

The second group of Pach solos were outstanding in their sparkling brilliance. In the Kreisler Allegro the artist was able to display his outstanding technical ability. His mastery in dexterous bowing was superb. The Moussorgsky Hopak gave an opportunity for the technical mastery and the artist's instinctive musicianship to be combined, and the result was a truly brilliant selection—a gem which highlighted the programme. The encore, Theme on a Busy Street, quite enchanted the audience—their laughter was as spontaneous as their enthusiastic applause.

Praise must be afforded Leo Barkin for his splendid and sympathetic assistance to Mr. Pach.

The first group of solos by Phyllis Knight did not, we felt, give a true portrayal of the artist's ability. She seemed lost in the attempt to display her technique, forgetting that the primary responsibility of an artist is to interpret the thoughts of the composer. In the Adagio Canabile of the Beethoven Sonata in C minor the pathos symbolic of the movement was not present and the entire sonata lacked a true depth of feeling. She seemed more at home in the Bach Prelude and Fugue in B flat major. Here the technical requirements are rigid, the short phrasing is less demanding, and within the scope of the pianist.

In the second group the artist settled down to a more musical performance. The languid tones of the Chopin Prelude in E minor were warm and singing. The Scherzo in C sharp minor was bright and triumphant. Its chords are demanding, and interspersed are the soft arpeggios which she handled in a masterly fashion. Here Miss Knight seemed to have overcome her tendency to sacrifice the melody notes. She is, however, inclined to fast tempos—this was the outstanding criticism of the dramatically melancholy Chopin Nocturne in B flat major. In this the bass accompaniment

For Men...

Tomorrow our University holds another Remembrance Day. As we remember the fallen of the last great conflict, we also pay a silent tribute to the heroes of the present. Many of our outstanding Varsity athletes are among Canada's armed forces. Those who remain here are doing their utmost in intramural athletics or playing for teams outside the University. No longer can they earn their "T" in intercollegiate sport, something for which our boys have a great deal of respect and admiration. All the old intercollegiate spirit has been diverted into new channels.

This brings back fond memories of pre-war Varsity days. The athletic life of the University will return to its former standards as soon as the boys return. Until then, let us maintain the spirit and sportsmanship which has been ours to hold, and cheer the veterans back to the sports fields.

School Lacrosse Teams Beat Meds and Trinity

Senior School are tied for the leadership of Group I in Lacrosse with Meds I as the result of yesterday's game which went to the S.P.S. team by a 10-8 score. School deserved the win as they fought hard and played sound lacrosse throughout. The Meds' team did not play their men well nor pass the ball enough, and lost out as a result.

School got away to an early lead by scoring four goals to Meds' one in the first period. Meds pepped up in the second quarter and outscored the engineers 3-2 to make the half-time score 6-4 for S.P.S. Play was very close in the last half and with one minute to play the game was all tied up 8-8. Craibbe of School then got a penalty and while he was off Meds neglected to check their men and Turner and Steele of School both tallied. The game ended with the score 10-8 in favour of Senior S.P.S.

Keary and Turner were the high scorers for School, while Nikaido and Rae led the Medsmen.

In the second game of the afternoon, School IV downed Trinity 4-3. School scored two goals in the first period and two in the last to gain the necessary margin of victory. Trinity managed to put in one goal in each of the first three quarters but could not score in the final one. Denham, Mark and Butterworth played well for School, while Risbury and Norris started for Trinity.

was apt to be detrimental to the lucid tones of the theme. The Liszt Rigoletto Concert-Paraphrase was not difficult to follow. The running passages were easy and flowing and were kept in the proper perspective—a fitting climax

ARTIFICIAL RESPIRATION COURSE

The University Health Service, with the co-operation of the University of Toronto Athletic Association, is offering to men students and staff a course (lecture, practice, and examination) on Resuscitation, starting Monday, November 20th—Debates Room—Hart House—4:45 p.m.

All men enrolled in Life Saving Courses must take this Course to qualify for their awards. Personnel of the U.N.T.D., the C.O.T.C., and the U.A.S. should take the course.

To facilitate time-table arrangements the lecture period, the practical work and the examination will be duplicated as indicated below. This will give all interested students an opportunity to take the complete course in two periods. If interested, kindly sign the list at the Athletic Office. For further details see either Mr. Griffiths or Mr. McCutcheon.

All male students and staff in the University are eligible to enrol and take the course.

Men who satisfactorily complete the course will qualify for the Resuscitation Service Badge of the Royal Life Saving Society.

MORTSON STARS

St. Mike's squelched any hopes that S.P.S. III might have had of getting into the Mulock Cup play-offs by trouncing them 13-0 at the Stadium yesterday. The game was not well played, but the Irish had a decided edge throughout the game and deserved to win. Their tackling in particular was much more accurate than that of S.P.S. and they outkicked School throughout the game.

The only scoring of the first half was a single point registered by Fred O'Brien on a kick that Phelan and Fordyce combined failed to run out from behind their line. The second half showed more of the St. Mike's power as their ground drives began to knock off large gains. Mortson went over for the first touch from about fifteen yards out near the end of the third quarter and Fred O'Brien converted it. Mancini intercepted a School pass and ran thirty yards before he was pulled down to set St. Mike's up in the S.P.S. end of the field and they stayed there for the rest of the game. Mortson got his second touch of the day on a plunge from the three late in the fourth quarter. Fred O'Brien again converted, to make it 13-0. The game ended soon afterwards with S.P.S. trying to gain the score they needed by means of long forwards, but few of these were completed.

S.P.S.'s lack of subs was probably what brought about their downfall. They only had two, and due to injuries this

PART I (25) REMEMBRANCE DAY SERVICE

The University Detachment, C.R.C.C., will participate in the University Remembrance Day Service on Saturday, 11-NOV-44.

Dress:

Regulation uniform will be worn with beige topcoat, heavy dark shoes, beige lisle stockings and brown gloves. Warm jacket and undergarments should be worn. Particular care should be taken to ensure that hair is neat and secured so as to clear the shoulders. Nothing will be carried in the hands. Books and other impedimenta may be left in Room 82, U.C., prior to Assembly.

Assembly:

The Detachment will assemble on the North Campus, directly West of the Memorial Tower.

Forming Up:

Platoons will fall in on markers at 1020 hrs. Roll will be called. Detachment will march off through the Tower following the C.O.T.C. and will form up North of the roadway East of the U.C. doorway.

War Memorial:

On passing the University War Memorial, "eyes right" will be given in succession by platoons.

Ceremonial Procedure:

Commands will be given for procedure as required throughout the service. All ranks will stand at rigid attention for the "Last Post," two-minute silence, Reveille and the National Anthem. Officers only will salute.

Dismissal:

Detachment will be dismissed immediately at the close of the service but may remain in position for the March Past of the University Navy and Air Force units.

Service of Remembrance and Consecration

The annual Service of Remembrance and Consecration will be held on Saturday, Nov. 11, in front of University College, commencing at 10:40 a.m.

All lecture and laboratory classes will be withdrawn from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. on that day.

instructing the Wartime Salvage Board to impound the bell. I. M. Junkmann, former well-known Salvage Engineer, head of the Board, when interviewed, stated the bell should make an excellent secret weapon, and that by adjusting its frequency, vibration could be produced in almost any place in the world.

The U.C. Congress immediately called a meeting to protest the removal of the bell. An attempt was made to get a certain American politician, one T. E. Hooley, to address Congress to stimulate interest in a petition which will be circulated. Unfortunately, Mr. Hooley could not be contacted. Rumour has it he has been disappointed in love and is living the life of a recluse. A telegram from his secretary consisted merely of the words "Awww shadapp."

Mr. B. Earmug, of the U.C. Fil, weeping vigorously and copiously, sobbed: "After all, it is us for whom the bell tolls."

Dr. Hank Kodak immediately called a meeting of the Board of Governors. Unfortunately, this meeting was held in camera and it is not known what developed. (That fixed us.)

Tangent McSliderville, president of the Engineering Society, said he hoped the government did not get any ideas about the Skule cannon. "After all, on D-Day, we must have the cannon." He would not explain what was going to occur on D-Day, but our spies uncovered a plot for the invasion of Whitney Hall.

But each one, man by man, has won imperishable praise, each has gained a glorious grave --- not that sepulchre of earth where in their glory is enshrined, remembrance that will live on the lips, that will blossom in the deeds of their countrymen the world over. For the whole earth is the sepulchre of heroes; monuments may rise and tablets set up to them in their own lane, but on far off shores there is an abiding memorial that no pen or chisel has traced; it is graven, not on stone or brass, but on the living heart of humanity. Take these men for your exsample. Like them, remember that prosperity can be only for the free that freedom is the sure possession of those who alone have courage to defend it.

TRIUMPHANT the peace and sweet,
But we in triumph cannot sleep
If you our vigil do not keep.

Remember how you sought us,
How the mighty game of war---
You taught us?
You sang of us, penned of us, and spoke of us:
"Soldiers faithful, true and bold---
Noble sons of sons of old."

In our hands you placed the torch, lighted high to hold,
And bade us wear the victor's crown of gold.

YOU are the bereft---
We, the victors of the grave,
But we count not high the lives we gave---
The world to save.

Supreme you say --- our sacrifice;
Our consolation here in Paradise,
Where is neither clamour or strife---
But just eternal life.

If, in fancies' dream we slumber
Through years without number,
We dedicate to you our
Sil'nt emblems of the Lord
Soliciting man's accord.

Our vigil keep--- Or we shall not sleep.

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO Service of Remembrance and Consecration

November 11th, 1944

IN FRONT OF UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, COMMENCING AT 10.45 A.M.

Conducted by the Alumni Federation of the University of Toronto

HYMN—(Two lines will be played by the band, after which the whole congregation will sing.)

O God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come,
Our shelter from the stormy blast,
And our eternal home.

Under the shadow of thy throne
Thy saints have dwelt secure;
Sufficient is thine arm alone,
And our defence is sure.

Before the hills in order stood,
Or earth received her frame,
From everlasting thou art God,
To endless years the same.

More On Germany

(Editor's Note.—Today we present an answer to the letter we printed in the Correspondence column last Thursday, which concerned the results of recent debates in the U.C. Parliament and the Newman Debating Club. H. J. Hodder and S. Stykolt, the writers of the first letter, deprecated the fact that both debates were decided in favour of a settlement for Germany that would restore her economic status. The debaters stressed, however, the necessity of the disarmament and re-education, as the letter below carefully points out.)

We do not wish to take sides in the issue, but would point out that the letter below is signed by the heads of the two debating societies concerned, who presumably are fully acquainted with the facts. Furthermore, we do not believe the students of this University are so stupid or so misinformed as to fall into the error attributed to them in the letter we printed last Thursday.)

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Dear Madam,

May we use a few lines of your valuable space to reply to the correspondence which appeared in Thursday's Varsity. The picture there presented of the recent debates on the German question was warped almost beyond recognition. Dr. Goebbels, himself, could not have done a better job of distorting the truth.

By their own admission, neither of the two writers was present at either of the debates. What knowledge of them they have comes from the necessarily sketchy report in The Varsity. And yet, on the basis of this, they presume to defame a majority of the members of the U.C. Parliament and the Newman Debating Club in these words—"how can any person in their right senses come to such a decision?"

We feel obligated to ask, how dare any persons in their right senses make such charges without knowing the facts?

The writers state: "the majority of debaters are willing to restore Germany to her former glory—and there seem to be no important qualifications." The truth is that both negative and affirmative stressed that Germany was to be completely disarmed and kept that way until the re-education of the German people along democratic lines rendered force unnecessary. Or don't the authors consider that an important qualification?

They assume that the re-education of the Germans will require "not decades but generations." We would be the last to assert that re-education will be a simple task, or that it is merely a matter of sending a few Britons and Americans to teach the Germans democracy. But let's face the facts. History has shown in the case of the Russian people, and in the case of the Nazis themselves, that a nation can be re-educated in a decade or two along entirely different lines from its former civilization.

The writers mention General Eisenhower, Marshal Stalin, Lord Vansittart and Secretary Morgenthau as being "top men" who "thank the Lord do not share our debaters' beliefs." Perhaps they should be reminded that in democracies such as Britain, U.S.A., and Canada, the commanders of the armed forces are subject to the will of the civilian authority in all matters of policy. As such, General Eisenhower is unlikely to have much voice in the ultimate peace settlement.

Marshal Stalin in a speech to the Russian people had this to say: "It is sometimes irresponsibly stated in the foreign press that the aim of the Red Army is to exterminate the German people and destroy the German state. This is a stupid lie and slander against the Red Army. The Red Army has not, nor could it have, any racial hatred for other people, including the German people, and it has been educated to believe in the equality of all peoples and races." "The German fascist armies must be completely defeated. Together with our allies we shall have to: Take measures that all fascist criminals must bear stern punishment for the crimes they have committed. Establish such an order in Europe as will completely preclude the possibility of new German aggression."

Thus Marshal Stalin's position is almost identical to that taken in the recent debates.

The so-called Morgenthau Plan has been described as a trial balloon which was dropped with great agility by the U.S. government when its tremendous unpopularity became evident. Lord Vansittart's influence in diplomatic proposals seems now to be limited to the realm of fifteen cent pamphlets.

In voting for the resolution at the recent debates, we believe Varsity students have shown themselves opposed to the bigoted ideas of either democratic sops or harsh annihilationists. In so doing they should be commended, not denounced.

Yours very sincerely,

(Signed) PAUL REECKE,
Prime Minister, U.C. Parliament.
M. A. FYFE,
President, Newman Debating Club.

And Conquered

Hart House Theatre

The courage which prompted Director Dora Mavor Moore to stage an eighteenth-century comedy, a project more modern directors shy away from, was repaid with dividends Friday evening when the Victoria College Dramatic Society came through handsomely in Oliver Goldsmith's She Stoops to Conquer.

Of a uniformly able cast, the top honours are divided between Vernon Chapman, who played Marlow with reticence and understanding, and Pegi Brown, whose Mrs. Hardcastle was a twittering female rather reminding us of an eighteenth-century Vera Vague.

Rosalind Falk, as Miss Hardcastle, played her part to the hilt, though her stage business as a bowdlerized maid was better than her role as a daughter, and Adrian Brook, well-pillowed for his part, was good as the errant Tony Lumpkin. Though tending to underplay, Geoffrey Waite was an adequate Hastings, while Ralph Hicklin, taking an opposite cue, might have taken his own advice when the script had his Mr. Hardcastle say, "You must remember not to overact." It's probable, though, that his purpose was to enliven the pantomime elements of what is more a farcical comedy than a comedy of manners.

The scenic background, beautifully designed by Marie Kelly, was done to perfection.

Cody Announces Veterans Courses

New courses for demobilized Canadian men and women will be established at the University, it was announced over the week-end by Pres. H. J. Cody.

The President said the Senate has agreed to organize a diploma course in business. It will probably be a one-year course designed especially for veterans who wish to prepare themselves quickly for positions in business or for conducting businesses of their own. Included will be such subjects as economics, the structure of industry, accounting, commercial law and related subjects.

The Senate also approved a course requested by the Prospectors and Developers Association, which is to begin as a daytime course from Jan. 4 to March 6.

A refresher course is to be established for men returning from active service who were commercial travellers or who wish to become commercial travellers.

Other courses include refresher lectures for accountants now in services and one on foremanship.

Years ago, is just now beginning to be understood and appreciated. This work has become the rage in the past few years, and the New York Philharmonic has seen fit to repeat it twice on its programmes in the last four months. Mr. Adaskin's interpretation of this fantasy-free composition, with its strangely intense melodies and haunting rhythms, was full of dramatic innuendoes and vital climaxes. His tone was colourful throughout, and technique faultlessly dazzling.

Most unique and refreshing, with chameleon-like rhythms, was the delightful tone poem Mediterranean of Becks. Mozart's Minuet was the very soul of graciousness, and Sarasate's scintillating Gypsy Airs revealed the artist's depth of feeling for this wild gypsy music. Called back for two encores, Mr. Adaskin played Reger's muted Christus Cradle Song and Kreisler's beloved Caprice Viennois.

Stand Taken Against Discrimination on Race, Sex or Political Interest. Policy Advocated for Intern Exchange

MEAKINS SPEAKS

Montreal, Nov. 12.—(CUP)—The eighth annual national convention of the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Internes was held at the University of Montreal Nov. 10, 11 and 12, with three official delegates from each medical school in Canada present. Dr. Meakins, of McGill University, spoke on the problem of post-war rehabilitation of doctors.

CAMSI went on record as taking a vigorous stand against discrimination by any university or hospital towards applicants for admission because of "race, sex, religion or political activities."

The business sessions included reports from the various universities on their work of the year and stated that universities of the West which may soon have full-fledged medical schools will be offered membership in the CAMSI, and provisions are to be made for French-English exchange in internships. The Canadian Medical Procurement and Assignment Board is to be approached regarding integration of internships for men returning from the armed forces and those students just graduating from medical school.

Plan Announced For Meds Work At Sunnybrook

The University's Faculty of Medicine will be linked with Sunnybrook Military Hospital on the same medical consultative basis which now exists between the Faculty and other Toronto hospitals, it was announced over the week-end by W. J. Stewart, chairman of the Veterans' Hospital Committee.

Still in the formative stage, negotiations were made by a sub-committee over the week-end, where approval of University representatives was obtained on a conditional basis.

The sub-committee included Prof. W. L. Robinson, Professor of Pathology; Dr. Wallace Scott, consultant on the staff of St. Michael's Hospital; Dr. Smirle Lawson, supervising coroner for Ontario; which met with Prof. Duncan Graham, Professor of Medicine, and Prof. W. E. Gallie, Professor of Surgery.

It is expected that the willingness on the part of the University to create a link with the hospital will meet with favour from Ian MacKenzie, Minister of Veterans' Affairs, said Mr. Stewart.

Mr. Stewart pointed out that in time it was hoped that an interne system, organized in the same way as that now operating between the University and Toronto hospitals, would be adopted.

Sir Watson-Watt Receives Degree

The degree of Doctor of Science was conferred upon Sir Robert Watson-Watt, F.R.S., on Saturday evening by Dr. H. J. Cody on behalf of the Senate of the University. Sir Robert, visiting the campus to address a Royal Canadian Institute meeting, is Britain's Director of Research and Deputy Minister of Aircraft Production.

Speaking on the subject, "Scientists at War," Sir Robert regretted that he was unable to describe to the audience the secrets of radar. He could, however, briefly outline the organization of scientists in Great Britain which developed the unique device of radio location.

The war of 1914-18, said Sir Robert, was a chemists' war; the present one has long been recognized at a physicists' war. Work upon radar began back in 1935 by a group of academic scientists under the direction of Sir Robert.

The intricate workings of radar, Sir Robert assured the audience, did not come as a sudden flash, but rather developed from a slow patching together of a large number of minor discoveries by lesser British physicists.

All University Units Participate in March Past Memorial Tower; Lieutenant-Governor Matthews Takes Salute

CODY LEADS SERVICE

The sixth wartime service of Remembrance and Consecration was held on the campus on Saturday morning, November 11. As the carillon chimed, the student training units—the U.N.T.D., C.O.T.C., U.A.T.C., and C.R.C.C.—paraded onto the main campus to take part in the ceremony conducted by President H. J. Cody.

The Hon. Albert Matthews, Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, took the salute as the uniformed students marched past the reviewing stand in front of University College.

With His Excellency and President Cody on the platform were Hon. R. S. Robertson, Chief Justice of Ontario; Dr. Sidney Smith, principal of University College; Commodore E. R. Brock, officer commanding the University Naval Division; Acting Commander J. J. Connolly, officer commanding H.M.C.S. York; Lieut-Colonel C. B. Lindsay; Group Captain D. S. Blaine, and Mr. A. L. Fleming, K.C.

Following the singing of the hymn "O God, Our Help in Ages Past" and the recitation of the opening prayers, President Cody read the names of the one hundred and fifty-six graduates and students of the University of Toronto who have fallen since last year's service.

After the sounding of the Last Post and Reveille and the observance of two minutes' silence, the detachments circled the campus, passing the reviewing stand and the memorial tower, where they saluted the tablets of names of those who fell in the last war.

Previous to the service a guard of honour representing the three services had been posted before the shrine, and wreaths placed here by President H. J. Cody, Mr. A. J. Fleming, K.C., Miss E. Keeley, Mr. R. J. Cudney, Mr. Ed. Downey, and Mr. Bob Bell.

The service was conducted by the Alumni Federation of the University of Toronto.

Art of Confucius' Era Shown by Bishop White

The "Arts and Crafts of Confucius' Time" was the topic of Bishop White's lecture last Friday afternoon in the Museum.

Until quite recently nothing was known about this period, the Bishop explained. In 1928 a court was excavated at the site of Old Loyang, one which had been visited by Confucius. It was possible to estimate the period of this site from material in the tombs.

The place, when completely excavated, was quite large, Bishop White said. There were six layers of pebbles and charcoal one foot thick, and the grave faced south. Beautiful bronzes, jade and lacquer pieces, chariot equipment and skeletons of horses were found at the site. Mechanical equipment, including even an umbrella, was also found.

Many of these pieces are in the Chinese collection of the Ontario Museum. Bishop White illustrated his lecture by numerous slides.

C.O.T.C. SUES VARSITY

The Varsity has been sued by Col. Mapickie and the C.O.T.C., it was announced last night. The campus publication has been banned as a result of the printing of military secrets.

Curiosity got the better of several snooping reporters concerning the construction of a strange object resembling a cross between a swing and a guillotine in the centre of the Baldwin House dandion patch. With its usual accuracy, The Varsity discovered that it was a launching platform for the new Space Rocket, V35, and printed the sensational news.

The story was picked up by BURP and relayed to newspapers far and wide. Unfortunately, the Nasties picked up the news and immediately set to work on their own and launched their own V2 before the platform here was completed.

Hopsy Mothballs, Varsity Editor, now residing in an internment camp near Huntsville, stated to the Press that now she had time to finish her knitting, for which she was glad, glad, glad.

The Varsity masthead has been incarcerated behind barbed-wire on the front campus. Six platoons of the C.O.T.C. have been detailed to guard the miscreants, who have been sentenced to drink nothing but Super-Suds milkshakes for the duration. The only happy one thus imprisoned was Woo Sinner, who shrieked joyously, "Now I have people who drink the stuff." Sinner has a monopoly on the concoction, Pet-Pending 46702.

The scene of this refreshing comedy is a topsy-turvy little American town; its hero a fake hero. The bored citizens, in search of an object of worship, hit upon a hay-feverish, 4-F ex-marine,

"HAIL THE CONQUERING HERO" acted with great aplomb by that personified sneeze, Eddie Bracken. Good satire is the town's highly bourgeois atmosphere, with reception committees, commercialized religion and patriotic old ladies.

Unfortunately, the film suffers from frequent attempts at seriousness. For all its worth, a story like this should remain a farce, or at least a satire.

A specialist in picturing mayoral corruption ("The Great McGinty"), Preston Sturges has climaxed it by letting befuddled Bracken run for mayor against his will. Second acting honours here go to W. Demarest, as the frog-mouthed sergeant, who started all the trouble. Another asset is Ella Rames, with whom we already feel in love in "Phantom Lady."

Needless to say, she marries Eddie, the new mayor.

The Editor,
The Varsity.
Dear Madam,

We are surprised that you have taken advantage of your position as editor to discredit our letter. However, since you have seen fit to do so, we are forced to defend our position.

(1) You say "there seems to be a contradiction" in our letter because (a) we advise strong measures against meek ones and (b) we advise a compromise between butchery and freedom.

In the first place, no such compromise was advised; the word was not mentioned. As a matter of fact, we have said we must avoid the two extremes.

"Compromise" is defined in the Oxford dictionary as the "adjustment of conflicting opinions by modifications of each." We neither mentioned nor implied such a modification. We said that we must have nothing to do with (avoid) either extreme.

It follows that there is no contradiction for we can avoid butchery and freedom and still have strong measures. "Strong" is defined in the dictionary as "having power of resistance not easily injured," etc. The word does not necessarily connote cruelty. Strong measures may be designed to benefit not only the world in general but also the Germans themselves.

We therefore advise (a) that you do not read words into letters which were not there; (b) that you brush up on your definitions.

(2) You say that we assume German ideology cannot be changed without force. If you use this word in the sense that one must be strong, you are correct; if you use it in the sense that we must ravish Germany, you are wrong—no such assumption was made. Yet, you say that we advise measures that involve such destruction as occurred during the Thirty Years' War. You are completely wrong because (a) we have shown that strong measures do not connote brutal violence, and (b) an investigation of elemental history books will show you that the Thirty Years' War involved butchery which we have condemned.

(3) You refer to the change in Germany by using education. We again advise you to look at a history book which will reveal that this education was accompanied by the most violent kind of force. Ignorance of this fact was almost incredible, especially by a university student.

Furthermore, our "strong measures" are not incompatible with a program of education. A consistent compulsory democratic educational system is precisely the kind of strong measure needed for beneficial results.

You ask if it is possible to change German ideology without policing. If you will pardon our saying so, this is a naive question. How do you expect to do it? Surely you do not believe that the Germans will change by themselves. There is no foundation for such a belief. It is obvious that the Germans hate not only us but also our democratic way of living. Therefore it is necessary to have a police power to maintain order.

Yours truly,

H. J. H. ODDER, III Pol. Sc

(Editor's Note.—We would appreciate it very much that if in future any letter-writing individuals who do not feel sufficiently clear on their subjects or are too emotionally tied up with them, would send us two letters—one explaining the other. In this way we would avoid the time involved in writing a reply to stimulate clarity. We have neither leisure nor the space to carry on this controversy to a point of quibbling. Sufficient answer to this letter may be found in the letter published yesterday.)

Mighty Chords

Connoisseur Hall

In the second of four organ recitals, Dr. Healy Willan again demonstrated his versatility in an all-Bach selection. His starting work, the Prelude and Fugue in C major at once filled the hall with its magnificent reverberations, conveying powerful impulses with an amazing lack of profusion and elaborate detail.

The "Passion-Chorale": O Sacred Head and Fugue in B minor, showing Dr. Willan's art at its best, is a particularly beautiful piece, contrasting with the former in its harmonic content. Next, three movements from the Kyrie were heard. The interest is contained in a certain kind of variations, used in organ music; the theme is heard first in the treble part, then in the tenor and last in the pedals, each time growing stronger and more rhythmic.

The two Choral Preludes which followed, though perhaps a trifle pale in rendition, impressed with a peculiar kind of solitary, almost unearthly beauty, especially in the second chorale: Oh man, bewail thy sinful state.

No instrument can rival the organ in its range of expression; from the Shelleyan roaring clouds of such choral music it transcends momentarily into the Miltonic grandeur of a Toccata and Fugue in D minor. This well-known work, perhaps the only Bach composition familiar to a fair proportion of laymen, employs all the known types of organ-technique. Though he laid a little too much stress on pedal parts and played it too fast, Dr. Willan succeeded in conveying the work's majestic grandeur. We almost had the impression that those mighty chords were seeking for an outlet, that the mere handful of people present was not sufficient to receive the message conveyed in them.

Haiti to Harlem

Royal Alexandra Theatre

One of the most original, sizzling sensations of this country, whose unassuming and inherent sense of showmanship has dazzled her audience from coast to coast, is embodied in the exotic beauty and magnetic personality of Katherine Dunham, Ph.B., M.A., of Broadway, Hollywood, and the University of Chicago.

Perhaps the most unique fact about her show, "Tropical Review" is that it grew out of an anthropological interest in native dances of the tropics, inspiring her to record them first-hand and re-creating them in this artistic extravaganza. With this background she is able to show how modern jazz rhythms and dances evolved out of primitive jungle rites.

Miss Dunham has brought together the most amazing company of athletic dancers, whose enthusiasm and unbounded energy, combined with their complete muscular control, interpreted her choreography with masterly rhythmic feeling. There was nothing cold and mechanical about these negro dancers, but rather a sparkling warmth was infused throughout the whole programme and centred in the effervescent personality of Miss Dunham.

Vividly coloured costumes, set off by the atmospheric designs of the backdrops, exquisitely created by John Pratt, were in keeping with the high artistry of the performers. But in the more primitive dances subdued tones were used to their best advantage. Apart from her many other talents, Miss Dunham's capricious vocalizing caught the audience's heart. The mellow voice of Helen Dowdy, heard with her quartet in the scene-stealing Dark Town Strutter's Ball, was reminiscent of Ethel Waters.

Of course, the performance could

'Work Sampling' Improves Aircrew

Professor C. R. Myers, who has been on leave of absence from the Psychology Department for three years in the United Kingdom as Technical Adviser attached to the British Air Ministry, has now returned to devote his time to the Department of Health.

Dr. Myers stated that the R.A.F. personnel used the elements of psychology to study human beings in action. Systematic observation was a key factor in classifying men to learn complicated skills in the shortest time possible.

The headquarters for this work was in London, although field work took Dr. Myers and his staff all over the United Kingdom. Most of it was fact finding and involved systematic measurements of the men's progress as well as work with experts in the various skills.

Among various experiments, the "Work Sample" method was frequently used and to this particular test was attributed the decrease of frequency failure during training as well as improved aircrew performance.

Gynecologist, Macdonald Dies

Dr. Albert A. Macdonald, former Associate Professor of Gynecology in the Faculty of Medicine, died yesterday. He was 93 years of age.

He was one of the founders of the Academy of Medicine and also of the Toronto Western Hospital, where he headed the gynecology staff and was a member of the board of governors. Dr. Macdonald was director of medical services for the National Life Assurance Company for a number of years and later became vice-president of the company. He retired in 1937.

The son of the late Judge Archibald Macdonald, Dr. Macdonald was born in Cobourg and received his early education at Guelph. He later studied Medicine at the University of Toronto. Following graduation in 1872, he continued his graduate studies at London and Edinburgh. When he returned to Canada, Dr. Macdonald practised at Guelph until 1878 when he came to Toronto. In 1905 he was elected president of the Ontario Medicine Council and was appointed to the University staff in 1913.

His wife, the former Frances E. Broadmore, died in 1930. Dr. Macdonald was a member of St. George's Anglican Church.

Arts Courses Not Favoured For Educational Grants To Ex-Servicemen Scholars

Need For Clothing Still Very Urgent

"None of the provinces in Canada have fulfilled or shown any signs of fulfilling their Red Cross quotas this year," said Mrs. J. C. Fraser, in charge of the Red Cross Women's War Work for Ontario, at a meeting of this organization held in the Economics Building yesterday. She stated that the war was far from being over and we cannot afford to slacken in our war work.

She announced that shortly a group of women will be going overseas and at present she had nothing to give them.

When visiting an eastern port three years ago, Mrs. Fraser said she watched ships leave the harbour day after day, in rain or sleet. She was apprehensive lest the young sailors fail to have proper clothing to protect them from the icy blasts. She found, however, that 90,000 articles of clothing had been distributed to them.

"Our navy is much larger now," continued Mrs. Fraser, "yet not enough materials are sent to the needy."

"Our fighting men and women, the boys in the hospitals, the women and the children in war-torn countries, have learned to count on you," concluded Mrs. Fraser, "and I'm sure you won't fail them now, because they are still depending on you."

Mrs. Cody announced that the chief purpose of this organization was to emphasize the importance of the Red Cross programme, especially in connection with procuring parcels for overseas children.

Miss Harriet Parsons, from the War-time Prices and Trade Board, stressed the important part women will play in the period after the war in preventing inflation.

'World Going to Dogs' Is Subject of Debate By Victoria Parliament

The second session of the Victoria Debating Parliament this year is taking place tonight at eight o'clock in Alumni Hall. The motion, "Resolved that the world is going to the Dogs," will be upheld by Nancy Meade and Elmore Brainton, while Nancy Rowland and John Trueman will oppose the outlook presented by the government.

John Speers, Prime Minister, stated yesterday in an interview with The Varsity that "the government, although not morbidly given to Spenglerism, views with alarm the general decline of these present evil days."

Despite the gloom spread on the campus by the members of the affirmative, some hope is still held for erring mankind.

Awarding of Educational Grant Based on Suitability of Course in Establishing Veterans After Graduation

ADVISORY BOARD NEEDED

"We are here today to find out your problems and to try to discover how we on the staff can best help you in solving them," said Dr. Sidney Smith at a luncheon held in Hart House yesterday for ex-servicemen registered at U.C. Present at the meeting besides 13 of the ex-servicemen were Dr. Cody, A. B. Fennell, and representatives from the U.C. Faculty and Hart House.

The first problem encountered by the ex-servicemen is that of convincing the board governing educational grants that the course he wishes to enter will establish him financially in civilian life.

Men desiring to enter Arts courses have faced considerable difficulties. The reason given by the Vocational Guidance Board is that the courses are impractical and may not lead to sound financial post-war re-establishment.

Dr. Smith and President Cody both agreed that there was no restriction expressed in the Order-in-Council governing financial help as to the course the ex-servicemen could choose. Plans are under way to have a definite statement made by the government concerning available courses.

Lack of integrated vocational guidance in the University has been noticed by several of the returned men, and it is felt that some sort of an advisory board should be set up. Dr. Smith said that he would endeavour to adjust this matter as soon as possible.

The establishment of a Veterans' Association on the campus was not favoured by the veterans of the faculty. J. R. Gilley read excerpts from U.S. inter-university bulletins which indicated that on several American camps such or (Continued on page 2)

UBC Marriage Now Academical

Vancouver—(CUP)—A course on Marriage and Family Life is being prepared now by the Extension Department of the University of British Columbia at the request of the B.C. Parent-Teacher Federation.

Believed to be the first of its kind in Canada, the course is intended to be of equal value to youngsters planning marriage and parents with problem adolescents. Its aim is to smoothen adjustment between newlyweds and establish better relations between older couples.

Material for the course is being prepared by a group of leading Canadian and American psychiatrists and social workers. Interest in the course seems to be widespread, with the U. of Manitoba, the Ontario Federation of Home and School Clubs, and the Child Welfare Association at Montreal all asking for copies of the completed series.

Community Needs and Resources

Will the students who have elected Option I and Option II of this course meet today (Tuesday) at 4 o'clock. Mrs. Milner, of the Women's Voluntary Service will meet the group respecting arrangements for field visits during the next two weeks.

Any students in Option II or III of this course who have not been assigned to their agency for volunteer work should immediately get in touch with Mrs. Milner at W.V.S. headquarters, 79 Queen Street East. Phone MI 6255.

No Place For Lawyers In Ideal Post-War State

Role of Post-War Lawyers to be More Varied as New Legislation is a Necessity, Speaker Tells Audience

NEED MODERN APPROACH

"Lawyers in the post-war world must attain a more modern approach to human problems," said Telford Georges, II Law, in his address to the law students at their luncheon yesterday.

"An ideal post-war state would be such that there would be no need for litigation, and consequently no need for lawyers," Georges said, "but due to human limitations such a thing would be impossible."

"The modern trend is towards socialization, and therefore the lawyer must treat each new problem as a social one to be solved in the light of its individual merits rather than drawing upon the weight of precedent."

"The lawyer now is primarily recognized by the layman as an advocate only," said Georges, "but the stress placed in the post-war world on internationalism will necessitate the drafting of new laws and rules by legally trained men, and the role of the lawyer will be one of legislator and administrator as well as an advocate in the courts."

The Law Club luncheons were instituted last year to fill a need for experience in public speaking.

This slightly funny, but oft repeated tale of the life and loves of a girl welder, is one of the least convincing war stories we have as yet seen.

"I LOVE A SOLDIER" Paulette Goddard in the leading role and Sonny Tufts as the poor suffering hero, the story struggles through the melodramatic complexities of wartime marriage.

It ends, as everyone expects, with their happy marriage impending. Parallel to this serious romance runs another one which provides the picture with a certain amount of slapstick comedy, ably performed by Beulah Bondi and Barry Fitzgerald.

However, if you prefer an afternoon of light entertainment and are prepared to disregard its rather unsuitable propaganda, it is almost worth seeing. But don't expect a second "So Proudly We Hail," or you will be disappointed, in spite of the acting of Miss Goddard.

Western Universities Will Discuss Role Of Post-War Student

Winnipeg—(CUP)—At a meeting of the U.M.S.U. Council held here, four delegates were elected to represent the University of Manitoba at the coming Western later-Varsity Conference to be held at Saskatoon, Sask. The conference is similar to that held at Edmonton last year and will have representatives from the four western universities.

The delegates from the University of Manitoba will draw up the agenda for the conference and submit it to the other participating universities for amendment and ratification.

Unlike last year, the programme will probably be limited to problems bearing directly on the role of university students in post-war Canada.

President's Reception

The President and Mrs. Cody are holding a reception on Wednesday, December 6th, at the Ontario Museum for the academic and administrative staffs of the University, at which Dr. and Mrs. Sidney Smith will be guests of honour.

Come the Play-offs . . .

Junior School have packed away their football equipment for another season. Yesterday afternoon they bowed to a superior U.C. team by the score of 11-5 in the intra-group play-off for the berth in the Mulock Cup semi-finals. The winners now await the sudden death game between Senior Meds and Dents.

School drew first blood by blocking a U.C. kick early in the first quarter. The loose ball went back of the goal line where Russ Boyd fell on it. The convert was blocked.

Lady Luck smiled on the winners as School fumbled on an end run and Horwitz kicked the ball over, where Crahan fell on it for the touch. A Saltzman-Staley pass converted. Later in the same quarter a Horwitz-Whittle pass resulted in the second U.C. major.

Art Staley was the outstanding man on the grid with his fine all-round play. Whittle and Horwitz were also prominent.

In the last scheduled game of the season, Dents upset Senior Meds 6-5, thus necessitating a play-off between the two, the winner of which will be given the doubtful honour of going down to defeat at the hands of U.C.

To Make Things Brief . . .

What else can we do when there is so little space, so little to say and Mickey wants The Woman shorter than the S.O.S.?

In a general snapp 'round the Vic bulletin board we saw that the Vic tennis has reached only the semi-finals, which is a bit to be deplored when we think of the weather, etc. In the semi-finals Norma Correll defeated Marj. Chantler, while Kay Jeffries defeated Catherine Fowler. In view of the fact that we have given the results of the U.C. and St. Hilda's finals, we would like to print the Vic results if they ever get played off, or if someone would tell us about it. How about it, girls?

And thinking about the bulletin boards reminds us that we wrote a little open note to U.C. and suggested that a girls' sports board would be a good thing. Since then lots of Royal College girls have told us that it's a wonderful idea, but nothing has been done. It lies with the Women's Athletic Association of that college to fix this thing up. Again, how about it?

This week will see baseball finished up and other sports started. For instance, this week the St. Hilda's ping-pong, or in circles where sport is SPORT, table-tennis, tournament is due to start. Due to basketball and other minor calls upon our time, we don't think there will be space for complete write-ups of each game of table-tennis in each college, but it seems that it would be fun to have an intramural table-tennis tournament when all the colleges have found out who is the best at batting that elusive (to us) little ball.

organizations are discouraged. The meeting felt that integration of the veterans into the student body and into the various campus organizations was more desirable than having a separate veteran body. Both the university and the students will benefit by this, for the veterans will bring a mature viewpoint into campus organizations, and will become adjusted more quickly to civilian life.

At present there are over 100 veterans on this campus and their problems are those that will face all returned men. Each speaker expressed the hope that a programme can be worked out which will be beneficial to the ex-servicemen not only at present but in the future.

Fascism And Another War Can Be Averted By Control Of Private Enterprise

Problems Created by Industrialization Process Demand a Change in Pre-war Economic System

AVOID PRIVATE SAVING

The problems created in modern society by the industrialization process of the last century and a half cannot be solved by free enterprise, said Dr. A. Goulding, of the Department of Hygiene, at the meeting of the Meds' Arts and Letters Society at Wymilwood last night. He was speaking on the subject, "Must Canada Become Fascist?"

The clock of history cannot be turned back, he stated, and the mistake of the governments after the last war was that they thought it possible to return to the pre-war economic system. Their failure to prevent depression, and the unemployment of the post-war era, led to Fascism in Europe, primarily in Germany and Italy, as well as in Austria, the speaker added.

Free enterprise was once a reality, Dr. Goulding continued, but the development of monopolies throttled it, so that present proposals of keeping up free enterprise are not based on facts.

The major economic problem of our day is the waste of resources, and this can only be cured by a certain governmental control of private enterprise, entailing the investment of public funds on projects such as road construction and public housing, while excessive private saving should be avoided, said the speaker. As an example of collectivist planning, he cited the co-operative Tennessee Valley project.

Unless a constructive post-war programme is provided to prevent a new depression which would result from attempts to uphold free enterprise, there is the danger that returning Canadian soldiers will be dissatisfied and fall prey to Fascism, which will lead to another war, Dr. Goulding concluded.

A discussion from the floor followed the address.

Night and Day Profs Lecture

After night has fallen on the University campus you see them, books under arm, making their way toward University College—young, middle-aged and old students who attend the University's Extension Courses.

What surprises you most is the number of men in uniform. Some of them are bewildered to find themselves in the University for the first time in their lives. But all of them are sure that this night-time education is just what they want.

Listen to Flight-Lieut. Allen Smith, for instance. You find this 25-year-old airforceman looking intently at his last week's homework in Elementary Chinese. He looks up from his work for a minute to say:

"Yes, this stuff is pretty interesting, all right. It's pretty hard to understand the symbols in the first few lessons, but once you get going you get the hang of the thing. Why am I studying Chinese? Chances are they'll send me in the Chinese area some day, and I'll find it comes in handy."

"Besides, I intend knocking around the world a bit after the war. I'll probably spend a bit of time in China in either case," he said.

Vincent Eagen is a leading ship's writer and is taking the Private Secretary's course.

Literary Efforts To Bring Awards

The Undergraduate, the University College magazine, will revive the practice of presenting cash prizes for the best literary efforts this year, the magazine co-editors, Betsy Mosbaugh and Frank Rasky, told The Varsity yesterday.

Prizes of $5.00 each will be offered for the best fiction story, the best article and the best piece of poetry, the editors said.

It is hoped, they continued, that perhaps the famed Plato dialogues will be also revived in the new issue, which will probably appear next February or March.

"The magazine will reflect the opinions and ideas of University College, and we expect that these will be well presented with bright format and illustrations," they said.

A meeting of all those interested in writing for the magazine will be held today at 3:45 p.m. in The Varsity office.

"Authority of Church" Discussed by Cosgrave

Provost F. H. Cosgrave, of Trinity, said yesterday in the noon-hour series held each Tuesday in the Women's Union that the church is the expounder and hallower of the divine word of God. He continued the subject on "The Authorities of Life" by discussing "The Authority of the Church." He said that we should never be independent of the Christian tradition as embodied in the church.

The Provost pointed out that there is a difference between a living and a dead tradition. A living tradition has been tested generation after generation, he said. It will be questioned, debated, and there will be protests, but the function of authority is to stimulate inquiry and criticism, not to suppress it, he emphasized. The authority of the church has weight because there is an atmosphere of freedom, he said.

The prophets and saints are our teachers, said the Provost. All that has been said by them is brought together by the church, he explained.

Jap Question To Be Decided

Montreal—(CUP)—The current controversy arising out of the McGill Senate in excluding Canadian students of Japanese descent as a group from the University, will be brought to a head at a meeting of the Students' Society there this week. At this meeting the reasons for, and the justification of this action will be open to discussion by all undergraduate members of the Students' Society.

A resolution supporting that passed by the Students' Executive Council at its last meeting will be introduced by a committee representing many of the campus student clubs. A minimum attendance of 100 members of the Society is required to make this meeting valid.

The meeting was called by a committee representative of most of the major religious, social and political groups on the campus. This group charges that discrimination against Japanese Canadians was in practice as early as last year, although the Senate at that time had not formulated any blanket policy of exclusion.

At that time the grounds for non-admission of potential students of this group to the campus was that of academic standing, although some of the unsuccessful applicants had an average of as high as 85 per cent.

That such a policy is unjustified is held by the committee, especially in view of the fact that there are no restrictions in effect for refugees and immigrants from Germany or Italy, or for their Canadian descendants.

As far as the committee has been able to determine, the decision of the Senate was based upon the allegation that Canadians of this group are not permitted by the government to join the armed forces or to accept employment in war industry.

Replete With Trappings Law Students Try Cases

By Virginia Fox

"The Moot Court is waiting for a good murder on the campus—it's all set to try it," said Prof. M. Hancock, of the Faculty of Law.

But in the absence of criminals around the University the Moot Court fulfils its original purpose of giving law students practice at court procedure and opportunities to learn how to argue on their feet.

Started by Prof. J. Finkelman in 1930, the Moot Court has since become an integral part of the University's law course, and many graduates consider its training most valuable.

In court the embryo lawyers wear the official court garb—black robes and white wing collars.

"And believe me," said Babs Flint, II Law, "the girls have quite a time with the collars."

"Now you know how men suffer at formal," was the swift reply of one of her colleagues.

The Moot Court is presided over by four judges chosen from the members of the fourth year. The court registrar and his assistant assign one case to each student, who, in turn, submits a written summary of his argument before the case is tried.

Last year engraved gavels were presented to the judges as a memento of their Moot Court days. Lloyd Houlden, Al. Grant, and Sid Robins were among those honoured. Each year the retiring

Alaskan Road Is Old Theory

Dr. D. Jordan, Toronto physician, spoke to the Engineering Society at the open meeting yesterday afternoon about the history and development of the Alaskan highway.

In 1892 and 1900 the Czars of Russia considered building a railway across Siberia so that the United States might be reached by a road through Canada after passage had been effected across the Bering Straits, said the speaker. In 1930 President Hoover appointed a committee to study the possibility of a road connecting Alaska and the States, he continued.

In February, 1942, an agreement was drawn up between Canada and the United States for the construction of the Alaskan highway, said Dr. Jordan. The preliminary road was finished in nine months. Dr. Jordan spoke of this construction as one of the greatest engineering feats of the war, considering the immense expanse of territory covered. The distance from Dawson Creek to Fairbanks, Alaska, is 1600 miles. In referring to the engineering work involved, Dr. Jordan mentioned specifically the three main bridges on the road.

Dr. Jordan stressed the importance of the civil engineers and the difficulty of their fight against time and against the elements in that vast, uncivilized country.

After his address, Dr. Jordan showed moving pictures of the progress of the highway from Dawson Creek to Watson Lake, in the Yukon.

At the meeting it was moved to form the University of Toronto Aeronautical Club, and to accept the constitution as read.

It will be a "Come Single, Go Home Double" party and the club executive extends an invitation to the members of all faculties to attend.

Varsity Extension Courses Prepare Armed Services For Admission To U. of T.

Attention Science Students

All male students in the Faculty of Arts who entered the University in September, 1944, and who enrolled in honour courses in Groups C and D, or in the Pass Course taking three of their regular five subjects from Group II, are required by the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel to fill out declaration forms at the Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall.

All male students who entered the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering in September, 1944, are also required by the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel to fill out declaration forms at their faculty office in the Mining Building.

Kindly attend to this at once.

A. B. FENNEL,
Registrar,
University of Toronto.

Settlement House Needs Volunteers

The University Settlement House is seeking volunteers from the student body to assist in their work, in photography, girls' dramatics and basketball, and Nursery School. If any students are free to spend even one hour a week at the House their work will be greatly appreciated.

Serving the district between Bathurst and Yonge Streets, and College and Front Streets, the Settlement House is host to 32 different nationalities. Here, the members of all ages have a meeting place and share their social interests in recreation, art, dramatics and discussion. The University Settlement, founded in 1910 by Sir Robert Falconer and a group of graduates and staff, has been closely connected with the University of Toronto through the years. The students have been able to make contributions to the welfare of the community by their leadership in groups. They, in turn, have had the opportunity of studying cultural backgrounds different from their own.

Of interest to students studying German, is the New World Club, which consists of men and women, refugees from Nazi oppression.

At present two girls' clubs are anxious for leadership in dramatics with a view to producing plays at their annual Christmas party at the Women's Union.

One girls' club is looking for a basketball coach, and a group of young Japanese Canadians for a photography expert.

All those interested in helping may contact Mrs. Crowther, 23 Grange Road. Phone AD 0736.

Refresher Courses Will be Given to those Ex-Servicemen Who Desire to Return to Their Former Occupation

FREE TUITION GIVEN

Four thousand, seven hundred and fifty-two service men and women are taking correspondence courses in preparation for admission to the University of Toronto, Dr. W. J. Dunlop told The Varsity yesterday.

If the candidates obtain 66 per cent or over, the Department of Extension makes a report to the Department of Education and equivalent Grade XIII certificates are granted. These courses, intended to aid in the post-war rehabilitation of ex-service men and women, are given to them free of charge.

Approximately 200 service men and women are at present taking the regular courses of the Department. Canadian prisoners of war in Germany take correspondence courses that reach them via Switzerland.

The Department has already begun to draw up its post-war plans. Business, salesmanship and prospecting courses have already been announced. These courses are open to ex-service men who were in these occupations before the war and desire refresher courses.

The Pass Course for Teachers leading to a B.A. degree will be open with certain concessions to ex-service men who wish to enter the teaching profession.

The government will pay the fees in any of these courses if they are related to the applicant's own field, as well as paying maintenance grants for regular courses.

Dr. Dunlop said that new courses may be established as the demand requires, as long as they fall within the scope of the University of Toronto.

"The University of Toronto, through its Department of Extension, will make every possible and proper provision for demobilized personnel," said Dr. Dunlop.

Record Hour

The record programme, held daily in the Women's Common Room at U.C. from 3:45 to 5:00, is open to the men and women of every college and faculty.

Today's programme:

Vic Debaters Down Dogs

The second session of the Victoria College Debating Parliament, held Tuesday night in Alumni Hall, dealt with the resolution that "The World is Going to the Dogs." A vote on the motion taken on the floor of the house was in favour of the opposition.

As first speaker for the government, Elinore Branton, IV Classics, referred to Socrates, the father of didactics, for the purport of the term "dog." He also suggested that early Egyptians had deplored the degeneracy of their age several thousand years ago, so it was not a new idea to deplore the tendency of the age one lived in.

Control Education

While most fair-minded persons recognize in M. J. Coldwell, national leader of the C.C.F., a consistent advocate of tolerance towards all racial and religious groups, his recent statement in Montreal in which he censured McGill University for racial discrimination ought to be viewed in a critical light.

Certainly his denunciation of the practice of barring Japanese students from enrolment and requiring a higher standard from Jewish students at McGill was much to the point, yet a careful examination of his pronouncement will reveal an implied acceptance of a principle of administration that constitutes a threat to what remains of academic freedom, viz., that financial assistance to universities by a C.C.F. government would subject the internal policy of the institution to government correction.

The Varsity of November 3, 1944, reported Mr. Coldwell as stating:

Any university that does that kind of thing (the practice of racial discrimination) would forfeit its right to receive such educational grants as would be made under a C.C.F. government.

From this brief excerpt it is abundantly clear that the C.C.F. party, when it forms a government in Canada, proposes to use its financial aid to exercise a control on the internal functioning of educational institutions. Most universities would prefer to struggle unassisted rather than trade their freedom for a mess of pottage. This implication is that educational grants to institutions may be withheld when the internal policy of the university does not conform to the particular point of view of the government. Such a silent instrument in the hands of any government could be exercised with telling effect upon a school whose outlook happened to interfere with government attitude.

Where the efficacy of money power may be used to cripple a dissenting university, academic freedom is non-existent. We believe that Mr. Coldwell's remarks are a virtual admission of a strong leaning towards the state control of education—an instrument used with such devastating force in modern totalitarian states.

Once an institution, educational or otherwise, becomes indebted to any body for financial support, the possibility of its becoming a tool in the hands of the supporting body is always a present threat. During this war increasing pressure has been brought upon universities to relinquish their traditional studies in favour of wartime emergencies. In Canada the government has been more considerate than that of the United States in allowing the continuation of educational functions. In the United States we have witnessed a gradual abdication on the part of universities from the performance of essential civilian educational duties. Such a policy blandly assumes that the contribution of universities is tolerable only their energies cannot be directly utilized in a scheme of short-term thinking.

This editorial is not a disguised attack on M. J. Coldwell for his expression of humanitarian sentiments on the treatment of racial groups at McGill University. We commend him highly for his courage when political expediency would have dictated another course. We are making a plea for the recognition of academic freedom instead of lip service payment. We have used Mr. Coldwell's speech as a springboard for our observations.

It is better for democracy to have small struggling universities where the voice is free rather than monuments of bondage where intellectual speculation is circumscribed by "vested interests."

Veterans Of World War II

Although the Order-in-Council governing financial help for ex-servicemen returning to university does not definitely restrict freedom of choice in courses, veterans who have enrolled in The University find themselves impeded by the Vocational Guidance Board as to the choice of courses.

The disapproval registered by this board regarding the choice of an arts course is based on the argument that such a step would be impractical and financially unsound for the veterans. The question at stake is one which will inevitably crop up in the years to come. The assumption made by the board that the aim of a University is to place the graduate on sound financial footing is quite compatible with the tenor of the times. Whether or not it is compatible with the true purpose of a University is a debatable question.

If the Vocational Board aims to turn out a group of technicians, who will be ensured of "making money," then the educational grants given to these ex-servicemen should be limited to technical schools rather than universities. A veteran who has sacrificed so much for the preservation of freedom of thought and choice in allied countries should at least be given the opportunity of selecting his own course just as would have been the case before the war.

The necessity of establishing a university board to guide these men and to defend the legitimate rights of our educational policies is essential. Many men who return have not the bent or desire for courses into which the present Vocational Board directs them. If commercial aims are going to supersede personal freedom in the selection of courses which will provide insight into human conduct and relations, then the generally accepted connotation of what The University stands for can be thrown to the winds.

A Prevalent Attitude

Few students in attendance at the typical modern university have escaped the disintegrating force of skeptical minds intent on the complete rout of the beliefs and values of the individual.

Undoubtedly students enter universities laden with opinions formed in earlier and more immature periods of their lives. Honeycombed with prejudices and preconceptions, they are ready victims for the "housecleaning" process of their intellectual superiors. And scoured and housecleaned they are! No trace of fiction or fancy remains and the student is said to have a "scientific mind."

This process is, in many instances, extremely useful for it actually does prepare the ground in which the scientific spirit may flourish. On the other hand, it often removes a personal philosophy, a code of conduct or, what we may call in the face of being considered naive, an inner spiritual strength. Though to the sneering intellectual it may have been so much rubbish, to the individual it was the steady guide in crisis.

Possibly those intent on destroying such values in our universities should be advised to offer a substitution or a replacement for the student's values before he begins his intellectual process of destruction and personal disorganization.

Too often in the past have students possessing a personal philosophy adequate to their own needs been stripped bare and left confused. The student may have the distinction of being "scientific" in mind, but in reality his mind is an empty vessel through which the winds of confusion whistle a constant torment.

BABY BONUS OR BATTLE?

Bloody Battle Ensues on Campus: Cause is Unknown: Suspect that Something New Has Been Added

WHADDYAKNOW

C.O.T.C. troops were amazed and bewildered yesterday as they beheld two lone figures engaged in furious combat in the U.C. quad. As the clash of arms pierced the campus quiet and the warriors whined in pain, the two warriors clad in shining armour assaulted each other time after time until the onlookers could bear it no longer.

Lt.-Col. H. H. Mapicde brandishing a Bren gun called a halt to this "conduct unbecoming to an officer and a gentleman". Whereupon one of the scarred veterans, Maj. Asp Fabric Home, of the Miltonic Corps, glancing at his watch, charged towards the Hart House tower and with his long lance moved back the hands of the clock.

As he thundered back to battle, he paused in front of the assembly, "Ladies and gentlemen, I regret to inform you that we still have twenty minutes of fighting". In the meantime, feeling certain of victory, the other combatant, Lieut. J. B. McDon, of the Tennyson Light Brigade, had canted over to the U.C. bell tower and was jerking spasmodically on the faded rope singing "Now It Can Be Told" and chanting viciously at the same time "Ring out the old, Ring in the new, ring out the old and ring in the new". As soon as he saw the return of his opponent to the tilting ground, however, Lt. McDon urged his steed back to the fray.

"Give me poison", shouted the Major as he charged towards his enemy who was taunting him with, "I cannot-praise-a-fugitive-and-cloistered-virtue-so-come-out-from-behind-that-armour-wherever-you-are."

No longer able to endure the horrible onslaught, Col. Mapicde decided to play his trump card. "My dear fellows," he said in his most menacing tone, "Unless you stop this immediately I shall be forced to call up Col. George Brew who is just over there giving out cigars to Schoolmen."

The silence which followed was deadly. Then into the midst of this catastrophic moment blew Brew, himself, shouting, "To heel, To heel!" as he lashed right and left with a whip briding of cowhide. A colossus bestriding them all, Brew made his way towards the two knights still simmering with hate. As he strode along Brew glanced out of the corner of his flashing eyes, stopped and turned a deathly white. Stealthily creeping up behind him came Mrs. Champus Cat with a nasty glint in her jaded eyes. Brew looked at her, shied away and started off at a mad run towards Queen's Park. Mrs. Champus wasted not a moment and speedily set out in hot pursuit, screeching at the top of her voice, "When do I get the bonus for my poor little champus kitten? When do I get the bonus for my poor starving baby?"

As the two shadows disappeared into the murky twilight of Queen's Park, Major Fabric Home looked at his opponent, "All of which goes to prove my contention that you cannot praise a guy that slinks from the race where the immortal garland is to be run for," he stated.

But McDon could not bear to let his enemy have the last word. As he

Vic Finalists Eke Out Tie With St. Mike's Gridders

Score of 1-1 the Only Result of Hard Fought Battle for Championship of Group II Rugby

ILL FEELING

Group III rugby championship remained undecided as Vic and St. Mike's battled to a 1-1 tie yesterday. Play was close throughout and tempers flared frequently. In fact, the players seemed to think they were attending one of Mel Glionna's boxing classes instead of playing rugby, and occasionally started throwing punches at each other. This coracoid pugilism developed into a real free-for-all late in the game. Fortunately two husky referees were on hand in the persons of Eric Major and Soup Campbell, and they beat down the batters to quell the riot.

Neither team was able to register a score in the first quarter. O'Brien's kicking gave St. Mike's an edge and gradually drove the Vic team back. As the quarter ended, Mortson put the Irish in a scoring position by carrying the ball for 30 yards through the centre of the line to the Vic 30. From here Agro and Mortson made yards twice but Vic tightened up and Agro kicked to the deadline for the only St. Mike's point of the game. A blocked kick gave Vic the ball on the St. Mike's 15-yard line, and shortly after this O'Malley kicked to Petrucci behind the line to tie the game.

There was no scoring in the second half although Vic were twice in a position to kick for a point, but snuffed their chances. Roughing penalties to St. Mike's and fine running by Wheeler kept the ball in the St. Mike's end for most of the game. O'Malley's passing also gained ground for Vic. With about four minutes to play, Rocchi and Hamilton started to fight and several other players and spectators joined in a battle which lasted for several minutes. Rocchi was given a game penalty and Scott, of Vic, was also shoed off. The loss of their clever quarter, who didn't deserve the penalty, disorganized Vic and shortly afterwards they fumbled away another scoring chance. With a minute left, St. Mike's just missed scoring a touch when they dribbled a Vic fumble downfield only to have Wheeler, of Vic, come from behind to knock the ball out of bounds on the eight-yard line. Vic held on to the ball till the game ended.

Junior School Trounce Red, White In Hard Fought Lacrosse Match

Jr. S.P.S. avenged their defeat at the hands of U.C. earlier in the year by trouncing the boys from the Royal College 13-6 in a hard-fought lacrosse game in the big gym yesterday. U.C.'s goalie was the big reason why the score failed to mount even higher in this game as he turned in a very good effort, stopping S.P.S.'s rushes at the goal-mouth time and time again.

Doyle, Tredgett and Farguhar were the main threats of Jr. School, with three goals each. Daniels, Glenn, Warren, and Parker got the other four. Price was U.C.'s top man with four goals. He is certainly one of the outstanding players in the lacrosse circuit. Adams and Ferguson notched the remaining two for U.C.

Sr. S.P.S. really swamped Dents 20-1 in the second game of the double bill. Dents were terrifically outclassed but went through the formality of playing out the game, trying as much as possible to save their name from shame. They shouldn't feel too badly, however, as they should never have been put in this group with their two more powerful rivals, Sr. S.P.S. and Sr. Meds.

The S.P.S. goals were distributed fairly well over the whole team. Steel got six, Keary four, Craibie three, Cross Turner and Boyle two, and Sheppard

Soccer Teams Enter Play-Offs

With the completion of the last game of the regular schedule this week, the soccer play-offs will get under way next Friday, Nov. 17, when Knox meet Trinity I. The winners of this game will meet Meds I in one semi-final game, while Meds II tangle with Vic in the other. These five teams are the remnants of the original thirteen-team, four-group league and comprise the winners of all groups plus the runners-up in Group I. There is the possibility of an all-Meds final as the Medsman have two powerful representatives in the semi-final rounds.

Meds first team, winners of the "strong" Group I, are favourites to win the Arts Faculty Cup, emblematic of the championship. The Medicos have a high scoring team, featured by the play of Antoni and Spooner, and boast an unbeaten record on the season's play, although they had one tie game. S.P.S. I, last year's champs, fielded a much weaker team this year and are already out of the running. Knox may prove to be the dark horse in the league as they won the "theolog" group with no trouble, beating Emmanuel, last year's finalists.

Vic soccer team easily defeated Dents by a 4-0 score in a game on the back campus yesterday. Hikichi was the leading scorer in the game with two goals. Vic's other two goals came from shots by Waithe and Roberts. The win puts the Vic team in the second slot of Group I and qualifies them for the play-offs.

walked off feeding his roan stallion sugar lumps, he casually turned and said with great meaning, "Ah yes, but remember, he who fights and runs away will live again to fight. . . Owweh, I am dying, Egypt, dying." And with these last words McDon slumped to the ground with blood gushing from his wrist, while the fiery Major thundered gleefully away shouting "touché! touché!" The faint echoes of his cry touched upon the ears of two running figures headed towards Quebec.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Jerry Ewins

VIC vs. ST. MIKE'S

That was quite a game yesterday up at the Stadium. Vic and St. Mike's proved themselves to be just about the two most evenly-matched teams in the Mulock Cup loop after that exhibition. Vic still should have beaten the Irish on the chances they had, but chances don't count and points do, so the game came out a one-all tie. We repeat our prediction that Vic will take their group and thus will win the next game between these two on Friday.

If any of you fans want to see a real rough, tough and nasty rugby game, be sure to attend day after tomorrow. Yesterday's was all of this and more. It really started when Rocchi got a penalty for St. Mike's and a warning for himself on a play in which he roughed Vic's kicker, Hamilton. A little later these two were seen to exchange a few blows but not by the referee unfortunately, or things might have stopped right there. Next time these same two encountered each other matters really came to a head. They proceeded to battle it out after the ball had soared away and Scott, the Vic quarter, turned and saw same. He immediately decided to act as peacemaker (it says here) and tried to pull Rocchi away from Hamilton. Mancini, St. Mike's captain, noticed this and, interpreting it as Scott and Hamilton vs. Rocchi, tried to hold up the honour of the Irish by helping his teammate out. After this we lost all track of things as several fights broke out in various parts of the field. Not only did players participate but a goodly chunk of the male population which was spectating the game swarmed onto the gridiron and proceeded to do or die for dear old.

When the smoke of battle had cleared away the refs were observed shooting a total of three players off the field. These were Rocchi, Scott, and another Vic man, strangely enough not Hamilton. Well, they got the game going again but evidently Rocchi didn't like the ugly leer in Hamilton's eye for immediately the final whistle had blown he dashed madly at same player's throat and another near riot smoldered hotly. Some other St. Mike's man was seen advocating the swift extermination of the umpire, Eric Major, but somebody waved a rule-book in his face and he succumbed to the temporary defeat. That pretty well finished things up for the day, and well it should have.

We have to admire the courage of that boy from St. Mike's, Rocchi. We have yet to see anyone his size get kicked around by the bigger fellows and still come back for more punishment like he did yesterday. But the fact remains that fighting is a pretty serious offence in rugby. The refs handed out game penalties to the three they sent off and Rocchi stands to receive a season suspension this year for his offence. However, this will be considered further by the officials down at Hart House.

St. Mike's claimed that the refereeing was poor in the game. From where we stood it looked O.K., just as good as any would have been under the circumstances. The refs might not have got the right men in the brawl, but that's a tough job anytime. They put the men off the field that they thought were the worst (or first) offenders and did well to quiet things down as well as they did so quickly. However the replay on Friday will decide all. Personally, if Rocchi could just swallow a couple of growing pills and get results, we'd want to play on his team every time.

"The Sportswoman"

By Betsy Mosbaugh

LONG, LONG AGO . . .

The possibility of writing a Woman doesn't especially appeal to us in our present haggard state. Probably the association of battling out our last column some seven months ago when exams were riding circles around us causes the prevailing gloom. It may be however, that we're just covering up our nostalgia with a blasé front. The good old days of gin rummy and zoot bridge hands for the Sportswoman seem to have disappeared. This year our sports-ed. seems to have taken to cutting a mean rug with the result that she must needs drag us out of our editorial mazes to knock out her stint for her.

We would really like to use the space in this column for continuing the Stykolt-Hodder-what'll-we-do-with-Germany-business, but athletic minded co-eds will be writing nasty letters to the editor if we don't say something about what cooked on women's grid.

The good old red and white maintained its usual form in basketball yesterday by trouncing Pharmacy 33-7. Oops, sorry, it says here that U.C. has picked up greatly since its last game, so we must presume that U.C. wasn't maintaining its usual standard. "Pharmacy passing," says the scribbled data, "was lousy." June Ward, Birdie Taite (forwards) and Helen Taylor (guard), all of U.C., distinguished themselves no end in the fray. At least we think such a postulation to be true owing to the fact that the three names are scrawled down with three exclamation marks beside them.

St. Hilda's took Vic B by a score of 12-10. It was a hard fight and the Saints have informed their parents that they're glad they won. Gloria Carpenter and Marg Alexander, of St. Hilda's, snaffled the laurels of the evening, while Shirley Cousin, Mary Lewarne and Marg Chandler, of Vic, upheld the honour of the B team.

MEETING CANCELLED . . .

We figured that hockey was always a slippery business. Barb Wilson's announcement that the meeting to be held today at 4:30 has been cancelled just goes to confirm our suspicions. Leave us hope that this sport will be more efficiently carried out towards the end of the schedule than last year.

LATE FLASH . . .

A breathless reporter has just stumbled into the office with the news that the Nurses copped their game with U.C. Freshies by a score of 19-12. Before our informant disappeared she managed to state officially that "It was a good game but rather sloppy." Joan Western was U.C.'s outstanding player, while Peg McPherson hauled out the baskets for the Nurses.

ARTIFICIAL RESPIRATION COURSE

The University Health Service, with the co-operation of the University of Toronto Athletic Association, is offering to men students and staff a course (lecture, practice, and examination) on Resuscitation, starting Monday, November 20th—Debates Room—Hart House—4:45 p.m.

All men enrolled in Life Saving Courses must take this Course to qualify for their awards. Personnel of the U.N.T.D., the C.O.T.C., and the U.A.S. should take the course.

To facilitate time-table arrangements the lecture period, the practical work and the examination will be duplicated as indicated below. This will give all interested students an opportunity to take the complete course in two periods. If interested, kindly sign the list at the Athletic Office. For further details see either Mr. Griffiths of Mr. McCutcheon.

All male students and staff in the University are eligible to enrol and take the course.

Men who satisfactorily complete the course will qualify for the Resuscitation Service Badge of the Royal Life Saving Society.

For a flighty, not too realistic musical, "Ever Since Venus" has a slightly better-than-average plot, which centres about Rosebud Lipstick and its discovers. Projected on this very cosmetic setting are Hugh Herbert, Ina Ray Hutton and her band, Glenda Farrell and Billy Gilbert.

The acting is, on the whole, adequate, but the music is only fair, even with Ina Ray to please the eye.

The second feature, "Shadows in the Night," another of the Crime Doctor series, is an interesting "who dunit." There are thrills and suspense surrounding the attempts of the criminal to cause, by psychological means, the mental breakdown of the heroine. Very convincing, and also very attractive, in the role of the famous Dr. Ordway, is Warner Baxter.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

Symphonie Russe

Mosley Hall

Last night the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, in its second performance of the season, gave ample proof that the rage for Russian music is still strong. Playing to a packed and enthusiastic house, the great Russian pianist, Bralowsky, carried off the honours of the evening in the Rachmaninov Concerto in C minor. The orchestra showed unusual vitality and deep understanding up until the final number, Tchaikovsky's Nutcracker Suite, which they felt they knew so well they could romp through with joyous (if inartistic) abandon.

The programme opened with an Overture to "Colas Breugnot" by the modern composer Kabalevsky. This rollicking Franco-Russian version of Till Eulenspiegel was new and challenging enough to make the orchestra members keep their eyes on Sir Ernest, with exceptionally good results. Indeed their instruments seemed to fairly chortle.

Shostakovich's First Symphony, acknowledged by many to be his best, was full of exciting solo passages brilliantly executed. We were made to feel its often throbbing intensity, and the lovely brittle melodies were artistically unfolded.

In the Rachmaninov Concerto, pianist and orchestra merged well, with a few exceptions in the slow movement. Bralowsky, by his subtle tonal variations, his crisp precision in the bravura passages, and his acute rhythmic sense so essential in this work, gave his listeners a deep musical experience. Not once was the melodic line lost, or the flow of liquid sound stemmed. Bralowsky may well be ranked with some of the greatest masters of the keyboard.

war, so that's why I'm taking this course," he tells you. "I used to work in an office before I joined up. This night work gives me my opportunity to get ahead."

Bill Simpson, 20-year-old airforce man, is taking courses in Psychology, English, Public Speaking and Economics. Later on, it's his ambition to go to University as a day scholar and major in Psychology.

Miss Marion Hargreaves, who collects the fees for the Extension Department every night, said she hadn't seen so many servicemen taking lectures for many years. Business, she said, was booming. Authorship and Journalism, Spanish, Private Secretaries' courses—all these, which usually consisted of one night-a-week classes, were now supplemented by two other groups, she explained.

The swingshift scholars—and particularly the servicemen scholars—she said, wanted education, and they were getting it.

A recent Varsity editorial, you may recall, was dedicated to mourning the lack of creative literature in Canada. So to prove that all is not yet lost in this country for those grim seekers after culture, this column herewith presents, with all gravity, recent poetic endeavours from Canadian camp.

Here is a fine artistic endeavour from The Brunswickian, a publication dedicated to Swinburne and the University of New Brunswick. Notice the lifting, lyrical effect:

A dance,
A data
Perchance
Out lata
A classa
A quizza
No passa-
Al-as-a!

Our next endeavour is clipped from that internationally-acclaimed literary publication, The Sheaf, the family journal of the University of Saskatchewan. Pay particular attention to the metre, contrived in the delightful style of Shelley and Wordsworth, and pay heed to the profound thought underlying this didactic creation:

You can always tell a senior
By his opinion sound;
You can always tell a junior
By the way he struts around;
You can always tell a fresbie
By his verdant look and such;
You can always tell a sophomore—
But you cannot tell him much.

And The Manitoban proudly presents a 10-line verse, whose imagery is pure delight, pure delight. Mark particularly the unique combination of the rhyming scheme a, b, b, a, with that of a, a, b, b, plus another rhyming scheme which is out of this world, out of this world:

Whatcha doin?
Jis sittin.
Nothin' to do?
Plenty to do.
Thinkin' whatcha
Gonna do?
No. Thinkin' could Lead to doin.
So I'm
Jis sittin.

teries by Attila the Hun, were compared by the speaker to the exodus of the Emmanuel theologians who, in turn, had to flee from invaders, no less irresistible, in the form of Victoria College girls in residence.

John Truman, II Modern History, upheld the opposition by endeavouring to outline man's accomplishment along intellectual lines as seen through the student's eyes. Even the Humane Society supported his objection to slurs against the noble dog, he said. "The more one comes to know men, the more one appreciates dogs," he quoted.

The first speaker of the opposition listed evidences of progress beginning with the Laws of Moses, the Magna Charta, and the Rights of Man, culminating in the National Selective Service.

Man reveals himself as he is in his leisure moments, contended Nancy Meade, I Pass Arts, as second speaker for the government. She upheld the resolution by stressing juvenile delinquency and condemned bobby-soxer girls. Miss Meade feared that the present set-up was indicative of general decadence.

comes next a sonorous, almost Biblical, intonation, replete with sadly brooding emotions, almost ironical Byronicism. It is respectfully titled, Psalm of the Lab:

The lab is my jeepard,
I cannot breathe.
It maketh me to lie down with nausea.
It eateth my clothes with strong acid,
It destroyeth my soles,
It leadeth me in the paths of science for its name sake.
Yea, though I walk through the welter of stinks and smells,
I will fear no chemical,
For it is in me,
It provideth a bench for me in the presence of phosgene,
It leadeth my day with toil,
My beaker runneth over.
Surely bad tastes and odors shall follow me all the days of my life.
And I shall smell in the house of Science forever.

Love poetry, shining like a pure glowing flame in each of its conflagrating lines, bursts forth from this savagely beautiful sonnet in The Queen's Journal. With overtures of John Donne's metaphysical style, it is entitled, simply, Love:

She stands
And all the beauties you get in a Woman
Stimulates the neurones in my retina.
She speaks
The thrilling oscillation of her vocal folds Agitates
My auditory fibres—me ecstatic holds.
We gaze
Into the pupils of each other's eyes
We breathe
—Vibrate the epiglottis with our sighs.
We feel,
As I lean forward then to kiss her
—Ah!
Hormones
Starting sweet sensations in the viscera.
We kiss
Olfactory sensors thrill at the perfumes
Which she
In oscillation sweet, exhumes.
O, Love!
Sweet love, most gentle of transactions,
You're but
An aggregate of chemi-physical reactions.

Mechanical Club Hears W. J. Reid

The Mechanical Club held its first meeting of the term last night, when Mr. W. J. Reid, of the Otis-Fensom Ordnance Plant in Hamilton, addressed the members on the subject, "Difficulties in the Production of Bofors 40 mm. Gun."

Mr. Reid pointed out the great variety of machining operations on the gun, some small parts requiring as many as 100 different operations. Other difficulties included the broaching of a square aperture in the mechanism, and the machining of the barrel.

By means of the advances in procedure worked out in the last few years, the machining time for the latter has been reduced from 50 hours to 50 minutes.

Present National Parties At Joint Youth Forum

Ald. Donald Fleming Represented Prog. Cons. Party; Andrew Brewin, C.C.F., and Stewart Smith Labour-Progress.

OUTLINED PLATFORMS

By Sid Jaurand

The Joint Youth Forum, an organization integrating nearly every youth organization in the city, held a meeting last night in Harbord Collegiate at which speakers from three of the national parties gave addresses. Weir Reid, the programme director of the Y.M.C.A., introduced Alderman Donald Fleming, of the Progressive-Conservatives, Andrew Brewin of the C.C.F., and Stewart Smith, Labour Progressive. The Liberal party had no representative present because of the approaching caucus meetings at Ottawa.

Mr. Reid opened the meeting with an outline of the aims of the Forum; he explained that it consists of the representatives of 56 organizations of every national, cultural and religious group in the city, who gather to discuss and clarify issues concerning the role of youth in the future and the present.

The members of the political parties were there to explain their party's stand on such issues as education, rehabilitation, minority problems, international affairs and post-war employment.

Mr. Fleming explained the programme of national reform which the Progressive-Conservative party had planned and, under the direction of John Bracken, would seek to achieve.

Equality of opportunity for all youth is the keynote of the entire post-war scheme of his party; this is the primary duty of a country to its youth. But before this can be achieved, there is a more pressing duty, that of supporting our fighting youth overseas. The King government is failing youth right now by not sending the conscript army overseas as a reinforcement to the fighters, he said.

Education as a provincial department is a failure, Mr. Fleming stated. Wherever provincial assistance is inadequate, the Dominion should step in with assistance, in order to insure that everyone receives full education regardless of position. There must be full co-operation of the Dominion and provinces, that the former may step in with financial aid every time the provincial means proved inadequate to cope with the planned housing, educational, health and employment reforms. But, immediately upon cessation of hostilities, every control should be relaxed from industry.

"We want no crack-pot czars hampering the efforts of industry," he stated. Mr. Fleming felt that unemployment could be avoided by holding men in uniform, or in the munition plants, until the proper measures were taken to re-educate them, or until the right job was available for the right person. No discrimination was to be made in jobs because of sex or creed, but soldiers were to receive first consideration.

The ties of the Empire were to be kept as tight as possible, he said, and such a unity would provide a foundation for more universal union. Canada, however, must have an active voice in the shaping of any universal policy, for the Progressive-Conservatives have never advocated isolationism.

Mr. Fleming summed up the promises of his party to youth when he said: "The party is on a crusade for rational reform toward Freedom, Security, Opportunity, and British Partnership."

"The Progressive-Conservatives do not monopolize the good intention for youth," Andrew Brewin, C.C.F. representative, said when he began his speech. He based his aims for youth on a survey of youth opinion which stated youth's skepticism toward political parties.

Time-Style Used In Torontonensis

"Good-bye, stuffiness. Torontonensis will be thoroughly housecleaned—bright all the way through," Editor Hugh Kenner told The Varsity yesterday.

Typical of the year book's rejuvenation is the creation of a new editorial post, that of photographic editor, occupied by Virginia Fox.

Photographs are taken on an assignment system—a method that eliminates haphazard coverage.

"The co-operation of the four Torontonensis photographers—B. Wilkes, I. Shopenitz, K. Bald, and H. Graham—has," Miss Fox said, "enabled Torontonensis to get wider coverage of all aspects of campus life."

"The fraternities section will be unrecognizable," said Kenner. "We want to get the idea across that each frat is different from its neighbour. And in order to do this we plan extending our photographic coverage to fraternity events."

Time-style will be featured in this year's book. And a staff of feature writers will guarantee bright, peppy write-ups in keeping with the new light-spirited theme.

U.C. Guild Production Is Based On Plot Of British Movie

The U.C. Players' Guild's production this year, Robert Ardrey's Thunder Rock, will be open to the general public on Nov. 23, 24, 25 only. The other evening of presentation, Wednesday, Nov. 22, has been set aside for the benefit of military personnel throughout the city.

John K. Peck, producer and director of the play, stated last night that there will be many important guests present in Hart House on that evening. Arrangements have been made with the

Harmony And Understanding Needed In Post-War International Relations

Stress Is Laid On Prevention

That nearly all accidents are preventable was the contention of Prof. K. S. Bernhardt of the Department of Psychology, speaking to a meeting of the Class 20 Accident Prevention Society early this week.

Figures show 85 per cent of accidents are attributable to the human factor, and a more careful study of accidents, from a clinical attitude, is necessary to ascertain and correct the causes.

"It is a crime against society to place a man in charge of a moving vehicle whose reaction time is slower than the average," claims Prof. Bernhardt.

The Class 20 Accident Prevention Society is made up of more than 3,000 members of the motor and air transport and allied industries.

Graduate of Toronto Speaking on Forestry

The fourth of the present series of meetings of the Engineering Institute of Canada will be held in the Debates Room of Hart House this evening at 8:15, when Mr. J. W. McNutt, a Forestry graduate from Toronto and now with the Kimberly-Clark Corporation of Wisconsin, will deliver an address entitled "Mechanization of Woodlands Operations."

Mr. McNutt's paper will deal with the latest mechanical developments in pulp operations in the forests of Eastern Canada, New England, and the Lake States.

Red Cross bus service to transport one hundred service men from Christie Street Hospital to the Hart House theatre; representing the army will be Major-General Potts, military commander of District No. 2, and from the navy will come Acting Commander J. J. Connolly, officer commanding H.M.C.S. York; the rest of the theatre will be occupied by members of the three services, both male and female, and their University College hosts.

Charmien King, who has the leading role in the play, has had many offers from Hollywood's Warner Bros, but she has decided not to consider them, at least until she receives her degree, here at the University.

The British movie, Thunder Rock, which recently had its Toronto premiere, was so well received that its audience have shown considerable interest in the Players' Guild production and already the reserved lists are filling up.

The story of Thunder Rock is one of particular interest today. It tells of a man who goes away by himself to a lonely lighthouse on Lake Michigan and lives only with people whose personalities are a construction of his own imagination. The emotional and psychological conflicts are very well portrayed by a cast which includes Mel Breen, Charmien King and Henry Kreisell.

Spiritual Relations Is S.C.M. Group Topic

In the S.C.M. study group yesterday the relation between the physical world and the mental and spiritual world was discussed.

Every Wednesday at 4:30 this group on "Understanding Ourselves" meets in the Women's Union. The leader of the group is Mr. Ed Lute, the General Secretary for the S.C.M. of this University. All are welcome.

Education, War Westwater Topic

"What about adult education?" asked Mr. Robert Westwater, chairman of the Canadian League Educational Services for Eastern Ontario, lecturing yesterday in the McLennan Laboratories.

Speaking of "Education and War," Mr. Westwater told of his visit with some of the R.C.A.F. camps in Great Britain. As an Ottawa school inspector, he represented the Wartime Information Board.

"What do service men and women ask about?" he said. "Well, the questions varied but they showed that these fighting people had a great national consciousness."

"There are large discussion groups in the Air Force. I attended one at which there were over 300 officers present. They had a lengthy discussion on the national health, the immigration, the problem of Canadian unity, and Canada's place in the international affairs."

"Do not let it happen like it did at the end of the last war, when there was no rehabilitation problem and therefore no action to improve the lot of the servicemen. Even in the prison camps in Germany the boys are holding discussion groups."

There are three things that can and should be done to present adult education to the civilians and not only to services. First of all each community should provide for itself what form of education it wants. Secondly, each province should provide such facilities as are requested and needed. Thirdly, but not lastly, general financial assistance should be provided by the federal government.

"The men and women of the services feel that money should be no drawback since it has been proven that in time of war the Dominion government could raise as much as it wanted practically overnight."

"There is very much to be done, and now is the time to plan for the post-war world. Now is the time to plan for the extension of adult education," Mr. Westwater said.

"People say that there should be education but they do not do anything about it. We shall have to go along with the men and women of the services after the war and not be left behind them," concluded Mr. Westwater.

U.C. "Follies Revue" Sold Out Leaving Only Dance Tickets

The U.C. Follies Revue, having gone through rigorous rehearsals this year, for the dancing," she said, "Gren Hobson will supply the music in the big gym, Dorothy and her Sophisticated Gentlemen will be in the upper gym, and the much-sought-after Rhythm Quintet will be in the East Common Room. In the swimming pool the water-cade will feature many of their renowned ornamental swimmers in specially prepared comedy acts, artistic water designs and precision swimming displays, all under special lighting effects. The two performances of this show will be at 9:00 and 10:15."

Alec Siegel supplied the data on the floor show that will be put on mainly for the benefit of those who are only able to secure the dance tickets. It will include excerpts from the Follies of the last few years; Shirley Schipper, who is featured this year in the new "Pass Arts Polka," will also sing last year's "Sippin' a Coke"; Gwenn Innes will sing the torchy "Moon Over Hart House," and some older songs like I da will be sung by any four males from the Health Service who can co-ordinate their actions and voices sufficiently.

Butler Says Development of an International Spirit Necessary to Foundation of World Peace

ULTIMATE SOLUTION

Lessons learned in the League of Nations lead to the conclusion that post-war international relations must be such that the countries and peoples that have borne the brunt of this war will work together in continued harmony and understanding, stated Mr. Harold Butler, Director-General of the British Information Service in Washington, speaking yesterday afternoon at the second in the Peacemaking and World Order series of lectures in University College.

"It is certain that otherwise no new machinery will function better or longer than the League did," said Mr. Butler, who was the Director of the International Labour Office of the League of Nations from 1932 to 1938.

Mr. Butler stated that the machinery of any League is not as important as the spirit in which all the peoples approach it. He conceived the League not to be the ultimate solution of the world's problems, but rather an international spirit, beginning in the successful functioning of such an organization and gradually developing to be the foundation of world peace.

Mr. Butler discussed the reasons for failure of the League and the possibilities for success of the newly planned post-war leagues. The speaker asserted that the League method was right, but pointed out that it failed to prevent war in the last twenty years, primarily because the blueprint of its covenant never became a working model, and that it is to our advantage to understand why this occurred.

The League, as it was conceived, was to include all nations, while in reality at no time did more than five of the seven major powers belong, he recalled. There had not been a single major crisis in the activity of the League in which the absence of the United States and Russia from it was not felt in some degree. By the time the U.S.S.R. had joined in 1934, Japan and Germany had already left, Mr. Butler said.

In addition, the League assumed that all affiliated powers believed in, and wanted, peace. This was anything but true. Some nations in it believed in war as an instrument of national power.

FIND VARSITY HISTORY IN OWN COLUMNS

The high points in the history of The Varsity can be traced through its own columns in the complete files which are kept in the main library. The whole thing began back in . . .

"1880-81—A group of students formed the Varsity Stock Co. and anonymously published The Varsity each week for the benefit of 500 students. Sold copies, five cents each, on corner of Adelaide and Toronto Streets."

"1882-83—One month after Wagner's death The Varsity featured a music review of an all-Wagner concert in Toronto, Hail A.M. and D.I."

"1883-84—Varsity Stock Co. held shareholders' meetings—price raised to 10 cents."

"1884-85—Becomes a literary magazine. First special Christmas issue of twenty pages, green cover of all."

"1885-86—Subtitle, 'A Weekly Journal of Literature, University Thought, and Events.' Typical of the style of reporting is the account of a football match between Varsity and McGill in which the fact that the old Alma Mater won 17-1 was mentioned in the second last paragraph."

"1889-90—The Varsity went out of business because of financial disasters. Missed great scoop when an oil lamp was upturned in U.C."

"1890-91—Varsity revived by U.C. Literary and Scientific Society. Emerged as The Undergraduate—Stephen Leacock, assistant editor, G. Howard Ferguson, business manager."

"1894-95—Jim Tucker wrote a burning editorial: 'As long as staff appointments are under government control there will always be room for suspicion that political motives are being considered.'"

"This started a storm of press objections and agreements. The University threatened Mr. Tucker with suspension but still the demands for a Royal Commission to investigate the political problem on the campus were pushed forth. The students were becoming 'radicals,' and meetings were banned because of the favour of communism. After Tucker was finally barred from lectures The Varsity brought out a special mourning issue, complete with black edges, explaining the seriousness of the situation. This was immediately followed by a student strike, led by William Lyon Mackenzie King."

"Headline: 'Royal Commission Appointed.'"

"1895-96—Letter from Stanford University: 'There's no breath of ill-will or sedition here. Yours truly, Jas. Tucker.'"

"1903-04—The new Meds' Building was opened and Trinity's Medical Department was amalgamated with the University's Faculty of Medicine."

"1905-06—Ralph Connor wrote for The Varsity."

"1907—Duncan Campbell and Marjorie Fickthall were regular contributors."

"1908—The Varsity became a semi-weekly with emphasis on news. Forestry was opened and the U. of T. team lost the Dominion Rugby Championship to the Hamilton Tigers."

"1909—Size of the page was increased."

"1901-12—The Varsity was now a tri-weekly."

"1914—War! The beginning of the C.O.T.C."

"1917—The entire first year of Dentistry made a name for themselves by enlisting all together. There was also a coal shortage that year that closed the University for two weeks."

"1918—Women were on the masthead for the first time because of the man shortage. And in the following year there were returned soldiers swarming across the campus."

"1920—The coveted Dominion Rugby Championship roosted on the U. of T.'s shoulder."

Beauty Contest

There has been widespread criticism recently regarding The Varsity's policy towards the so-called beauty contest that has been given prominence in other campus, as well as city, papers. We have not seen fit, under the present circumstances, to make The University of Toronto the centre of a Canadian University glamour gag.

As an amusing sideline to balance the sombre clouds hanging over us we printed the picture which appeared two weeks ago. But we had no intention of making an issue of the topic when there are far more serious problems at hand.

We are printing The Varsity under increasingly difficult conditions. The reduction in its size has made adequate news coverage on the campus a worrying problem. We do not plan to manufacture such a feature as a university beauty contest to gain attention. We have not the space nor do we feel that the time is politic. Criticism of The University from outside quarters during wartime has been rampant as it is, without encouragement. As a university newspaper, it is not the function of The Varsity to run competition with pictorial magazines or to carry on controversy with other papers unless the nature of the topic warrants it.

Correspondence

The Editor of The Varsity.

Madam,

The thoughtful editorial "Reorientation" appearing in your issue of November 8 discloses an unawareness of the steps that have recently been taken towards further liberalization of the courses in the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering.

For years a course in English has been given in the First Year and a course in General Economics in the Second Year. Other courses in the liberal field, either announced or actually being given, are: First Year—Engineering and Society; Third Year—Modern World History and An Introduction to Political Science; Fourth Year—Modern Political and Economic Trends and The Philosophy of Science.

The staff in Applied Science and Engineering recognizes, as do the leaders of the engineering profession generally, that those engineers who would go farthest and most effectively discharge the duties of enlightened and conscientious citizenship must, while in the University, acquire some familiarity with certain areas of thought that are totally outside the field of technology.

C. R. YOUNG,
Dean of App. Sci.

November 13, 1944.

(Editor's Note.—The Varsity hails Dean Young as an outspoken ally of integration of humanities with engineering courses. The introduction of such courses at the School of Practical Science deserves more publicity than it appears to have been given in the past. Quite wisely plans have been and are being made to ensure full comprehension of problems that lie ahead. Present and future issues will have to be viewed in the widest perspective that Science, History, Philosophy and other such courses can give. Particular questions will have to be considered under the light of general principles derived from just such an integrated education. In the editorial "Reorientation" we were concerned with the maintenance at The University of a balance between the liberal arts colleges and technical faculties. In the post-war world control of employment and opening up of new industries and opportunities will necessarily place stress on the practical sciences. It will be inevitable that the liberal arts colleges will decrease, unless some steps are taken by The University. We are made aware by your letter, sir, that some of these desired measures are already being taken in the Faculty of Applied Science. The problem at the back of our minds was one of concern with the state of the cultural courses when the inevitable swing back to them occurred. Increased enrolment in technical courses (necessitated by such post-war plans as the opening up of Northern Canada, town planning, etc.) might possibly lead to complete disregard of the welfare of the status of the liberal arts colleges. Planning such as is now being effected at S.P.S. will protect the future of these colleges. Not only will the injection of such subjects into technical courses provide more adequate knowledge but will also stimulate interest in arts courses themselves. This interest as an end in itself may then be handed down to succeeding generations when the urgency of skilled labour is not as dominant.)

ART MUSIC Drama

Vistuosos

Conservatory Concert Hall

Lubka Kolessa, the distinguished Ukrainian pianist, gave a brilliant recital yesterday afternoon, the second in the present series of five o'clock recitals. Dispensing with the conventional flood-lighted platform, Mme. Kolessa wished to play rather in the semi-darkness which led one to concentrate on the music, not the performer.

Exception was taken to the arrangement of the programme with the heaviest and latest composer placed first. A composition rarely heard because of its technical superhuman demands, Brahms' Twenty-four Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Handel, shows the inexhaustible wealth of resources that this gigantic nineteenth century composer could command. Infinite variety of romantic colourings and moods were contrasted with each succeeding variation. A tendency to mundane interpretation was felt in the simpler passages, while the more elaborate ones were executed with complete mastery of the keyboard.

The Schubert group, coming after the deeply significant Brahms, was a welcome relief and the gracefully charming themes sang their irresistible melodies through each one. Scherzo in B flat, a playful piece popular at student recitals, was crisp and more interesting than usual, while Thou art repose (transcribed by Liszt) flowed majestically on from its simple exposition with the left hand.

Bach's Italian Concerto fell rather flat after the preceding works. Continual repetition of certain sections without any appreciable variety in the interpretation produced a sameness which was not entirely the fault of the performer. We are told that it was originally written for the clavicembalo with two keyboards which would change the complexion somewhat.

What impresses one most about Mme. Kolessa's playing is her ability to get right inside the piano, to wring every ounce of possibilities from the instrument, lamentably showing the limitations of the Conservatory concert grand piano. Her legato tone, however, melts beneath liquid fingers, and clarity of melodic line is never lost sight of even in the most fluent passages.

Mme. Kolessa will play again on December 13th. The third concert in the series will be held on November 29th, when the Parlow String Quartet will perform quartets by Glinka and Tchaikowsky.

Ode,

Designed to be sung by a choir of mixed voices from the bell-tower at daybreak, at the breaking-point of an all-night session concerning Biography Cards, Publication Dates, Photographic Coverage, and other matters too numerous to mention.

I. Choral Introduction, Allegra ad Nauseam

We produce Torontonensis with reiterated curses,
It's only for a holiday we take to chanting verses;

We're sure to run your picture, be you angular or stout,
But write your own Biography or we shall leave it out—

And hand it in by Monday at the latest.

(Pause for hari-kari)

II. Soulful octette: xylophone and dictaphone obligato

Torontonensis, numbing tome,
Where themes and dedications roam,
Pasquale d'Angelic attitudes,
And biographic platitudes—
We suffer, toil, and die for thee,
We raise this plaintive cry for thee:
Bring in those damn Biography Cards and stop all this fooling around.

III. Floating solo over the sleeping campus

Bi-o-graphy,
Bi-o-graphy,
Where art thou hiding,
Our search deriding?
Joe Glutz and Lizzie Smith,
Think of your kin and kith,
Searching at home—
Searching in vain for the Succinct Biography
That should appear of thee
In this our time.
C'mon, c'mon, you've only got till Monday.

IV. Roistering solo, stein-clinking an blotto

Oh, my name is Hepsy Mothballs and I run the daily rag,
I write the Editorials and Bobkurt holds the bag;

The day I bludgeoned Kidney Myth and left him in his gore,
Eleven maids with twenty mops scrubbed frantically the floor;

I'm known across the campus from MacDonald's clear to Skule,
I play the goat, and tennis, and gin rummy as a rule;

You'd think my name immortal, but apparently it's not:

If I don't turn in my Biography Card,
If I don't complete my Biography Card,
IF I FORGET MY BIOGRAPHY

Any Time's SHOPPING TIME

FAIRWEATHER'S MAIN FLOOR is a centralized spot for fashion shopping. Clothes of interest to the business girl and the University girl have been collected and are on view for quick shopping. Comfortable woollen dresses in those becoming all-purpose shirtwaists or bow styles in plain or fluffy cashmere materials, feather soft woollens, etc. They come in sizes 11 to 18 and 12 to 20, in flattering warm shades of coral, orchid, powder blue, aqua, natural, green. Fairweather's Main Floor is also a grand shopping spot for blouses of the University type.

NORTHWAY'S PRESENT THE "ANTELOPE COAT" . . . It comes in a rich new shade of brown, highlighted to a shimmering of fawn, in real antelope fur. Shortie or full length, it's young, it's warm, and it's windproof, versatile as a circus performer, casual for sports wear, with all sorts of stannin, but luxurious for town wear and can be worn in a boxy wrap-around for blustery winter days or as a tuxedo for evening elegance. No wonder the "Antelope" coat is rocketing to popularity. It's a natural for the co-ed. 115.00 for the "Shortie" and 129.00 for the full length. In all sizes, at Northway's Fashionland.

THE BEAUTIFUL THING about shopping for a wardrobe the Evangeline "mix or match" way is that you can add to it and change its face when you're in the mood without spending a serious amount of cash. Those Evangeline mix or match fashions lend themselves to quick changes and sudden revision, meaning you can build up to a different effect at short notice while not disturbing the basic costume. The Evangeline Shops are easy gift-shopping havens, too, where gifts any girl will cherish may be picked off at a moment's notice, wrapped and dispatched without complication.

MANY PEOPLE GET unnecessarily excited over aches and pains which can be relieved by the simple means of applying a good liniment. Sloan's is recommended for the muscular pains which are the result of over-activity in athletics. (A) Because it brings circulation to the spot to assist nature in clearing up the condition, and (B) because it eases the pain until nature has a chance to get working on the cause. Doctors recommend Sloan's as tops wherever the use of a good liniment is indicated, which makes it smart to keep a bottle of Sloan's handy in the locker or medicine cabinet.

LOOKING LOVELY makes life much less complicated . . . and a good cleansing cream is one of the best ways to know that your face is doing right by your reputation. . . Du Barry cleansing cream is ready to do a glamorous turn for you by means of an efficient clean-up job after a dusty day. It's every woman's privilege to keep her face soft as gentle whisper, sweet-textured and fragrant as flowers in the sunshine. If it's Du Barry it's a safe and certain cleansing cream.

FUR COAT TIME AGAIN, and that means a visit to the E. F. Springer shop at 56 Bloor Street West will be in order, whether you're on the prowl for a better fur coat at the moment or looking into the future possibilities of going ritzy on the folks. A "super-de-luxe" fur coat may seem an extravagance but actually when you count the savings such a coat makes possible by doing away with the necessity of expensive garments to build up your wardrobe, you'll find it an economy in the long run. A well-known actress we've been interviewing pointed to her very beautiful fur coat and confided "that's saved me more cash in 'prestige' clothes than I can count in dollars." E. F. Springer goes in for the type of coat which talks prestige, but intelligently priced, at that.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Mike O'Brien

(Editor's Note.—Today's column is penned by a Senior Schoolman whose opinions may or may not be biased, depending on whether the reader is a Schoolman or not.)

PLUG, PLUG, PLUG?

With the preponderance of attention which has been paid to the more or less mediocre teams dabbling with the pigskin this semester, we felt some publicity might be given to a high-class ball team—we mean, Senior School, who will win the Mulock Cup for the second year, in the near future. We had concurred with Syd Cooper, Director of School Publicity, and Coop was full of fax and figs about the beef trust.

Firstly, the team has not been scored upon by any of their opponents this season. They would like to keep this record intact.

Team Captain Murray Cross, 195 pounds of plunging middle, is a member of last year's squad, so play-off competition is nothing new to him. Also on the middle line we have perennial Walt Sharpe, also a holdover and coach of the Junior School team.

On the half line, averaging 180 pounds, we find Doug Keary, Bern Booth, and Ross Clare. All three are going great guns again this season. At quarter are Stumpy Evans, filling brother George's spot on the '43 team, and Ross Upper, weighing only 150 pounds but who is capable of capitalizing from a play on the ten-yard line.

Looking at the backfield, one might find Eric Major at 215, George Shaw, 195, and Harry Jones, 170, toss their weight around to no small advantage.

Playing for the first time in intramural circles is Don McMichael, who holds down flying wing spot. At centre is 220 pounds of reinforcement in the person of Gus Campbell. Flanking Gus are a couple of sturdy fellows, Bill Moffat, vet. of intramural and interscholastic rugby wars for high on twenty years, and another holdover, Doug Currie. At middles are Sharpe and Cross, while the outer flank is composed of Jim Bromley, who tips the scale at 170; Ken Craibie, who started the season with Oakwood Indians and by dint of hard work was promoted to the School squad. Bob Moore alternates with Craibie, and Bromley, the well-known Engineering Society president, got all-star rating for his effort last fall.

Rounding out the team are such notables as Dan Collongs at 210, Gil Boa scaling 175, McKnight 210, Bus Booth 180, and, finally, Herb Stricker. Herbie got off to a swell start this fall but an old knee injury flared up and relegated him to seating capacity.

Haven't much to say re the manager of the beef trust. Out of approximately 1,250 people (?) at the Schoolhouse, Becky Thatcher was chosen for the all-important job of dishing out the oranges at half-time (which she does with an air) and generally keeping the male moral up to the usual high level.

Well, there we are. Of course, there has been some breeze blowing about other teams, such as U.C., etc. Enough of the guff! The pertinent fact is that the Mulock mug is School bound, let the heads fall where they may. Be weeping ya at the carnage.

The Sportswoman

By Hugh Kenner

We don't know what this is doing in the Woman, except that Jan is quite as cajoling as Betsy ever used to be; but any platform will do for a grievance like ours. It concerns the highly one-sided form of indoor sport practised by the dirty Medsman and their acolytes at the Toronto General Hospital when for once they have an Artsman where they want him, which is, laid out flat.

The first morning of our stay, various medical persons came to reconnoitre, notably two winsome uniformed Mata Hari's who flung their arms about one another after the manner of the Follies trio and went into their dialogue, to wit:

"There's Mr. Kenner. He has pneumonia."

"O-o-o-oh— isn't he silly!" (Skipping exit.)

Not long after, a tall and highly sadistic nursing grinned "There he is!" round the door and waved on the charge of seven husky gridders disguised in lab gowns, who pinned us flat and drew blood with a syringe the size of a grease-gun until our two remaining corpuses were playing patty-cake shortly behind our eyebrows. The vampires went on repeating this performance until on the sixth morning we demanded a coupon at the three-gallon mark. That fazed them.

In the brave old days we knew several nurses rather well. They talked a lot about hospital luxury and led us to expect steaming dainties in the hands of a pulchritudinous tray-bearer (see cut) thrice daily, and a little harem of gauzy lovelies to feed us and pat our pillow and squeeze our hand when the caviare didn't digest too well. So when a disgusting sort of bird with one arm flung us an iron tray at lunch time we investigated it incredulously.

On the tray were two plates. One was small, and contained half a stewed pear (which was our dessert), while the other was covered with an inverted soup-plate to keep the contents warm, on the principle of locking the stable door, you know when. Under the soup-plate we found two lumps. One was a boiled potato and the other was a lump of hamburger. A cup introduced as a sort of afterthought contained cold tea without sugar. That was all. We turned our face to the wall and dreamed of roast turkey, and the more we dreamed of it the hungrier we got, until U.C. Senior Girls Lose to P.H.E.

By Jan Murray

Last night saw the P.H.E. Sr. basketball team trounce U.C. Sr. 33-13 after a fast, grim and silent game. The play was equally divided between the two teams but as the results show, the scoring average was heavily weighted in favour of the P.H.E. girls.

At the centre throw, from the first P.H.E. started tossing baskets into the U.C. end, and although Joan Davis and Marion Taylor were able to make a great deal of fast break-aways the play was broken up by the Phys-Ed guards. The U.C. stars managed to get some shots on goal but were unable to pot the basket, again and again. P.H.E. in some well-timed plays took the ball through the Red and White lines to score on long looping shots from far outside the keyhole, despite the work of Barb. Allen to hold them in check. Fast direct passes from Pat Flynn to Doris Clark and then to the basket scored the majority of the P.H.E. baskets.

The U.C. team was held up by the lack of an efficient and well-drilled guard line, while the forwards were off on their shots all through. Against a team like P.H.E., where all plays are tested and proven, the stars of U.C. could not carry their team.

ties of getting permanent peace, and of achieving employment for security, not subject to periodic unemployment. An aim of the C.C.F. which would materially assist the attaining of world peace was toward an international order based on collective security, but which could only be achieved through planned democratic advance at home.

State planning and enterprise would ensure that there would always be employment for youth; Mr. Brewin drew attention to the fact that during unemployment it was always the youth, fresh out of school and not yet established, who suffered the most. His party would bridge the gap which exists between school and employment by having positions open for which training and not influence would qualify youth.

The fear that the form of government would be too bureaucratic, Mr. Brewin explained, had no foundations; the system that would be followed is that which the Dominion finances the province organizes, and the municipality spends. The manner in which a democratic socialism such as the C.C.F. government operates is one of planning which is accepted by the people.

The main theme of the Labour Progressive party representative's talk was coalition. Stewart Smith, a man of long-time membership with the party, stated bluntly that only by coalition could a united Canada cause its economic system to evolve from a capitalist basis to one of state planning. "The majority of Canada at present does not advocate any change in the present economic set-up," he said. "The capitalistic system under which the present Liberal government is operating is quite adequate for the present, but further reform, because of reactionary elements, would be impossible without union of all the parties."

The task of a Coalition government, Mr. Smith said, would be to provide floors for prices and wages, raise the standard of living, assure Canada of free export markets, and extend public ownership to "sick" industries only.

One of the reforms advocated by his party, Mr. Smith said, was the inclusion of every person over the age of 18 in the franchise.

Peace . . .

Other governments and peoples of peaceloving countries were not prepared to use the machinery of the League in crises such as those in the Rhineland and Spain, stated the speaker.

Defects in the League, such as the Unanimity Rule, and the absence of any international force immediately available to it, are being provided for to some extent, in such conferences as that at Dumbarton Oaks, Mr. Butler said.

"The European and Asiatic problems cannot be solved without the help of all the United Nations working in harmony," Mr. Butler concluded.

Ships got Nickel Alloy lungs

WHEN THE C.P.S. LINER "Duchess of Bedford" slid down the ways in 1928, a new era opened in the design of power plants for ships at sea. This liner was the first to use high pressure steam necessitating the use of highly corrosion-resistant condenser tubes.

The condensers are the lungs of the ship's power plant. They condense the steam so that the fresh water in the boilers can be used over and over again.

The "Duchess of Bedford" provided the final proof that Cupro-Nickel condenser tubes (70% Copper, 30% Nickel) could resist the severe corrosion and give much longer life than previously used metals and so cut down repairs and costly tie-ups.

The Canadian Nickel industry, depressed through the loss of its wartime markets, was quick to take advantage of this new market. Definite improvements in the quality and finish of this Nickel alloy were made. Soon Cupro-Nickel condenser tubes were being used in practically all new ships.

Today Canadian Nickel is again diverted to war purposes, and again the industry looks to the future with confidence. Plans are ready to develop and expand old and new peacetime markets, so that the Nickel industry may continue through its own initiative and enterprise, to make still greater contributions to Canada's welfare.

thunder below decks drove us back to the provender on the tray. It was gone! We had slept till two. We interpreted a murmur in the hall as whispered arrangements to have us fed through a tube, and groaned away into slumber until midnight. Then they woke us to take our sleeping pill.

Sporting activity on our part consisted of flinging to the inhabitant of and adjacent bed folded sections of the morning paper, which he eagerly permitted us to buy. It didn't fling too accurately unfolded, and we were just getting adept at launching it unerringly to its objective in the form of a folded dart when the sports page boomeranged out the door into the hair-do of the Head Nurse, who used words every Schoolman should know, and appropriated the whole business.

On the principle of keeping its best invisible, the General puts its loveliest nurses on duty after dark, but, as we might have expected, they were in on the Medical conspiracy. They had an inhuman habit of pocketing their charm (which was turned on full force for Doc (censored) outside in the corridor) and a coldly professional way of wielding a wash-cloth that churned our vitals.

For one single nurse we have a spark of sympathy. She was rolling us about, pyjamaless, between sheets, in the complex process of making the bed with us in it, when suddenly she shrieked and ran, leaving us separated from indignancy by a single loose sheet. Two hours later she panted back, apologizing that she had had an examination.

U.C. Rugby Squad Reaches Mulock Final

Nose Out Close 7-5 Victory Over Hard-fighting Senior Meds in Final Round of Intramural Rugby Yesterday

FABER, HOROWITZ STAR

By A. Cowan

University College gained the final round of the Intramural Rugby League for the third straight year by edging Senior Meds 7-5 in a semi-final game played yesterday at the Stadium. The Royal Collegians have yet to cop the Mulock Cup and this year's team will have to improve considerably over yesterday's form if they hope to capture the title from Senior School.

Play was slow and unspectacular for most of the game due to the muddy condition of the field. U.C. scored all their points in the first half, and just managed to hold the Medsmen off long enough in the second half to win the game. Meds fine was much the stronger and Kuddie Faber surprised everyone by outkicking Staley, of U.C., who was given very poor protection. The Red and White outscored their opponents in the first half 7-3. The seven points came from a converted touchdown, the result of a Horowitz-to-Whittle pass, and a kick by Staley. Meds' three points were all single scores from the boot of Feber. Their other two points in the game were gained by a safety-touch in the last quarter.

Play was fairly even during the first quarter, with neither team able to make any good gains along the ground. Staley was kicking with the wind, and he gradually drove the doctors in their own end. As the quarter ended, the lanky U.C. half got away a bounding kick which rolled into touch behind the Meds' goal-line for one point.

Early in the second quarter Cranham, of U.C., plunged for 15 yards to carry the ball to the Meds' 25. Horowitz tossed a long forward to Whittle. Wade converted. This was the same play that beat Junior School on Monday. Meds put on a determined drive after this.

Russian Reforms Subject of Pares

Civil liberty, common to all liberal Englishmen, was sacred to the Russian progressives before the first world war, said Sir Bernard Pares, speaking on Russian reforms in Convocation Hall yesterday.

The work of the reformers, begun under Alexander II and interrupted by Alexander III's reactionary rule, was continued under Nicholas II, through the efforts of the town and country councils, and of the middle class, who formed the first Russian trade unions, called "professional unions," the speaker said. Education and Public Health were left in the hands of the councils.

A programme was passed by the zemstvo (council) chairmen in 1904, Sir Bernard said, demanding liberty of person, conscience, speech, press, meeting and association, and a National Assembly on the English parliamentary basis.

The first Duma, or National Assembly, which Nicholas called after a general strike, was modelled after the parliament, Sir Bernard said. A cabinet system was adopted and universal suffrage was extended somewhat later, he continued.

The first Duma, dissolved by the Czar, was followed by the premiership of Stolypin, who had the superhuman task of leading in reform and combatting revolution, the speaker stated.

Under the Third Duma a number of reforms were passed, largely due to the brilliant leadership of the House by Alexander Guchkov, who was rather peripatetic was the result, Sir Bernard said. An English politician, said the speaker. A general increase in pro-

Convocation Announced

President H. J. Cody announced yesterday that a Special Convocation of the University of Toronto will be held in Convocation Hall on Tuesday, November 21, at which honorary degrees will be conferred.

The degree of Doctor of Laws (honoris causa) will be conferred upon His Excellency the Honourable Ray Atherton, ambassador of the U.S.A.; Winifred C. Cullis, professor emerita of the University of London; J. C. Ferguson, adviser to the Executive Yuan of the National Government of China; J. R. Mott, president of the World's Alliance of the Y.M.C.A.; G. W. Pepper, lawyer and author; His Excellency the Hon. Baron Robert Silvercruys, the ambassador of Belgium to Canada.

The degree of Doctor of Engineering (honoris causa) will be conferred upon C. J. Mackenzie, president of the National Research Council of Canada.

Practical Religion Recommended by Lang

Preaching to multitudes is like long-range bombing, it softens the objective. But personal evangelism is like taking the objective at the point of a bayonet, said Mr. David Long at a meeting of the V.C.F. yesterday.

Every Christian has a definite responsibility resting on him to be a personal evangelist. This calls for real and practical godliness. Unfortunately in teaching large crowds, the true character of the speaker is not revealed.

"The work of God today is not being done solely or mainly in large groups," Mr. Long went on to quote examples of this from the Bible, to show that this has always been true.

After urging the students to practice personal evangelism in their own lives, and stressing the importance of it in university life, he closed the meeting with a prayer.

marked, and advance was made in education, the relaxing of censorship, and in the development of industry and business.

Liberalism was destroyed by the war in 1914, when it was thought that but a few more years were needed for completing the reforms, Sir Bernard concluded.

our example, the women began wearing white, curtain-like dresses, draped loosely about. The men wore trousers and blouses. Where formerly a man would marry six husky women or so, chiefly so that they might occupy themselves working the fields, he now married one woman—and chose her for more personal reasons. The marrying off of eight-year-old girls to 50-year-old men was stopped. So it came that women, who formerly were menial things, assumed a status of their own."

Since then he has served as pastor at Grace Chapel, Sherbrooke, Que., but only because authorities are detaining him from returning.

"I want to go back to Africa," he says. "I have my work to do. I am in the midst of translating the New Testament into the native Songo language. And I want to carry on my evangelical work. Life on this side of the water seems to be artificial. I don't pretend to hold any Rousseauian theories of return to primitivism, but I do wish to return to a life simple, perhaps crude, but a life where ideals are unmarred by unneeded complexities."

Liberal Arts Smith's Topic

Dr. Sidney Smith, principal of University College, said that the universities of Canada look on the University of Toronto as a national university and that therein lies a special challenge to the University of Toronto to march forward. Dr. Smith was speaking before the annual meeting of the Alumni Federation of the University of Toronto last night on the topic "My Views on Education."

Dr. Smith stressed the importance of the liberal arts, stating that the true scientist will say that he alone cannot rebuild our civilization. We must restore to its proper place the study of the humanities and social sciences, although there should be a combination of physical and social sciences, he said.

Speaking particularly to the Alumni, Dr. Smith declared: "Your University can be no greater than your interest in her, your support of her, and your ambition for her."

In concluding, Dr. Smith quoted H. G. Wells, who wrote that there was a race between catastrophe and education. "That race is still on," he stated.

New Physics Laboratory Planned for McGill

Montreal—(CUP)—Construction of a cyclotron and radiation laboratory at McGill University will be undertaken immediately, Dr. Cyril F. Ames, principal and vice-chancellor, announced Wednesday.

In setting up the 25,000,000-volt atom smasher, McGill University will provide a "flexible tool" for studies in nuclear physics which will "greatly stimulate post-war research and encourage practical applications of great value in many scientific fields" the story goes on to say.

The machine will be one of the most powerful in the world, and its function is to probe the constitution and structure of matter.

Prof. J. S. Foster, of the McGill Physics Department, will supervise construction of the laboratory.

Attention Science Students

All male students in the Faculty of Arts who entered the University in September, 1944, and who enrolled in honour courses in Groups C and D, or in the Pass Course taking three of their regular five subjects from Group II, are required by the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel to fill out declaration forms at the Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall.

All male students who entered the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering in September, 1944, are also required by the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel to fill out declaration forms at their faculty office in the Mining Building.

Kindly attend to this at once.

Avukah Discusses Aim of Zionism

"Setting off to Palestine next week is not what Zionism asks," said Julius Sokolof at Tuesday evening's Avukah meeting. "It is rather a movement to gain recognition of the Jewish people's right to regard Palestine as a focal centre of their national culture."

Elections were held, with Max Rosenfield being chosen president and Ruth Kestenberg vice-president. This year's executive also includes Nellie Gurvitch, Aubrie Rotenberg, Jean Douglas-Mann, Murray Sachs, Max Day, Julius Sokoloff, Zeld Mann, Esther Granstein and Irwin Rechtschaffen.

The newly-elected president discussed the report on the quota system, presented by the Avukah Society to the chairman and members of the Committee on Education of the Manitoba Legislative Assembly. The report contends that scholarship should be the primary basis on which students are accepted, he said.

President's Reception

The President and Mrs. Cody are holding a reception on Wednesday, December 6th, at the Ontario Museum for the academic and administrative staffs of the University, at which Dr. and Mrs. Sidney Smith will be guests of honour.

Hart House Sing Songs Brighten Noon Hours

By Ernst R. Deutsch

"Our sing-songs in Hart House are entirely informal," said Mr. Ross Workman, when interviewed last night. "If you feel like it, drop in. You are free to sing basso or tenor or any frequency you might chance to lift on the way. But you have to try."

This year, again, the jolly timbre of male voices will enliven the noon-day spirit of Hart House. Today and every Friday hence, till December 15, undergraduates who have a throat to grind can join the chorus at 1:00 p.m. in the East Common Room.

"We intend to revive some of the old college songs," Mr. Workman continued. "Beyond this our profoundest purpose is to have a good time."

Sing-songs, launched over twenty years ago by P. C. Davidson, a Chemistry student, have always been popular among undergraduates. Mr. Workman, now manager of Varsity arena, studied Civil Engineering in Toronto, where he graduated in 1909. He is shy to admit any experience in singing beyond some

Dean Seeley, Kingston Rector and Dean of the Diocese of Ontario, is Named as Successor

EFFECTIVE JUNE, 1945

At the annual meeting of the Corporation of Trinity College held yesterday the retirement of the Provost, the Reverend Dr. F. H. Cosgrave, was announced to take effect in June, 1945. This will end a 37-year association with the college. The appointment of the Very Reverend Reginald Sidney Kingsley Seeley, D.D., Rector of St. George's Cathedral, Kingston, and Dean of the Diocese of Ontario, as Provost of Trinity College from June, 1945, was confirmed.

Dr. Cosgrave has been Provost since 1926. A graduate of the University of Dublin, he came to Canada and was appointed a lecturer in Trinity College in 1907. The Corporation expressed its regret that this long period of service was to terminate in 1945, and placed on record a review of the progress of the College under his leadership.

Dean Seeley is a graduate of the University of Cambridge. He was a scholar of Christ's College and later Chaplain of St. John's College, Cambridge. He was for several years Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Bristol.

In 1938 he was appointed as Professor of Exegetical Theology in St. John's College and Canon of St. John's Cathedral, Winnipeg. In 1941 he became Warden of St. John's College, Winnipeg. In 1943 he accepted the position of Rector of St. George's Cathedral, Kingston, and Dean of the Diocese of Ontario. During the present academic year he is assisting in the Department of Philosophy at Queen's University.

Professor Hay Speaker In S.C.M. Lecture Series

Prof. David W. Hay, M.A., will be the next speaker at the S.C.M. series on Religion: The Authority for Life. He will continue the series by speaking on "The Authority of Christ" in the Women's Union, Tuesday, at 1 p.m.

Prof. Hay came from Dunfermline, Scotland, in September, 1944. Before coming to this country he was a padre in the Scots Guards. He now is a professor at Knox College, where he is teaching Systematic Theology. A discussion and questions will follow Prof. Hay's talk. Everyone welcome.

Crusoe Existence Led by Missionary During Ministration Among Natives

Lion hunting, bird doctors, human skulls and polygamy, among other interesting things, came up for discussion yesterday in an interview with a missionary returned from nine years in the heart of Africa.

"It was a sort of isolated, Robinson-Crusoe existence—but with plenty of excitement thrown in for good measure," said Pastor David Long, after speaking before the Varsity Christian Fellowship. He was talking about the years from 1933 to 1939 he spent as missionary at a post 200 miles from nearest civilization in Portuguese West Africa.

The Crusoe parallel is a natural one, therefore. He spent his time in a mud-walled hut with grass thatch roof. The furniture and building was of his own making. Along with his wife and another married missionary couple, he helped build a dispensary and a school. Without radio, movies or telephone, receiving mail every month or so, he lived a simple life—his only objective being that of spreading Christianity among the Bantu Negroes.

It took time, of course, to learn the Chokwe and Songo languages. But once this had been achieved, he worked with zeal. The natives seemed to take to him, too.

"They're not much different from the American Negroes," he says. "They were kindly, lovable, deeply emotional perhaps, but a happy-going people. It took time to ameliorate their suspicion, because they had been so ill-treated by the Portuguese."

Going on to speak of his evangelical work with the natives, Mr. Long recalled that the missionaries encountered difficulty with the witch doctors. Fear that their men were being influenced by the white men, he said, caused the witch doctors to cast imaginary spells on the people.

Despite such hindrances, however, said Mr. Long, his work went on apace and the converted natives took up bits about the mission post. The transition to semi-civilization, though, presented strange social problems.

"We didn't try to Westernize them," he insists. "It was a matter of their wishing to imitate their Christian leaders. Formerly both male and female had gone about with a small animal skin hanging about their loins. Following

An Eye To The Future

Recent discussion of the post-war world, even though plans are still embryonic, clarifies the fact that reactionary groups will be forced to undergo a change of mind. In certain fields these groups serve to effect a balance with radicalism. One of the many organizations, however, which can legitimately consider proposals for post-war improvements is that concerned with the future of national health.

Last month the CAMSI committee representing nine Canadian medical schools drew up a brief on health planning which will be presented to the Canadian Youth Commission. The pamphlet is obviously the result of prolonged and serious thought on the part of the committee. It is unfortunate that the people who prepared it represent only a minority of Canada's medical undergraduates.

Queen's University has practically repudiated the entire plan. It is to be hoped that medical students on this campus will not react in a similar manner, for the principles involved are promulgated with sound thought for post-war conditions.

For example, CAMSI suggests that there should be federal legislation for a national health insurance plan. The administration of health insurance would still be left to the jurisdiction of the provinces, each of which must pass an act of its own to obtain federal grants. There is one addition to this suggestion which we would like to see. General practitioners who have had pensions under their care invariably find that in the majority of cases such free medical services were abused. The recipients of pensions appeared at medical offices on the slightest provocation. In many cases doctors practising in the countryside have found that numerous frauds have been arranged by the backwoods patients to deceive the practitioner into giving gratis unnecessary services. The one method of combating such abuses is that of educating the people to whom insurance would be given. It is undoubtedly a broad and vague undertaking, but it would seem that the Canadian Youth Commission could play an important role in this respect.

The committee of medical students and interests have also taken into consideration the fact that the remuneration of practitioners should be arranged on a basic salary which would take into account professional qualifications, the hazard and responsibility of the work plus a per capita rate proportionately higher in rural areas. Such provision adequately balances the too prevalent attitude that medicine can be socialized purely from the layman's point of view. In smaller practices, especially, doctors are expected to cope with extremely difficult circumstances as a matter of course in their daily routine.

Another point in this plan of which we heartily approve is that including a system of government support to train the most brilliant men and women in the fight against disease. Not only intelligence but also actual practicability in medical work should be taken into account. There are many brilliant medical students who receive high marks on examinations but who cannot execute their practical work as well as the student who receives average grades. It is to be hoped that governmental grants ensuring scholarship basis will obviate the present racial discrimination which is apparent in many medical faculties.

There are numerous other articles contained in the brief, each of which would merit an editorial, if space permitted. CAMSI is raising very pertinent issues relevant to the demands which will be found in the years to come. Every medical student should familiarize himself with the suggestions set down by the committee. From an economic as well as social viewpoint the brief exhibits thorough thought and must not be tossed carelessly aside. Varsity medical students (even if Queen's do not) should find the plan meritorious of acceptance.

Correspondence

To the Editor, 158 St. George Street,
The Varsity, Nov. 15, 1944

Dear Madam,

Your lead editorial headed "Control Education" in the issue of Nov. 15th showed such a naïveté and profound ignorance of one of the basic problems confronting modern society that it is both shocking and disheartening.

The point of the editorial was "financial assistance to universities by a C.C.F. government would subject the internal policy of the institution to government correction" and "once an institution, educational or otherwise, becomes indebted to any body for financial support, the possibility of its becoming a tool in the hands of a supporting body is always a present threat."

Now, it is self-evident that the university must have funds to operate. These funds may come from (1) students' fees, (2) individual endowment, (3) the state. Since students' fees are never sufficient to support the university's operations, then the balance must come from private or state endowment or both. This involves "the possibility of its becoming a tool in the hands of the supporting body." This supporting body will then be either a group of wealthy individuals or the state and will possibly have the power of correcting the internal policies of the institution. Each will tend to reflect the opinions of its governing body, but as we happen to live in a democracy where the government represents and is responsible to the will of the people and must have the interests of the country as a whole at heart, it is therefore far more desirable to have state control than any one limited group which will tend to reflect its own opinions. This principle of the control of the instruments of education is recognized in all democratic countries. The state controls our public and high schools and the majority of universities on this continent. Does The Varsity suggest that these institutions be freed from these "shackles" and revert to the status of privately endowed and restricted schools?

If it is not state control that The Varsity fears, but control by the C.C.F. state, these fears are unfounded for its proposals are that the entrance requirements to universities be on the same basis as other institutions of learning, viz., entrance to be on the basis of ability, not financial ability, race, creed or colour.

Is it sheer coincidence that McGill (a privately endowed school) a "small struggling university whose voice is free" should adopt the narrow and bigoted policy of restriction of entrance on grounds other than academic ability, while the "shackle" state endowed universities admit these students because of pressure of the "vested interests"?

C.C.F. as a democratic movement offers no threat to the integrity of the university, but rather broadens its liberty by taking the control away from irresponsible private individuals and places the university on an independent footing responsible only to the will of the people of the country.

Yours very sincerely,
BARRY ALLEN, S.P.S. II.

Day and Night Prof. Lectures

A Royal Commission to investigate University Staff salaries was promised yesterday as the result of publicity attending the activities of Mrs. Pierrepont Dooleydingus, who has cashed in on her learned husband's propensity for lecturing in his sleep as a means of supplementing the family exchequer.

Giving evidence at a preliminary hearing in the Commission's secret headquarters in the crypt beneath the Hart House sundial, J. Gorgem Stonebleeder of Isley-on-the-Ottawa, Income Tax Investigator, stated that the Dooley dingus establishment had been under suspicion in his department for some time.

"Hiding disguised as a dog behind a fireplug on the 21st inst., I discerned the female in question emerge from her flat wearing shoes, no less," he stated "Knowing that a professor's salary does not extend to such frivolous luxuries, I immediately diagnosed a supplementary source of income."

Explaining how he gained access to the house after dark, delivered in a box alleged to contain the quarterly instalment of income-tax forms, Mr. Stonebleeder proceeded to his description of the night's nefarious activities.

"In an upper room I found tiers of benches arranged in a circle around a bed of ordinary description. At 11:05 precisely, Mrs. Dooleydingus took up her station at the door and proceeded to collect two bits each from a procession of students who filed in and arranged themselves on said benches.

"At 11:48 Prof. Dooleydingus, attired in a nightshirt of particularly elegant pattern and with a tattered gown thrown over his shoulders, crawled into the bed and drank off his sleeping potion. The lights were dimmed and a hush of expectancy fell over the throng.

"At 11:57 Prof. Dooleydingus began to lecture in a muffled voice on the Binomial Theorem."

On cross-examination, Mr. Stonebleeder recalled seeing a timetable posted in the downstairs hall to the following effect:

12 to 1:30—Mathematics 3a.
1:30 to 2:47—Comments on T. S. Eliot murmured out of a heavy fog.
3:00 to 5:17—Sidelights on the clothes controversy with demonstration of current American profanity.
5:18 to 5:22—The lecture will be brought to a close with a rendition of "Don't Believe Everything You Dream."
5:23 to 8:05—Drugged slumber.

Mrs. Dooleydingus, put on the stand for the prosecution, wept forth a statement that the night's receipts had consisted of 17 quarters and a Dewey button.

Forestry Victory Captures Title

SCORE 7-3

Forestry's lacrosse quintette shellacked S.P.S. IV 7-3 yesterday afternoon, to finish the season with a perfect record of four wins in four starts. The win gave the Foresters the Group IV title and a play-off berth.

The first period ended with the score 3-0 for Forestry. Carmichael opened the game with a neat goal, only eight seconds after the first whistle, while "Moose" Hambly beat Hennessy for the other two. In the second quarter School rallied, and outscored them 2-1. Newhouse and Fordyce were the School marksmen, but Graham kept the south-west boys ahead with his goal.

The winners outscored School 2-1 in the third period and 1-0 in the last. Carmichael and Currie scored for Forestry, while Fordyce notched his second for S.P.S. in the third stanza. Carmichael was the only scorer in the last quarter.

Forestry's first line of Carmichael, Cox, and Hambly were mainly responsible for the win. Under the coaching of Gord Jull they have developed since the first of the fall into a highly effective trio, and play as a unit on the floor. Newhouse and Fordyce played a good offensive game for the Schoolmen, but the team's lack of co-ordination in their passing plays left them on the short end of the score. Bill Johnson played almost the whole game for the Foresters, and by close checking on School's Frank Fordyce throughout kept that powerhouse down to two goals.

sparked by Lewis and Faber, which took the play to the U.C. five-yard line. A holding penalty to Giardine on the next play set them back ten yards, and the best they could muster was a single score. Meds got two more points before the quarter ended from long kicks by Faber.

Neither team was able to register a score in the third quarter. Horowitz's plunging gave U.C. a slight edge in the play. Meds opened up in the last period and made yards three times on a pass to George Lewis and plunges by Probert. This brought them in close enough to attempt a placement but it was wide and short. U.C. got the ball on their own five and the U.C. centre, Rosen, whose snaps were poor throughout the whole game, shot a high one over Staley's head on the last down. Meds rushed in to tackle Staley behind the line for two points. This ended the scoring in the game, making it 7-5 in favour of U.C.

Staley, Kuhn, Horowitz and Crahan were the stars of the day for U.C. Lewis, Faber and Probert and the whole Meds' line fought hard in a losing cause.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Jerry Ewins

The Rugby Situation ...

U.C. eked out a very lucky win over Sr. Meds yesterday at the Stadium to carry them into the semi-final round. The score was 7-5 but it was anybody's game until the final whistle. The win gave U.C. the dubious right to meet Sr. S.P.S. in the final game next Thursday. The Schoolmen could still be upset by today's winner of the Vic-St. Mike's game, but such a thing is extremely unlikely. Sr. School packs too much power for either of these two, and very probably enough to beat U.C.

If Meds could have produced a good offensive when they needed it, the play-off picture might be different. Their line held a big edge over that of U.C. but they couldn't put the polish into their plays, necessary to provide scoring punch. U.C. did not play well. If they had displayed the wide-open type of offensive that was deluged on Meds' Junior brothers in that 42-0 shellacking not so long ago they would have won going away by two touch-downs. The day was a bad one for their type of play, as they pass the ball around a good deal in the backfield and you can't do this with a wet, slippery ball, but they were far below their usual standards.

One forward pass decided the issue. Whitte, who has proven himself to be quite a ball-hawk lately, gobbled up a Horowitz heave to score the touch that gave U.C. the winning margin. They showed themselves to have a very weak defence against a short pass down the centre, as Meds completed this play every time the passer hit his man. Their line must tighten up if they are contemplating holding that stone wall of Sr. School. Currah and Kuhn were the only U.C. men to stand up at all to Meds yesterday.

A Varsity Hockey Team ...

In a meeting of the Athletic Directorate last Wednesday, a proposal from some of the hockey players among the students was approved that a Varsity Hockey Team be organized this year. It is to be composed of all men on the campus who are interested in playing hockey for a representative team from among the faculties of the University of Toronto, and will operate on much the same basis as the Varsity Blues of last winter's basketball fame. There will be no travelling done by the team, that is, all the games will be played in Toronto, preferably at the Arena. The games played will be of an exhibition nature only as the team will not enter any specified league. Members of the team will also be eligible for the Interfaculty teams so that the Jennings Cup League will not suffer any degradation in playing standards.

All those who are interested should get in touch with the Athletic Office in Hart House on this. Those students already granted releases to play on teams outside the University will not be eligible for the team, but this should only affect a relative few as most have been waiting for the result of the Directorate's ruling on it. The Standing Hockey Committee is working on all arrangements for the team along with those men granted Intramural Colours in hockey.

The Senior Harrier ...

The Senior Cross-Country Harrier Race takes place tomorrow at 10 a.m. out at High Park. All competitors must sign the eligibility sheets and report at Hart House at 9:15 so that they may leave as a body at 9:30 sharp. Transportation is being arranged. Men who live near High Park need not report at Hart House but may go directly to the Bloor Street entrance of the park and meet the rest there. The race will take place, rain or shine.

"The Sportswoman"

By Janice Murray

Details, always details ...

And so we will clear some of them up. It seems that there has been lots and lots of criticism about the write-ups appearing in this column. Firstly, some teams say that they have not had enough prominence given their games, while other teams have had quite long these written about them in the same column. "Why?" is the query. Well, we are going to keep to the policy of writing up the better games as they should be, that is, a good long review if we have the information to do so, and giving the slower games brief coverage. We are not going to divide our column into two inches for each game, as some would desire, having four games and an overall length of eight inches. When some claim that the other day we gave too much space to some games we ask them to see the officials of the game and see if it was not as good as we claimed, and then some. We are also handicapped by the fact that no one on the teams whom we call seems to have any idea of the score, the game or the players. We cannot be up on the bench at O.C.E. for four hours every night, although we do spend a good deal of time in that very spot. Which brings us to ...

Last Night ...

The U.C. Freshies were taken for a ride to the tune of 21-10 by P.H.E. Fr. in a fast, hard game. U.C. played well, but against the up and coming Phys-Eders they had too tough a time.

In the second game St. Hilda's

Freshies took Dental Nurses 7-4. The young Saints have still, for our money, the best guard line in the Freshie League and held the Nurses to only one basket, the others coming from free throws. If their forwards were as good, they would be unbeatable, but their scoring power is as weak as the score of 7 indicates after the many breakaways they had.

In the last game, Vic II took Physio 17-10, after a fair game in which no one really starred for either team. The playing was clear and even throughout.

The great game of the evening was the third, in which Vic A cleaned the hitherto unbeaten St. Mike's gang, 33-9. This was undoubtedly the game of the season. Vic had beautiful, in fact lyrical, plays down the field and St. Mike's didn't have more than ten shots on the Vic goal at the outside. Since most coaches have by now analysed the play in which Rose Marie Cunningham is a sleeper under the basket, they were beaten before it started, and this fact alone was enough to finish the Double Blue. Mike Mahaney, too was stopped by the almost fierce adherence of her guard all through the game, and none of her looping place shots from many feet outside the keyhole rang up a score. We would like to nominate Mildred Donaldson and Shirley Pierce as two of the top shots of the year, and if they play like they did last night, Vic A should clean the league and the final championship. As we see it, P.H.E. is their only serious rival and we would still put our money on Vic. Jan Hardy starred in a starry play defence line.

ARTIFICIAL RESPIRATION COURSE

The University Health Service, with the co-operation of the University of Toronto Athletic Association, is offering to men students and staff a course (lecture, practice, and examination) on Resuscitation, starting Monday, November 20th—Debates Room—Hart House—4:45 p.m.

All men enrolled in Life Saving Courses must take this Course to qualify for their awards. Personnel of the U.N.T.D., the C.O.T.C., and the U.A.S. should take the course.

To facilitate time-table arrangements the lecture period, the practical work and the examination will be duplicated as indicated below. This will give all interested students an opportunity to take the complete course in two periods. If interested, kindly sign the list at the Athletic Office. For further details see either Mr. Griffiths of Mr. McCutcheon.

All male students and staff in the University are eligible to enrol and take the course.

Men who satisfactorily complete the course will qualify for the Resuscitation Service Badge of the Royal Life Saving Society.

hither and yon

with frank rasky

Outside the doorway at the University Press something occurred recently which assures us once and for all that the Male of the Species has gone soft, soft. While the Mere Female has gone hard, hard.

So this Mere Female, otherwise known as a babe in this column, walks out of the Press and, waiting outside, is a male student, who says: "Hello!"

Automatically, the babe smiles back a similar hello, and walks on. Suddenly she stops up, turns back, and says, "Say, are you trying to flirt with me? I don't know you."

The student grins back. "That's right. You don't know me. But how about going for a coffee and getting to?"

Last we saw of them they were locked arm-in-arm, wandering up toward a well-known Harbord eatery.

WHAT HAS HE GOT WE AIN'T?

Maybe this one is a little bit off the campus, but, shucks, we liked it, too. A Varsity staffer, reminiscing about her childhood, as Varsity staffers will, was thinking back to the time when she first looked at her mother with more than a fond-child eye.

It happened when she was 16, and had been boasting to her mom about some of the male conquests she had made at high school.

Instead of saying "Uh-huh," and forgetting about it, the mother took the daughter to a movie that night and had her stand beside the cashier's cage, as she declared in firm tone: "Two tickets, please. One adult's, AND ONE ADOLESCENT'S."

WHY DAUGHTERS GO GREY.

Students grow more mercenary every day, we are sure, after hearing of a certain professor about the old campus who opened an examination paper and found a letter which read:

"Dear Professor: If you sell any of these answers to a humorous magazine, please send me my share."

STUDENT WORKERS, ARISE FROM STARVATION.

A friend of a babe we know, walking along a college corridor, made the conventional statement: "Honestly, I just can't adjust my curriculum to save my life."

"Don't worry," said our babe, "it doesn't show, dear."

to teach individual good. The purpose of the state is to represent the will of the people or the common good. Individual and common goods are two separate and distinct entities. The state has not the right to control the university but for the sake of the common good it is to the advantage of the state to endow the university. Only in this respect is the university responsible to the state.

If doubt is raised concerning the premise which assumes individual and common good, it is obviously seen that such a division exists owing to the fact that each of us has a personal or individual end which he seeks apart from the general good. Since each of us has an individual personality, each of us will have a personal objective after which we will seek.

The letter speaks of "irresponsible private individuals" who control The University. We direct his attention to the fact that it was The University of Toronto and not the Province of Ontario which permitted the aliens to enrol on this campus two years ago.

We emphasize again the separate purposes of the state and The University, and the extent to which The University is responsible to the state. We are not attempting to clothe the issue in what may appear to some as remote theorizing. It is the principle behind the preservation in the past of academic freedom.)

No. 29/44

1. BATTALION PARADE,
SAT, 18 NOV.

The Bn. will parade on Sat, 18 Nov., on the Front Campus.

Coy. will assemble on their Coy parade grounds at 1330 hrs. and will form up in Bn. in mass, facing North at 1345 hrs.

2. COMPANY PARADES
Until further notice all Coy parades will be held at University Avenue Armouries.

3. SOLICITING RIDES IN AUTOMOBILES
The soliciting of rides by personnel of the Cdn Army is undignified and inconsistent with the wearing of the King's uniform. There is, however, no objection to the acceptance by soldiers of transportation when such is offered voluntarily by the public.

In addition to the above, the provisions of Sec. 44(2) of the Highway Traffic Act of Ontario are drawn to the attention of all ranks, the said provisions being as follows:

"Sec. 44(2)—No person shall, while on the travelled portion of the highway, solicit a ride—from—the driver or operator of a motor vehicle other than a public vehicle. The penalty for violation of this subsection is not less than $5.00 and if persisted in on more than one occasion it may amount to as much as $50.00."

It is stressed that not only will offenders render themselves liable to disciplinary action but are liable to be prosecuted by the civil authorities for an offence against the law of Ontario.

4. SELECTIVE SERVICE STATUS

The attention of ALL undergraduate members of this Bn. is directed to Part I Order 25 Oct. 44, with reference to producing for noting by Bn. H.Q., any certificate of discharge, rejection or deferment.

This H.Q. is under obligation to report to the National Selective Service Mobilization authorities in the very near future all members of the Bn. who have NOT tendered such certificates for noting. This report will carry the names of all members who have neglected this procedure.

American Vulcanologist Lectures On Paricutin

Coloured Movie Close-ups of Paricutin Make Vivid the Story of a New Volcano to R.C.I. Audience

DESTRUCTION FROM DUST

Paricutin, Mexico's newest volcano, is the first one since 1759 that has been watched from its birth, said Dr. Frederick H. Pough, in a lecture before the Royal Canadian Institute Saturday evening. Even then, he added, there were few people living in the vicinity, and there were few observations made.

Dr. Pough, Chairman and Curator of the Department of Geology and Mineralogy of the American Museum of Natural History, was sent by that institution to Mexico to study the volcano.

There are many cones in the surrounding region, which apparently began in the same way, said Dr. Pough, and the layers of rock which have been exposed by the cutting out of roads show the form which will be taken by the volcanic dust now burying the farms and towns.

The movie showed the ever-changing column of dust and gases which rises to a height of 33,000 feet, and is the real destructive agent. Most lava, he said, is quite solid, contrary to popular opinion. The rock breaks off in large chunks and falls down the slope. "It's possible to light a cigarette from the rock," he said. "I did it."

There were pictures of very fluid lava bubbling and spitting out of "spatter-cones" and rolling and heaving into one stream which finally vanished underground.

The field of rocks and dust surrounding the cone is strangely effective, having many colours from the deposits around the numerous gas-vents, Dr. Pough said as the picture ended.

Students of McGill Against Jap Ban

Montreal—(CUP)—Fully supporting the motion of the McGill Students' Executive Council requesting the Senate to lift the ban on eligible Canadian-born Japanese, over 250 students at the first Students' Society meeting of the year held last Wednesday, resolved that a copy of their supporting resolution be "respectfully forwarded to the Senate."

The motion passed by the Students' Executive Council last Thursday evening was to the effect that since the exclusion of Canadian-born Japanese students has caused considerable comment on the campus, the Council has discussed the question, and by a majority vote respectfully requests the Senate to reconsider its decision.

The second motion passed Wednesday afternoon read: "Whereas we, the students of McGill University, are opposed to all forms of racial discrimination and whereas racial discrimination has been used in the past, that a committee be set up to watch and study such possible discrimination; and that if such discrimination be found it shall be brought to the attention of the Students' Executive Council, who shall call a meeting to attempt to rectify such discrimination."

Following this resolution an additional one was carried reading: "Moved that representatives of all clubs on the campus be a working committee to investigate any discrimination on racial questions and that a committee be appointed to contact all clubs and societies to initiate such a movement."

Co-op Residences Declare Dividends

"The Campus Co-operative Residence, Incorporated, has a net operating surplus of $2,663.59, on over $23,000 business done last year, enabling the present management to declare a surplus of over ten percent," stated Murray McCulloch in an interview last night. "This is the result of the efficient management of the Co-op last year," he continued.

"The dividend is paid to Co-op members in proportion to the business they had with the Co-op," he stated. There were eighty students in the Residences last year.

The Co-op was founded in the fall of 1936, with twelve members. It operates on the Rochdale principle, that one member has one vote. There is no discrimination on racial or religious grounds, and there is capitalization by the members.

This year there are five houses with a total membership of eighty-four, including thirty-five girls and forty-nine boys. There are three boys' houses and two girls' houses.

The girls' house at 50 Prince Arthur is named Urwick House after Professor E. J. Urwick, Professor Emeritus of Political Economy at Varsity.

The Co-op has purchased its first house at 24 Wilcocks this year.

Vera Cummings, social director, stated that Co-op activities include dances, parties, as well as educational activities.

Resolution Urging That Ontario Legislature be Requested to Amend University Act is Defeated

MacBETH NOMINATES CODY

Dr. Cody, retiring President of the University, was elected Chancellor by unanimous vote of the Senate in a meeting Friday evening. Dr. Cody, who retires in June as President, to be succeeded by President-elect Sidney Smith, will complete the term of office as Chancellor left vacant by the death of Sir William Mulock last month.

Last September, when the regular term of office of Chancellor terminated two men were nominated for the office, Sir William Mulock, who held the office since 1924, and Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey, Canadian High Commissioner to London.

A few days before the election was to be held, Mr. Massey withdrew his name, saying that while he would stand for election under normal circumstances, he would not run against Sir William. Sir William was then elected by acclamation.

Eighteen days later, Sir William died. Under the terms of the University Act of 1906, the Senate was to be given notice of a meeting to be held in 30 days to elect a new Chancellor. This was done and on Nov. 10 a meeting was held to consider a successor to the post.

At this meeting the Alumni Federation of the University of Toronto presented a resolution urging that the Senate request the Ontario Legislature to amend the University Act, so that a general election by the graduates could be held to determine the new Chancellor rather than by election within the Senate. The resolution was defeated by a vote of 43 to 31.

A Fitting Honor

As the long-expected announcement is finally broached, The Varsity salutes the gallant gentleman whom it has so long known as President and whose succession to the chancellorship it now hails.

There can be no question that the high tradition of the late Sir William Mulock will be adequately fulfilled by the warm humanity and familiarity dignity which has so long made Dr. Cody a beloved figure on the campus.

Indeed, Dr. Cody and the Senate who appointed him are alike to be commended. His recent dignified refusal to march into office across a merely constitutional plank and their spontaneous response in honour the man who has served The University so well are equally to be applauded.

It is to be regretted that the downtown press should have seen fit to obscure the simple fact of nobility rewarded by undue emphasis on what were made to appear as darkly political aspects of the matter.

As he enters on the newest phase of a long and distinguished career of service to The University and the Province, The Varsity wishes Dr. Cody many long years of life and happiness in which to enjoy the honour he has so richly merited.

Wilbert Winkle—meek, pill-guzzling bank clerk—becomes Hollywood's first war hero to be culled from the ranks of middle-aged business men. He is also the first one who is psychologically sound; his courage is not of the dashing dummy sort—it is the result of overcoming fear.

Being freed by the war from the domination of his wife does not add to his glamour; he blushes when addressing a sergeant and is watchful to take his dyspepsia pills before, during and after battle.

We were happy when the really heroic achievement of his existence came as he quit his bank job in spite of standing in mortal fear of his director and his wife. Yet Hollywood cannot break from the past; its hero must have gaudy victory amid gun-fire to prove adequately his courage.

The Follies

Back at home in Hart House Theatre after a year in the Yonge Street sticks, the 1944 U.C. Follies proved as slick a production as the annual raucous caucuses at the Royal College have ever evolved.

Opening auspiciously with a thickly orchestrated overture and a brace of intriguing black-and-white chorus members, the tempo of the production—songs, skits, ensembles, specialties, and miscellaneous musical numbers—never flagged.

The show was stronger on the musical side than it has been in years. "Pass Arts Polka," saucily rendered by Shirley Schipper to as catchy a tune as we can recall, was the rhythmic high-point, and its interpretation by the Short Chorus all too brief. Gwen Innes' throaty contralto was a perfect vehicle for "Moon Over Hart House," and her eye-filling while evening gown an equally perfect setting for Miss Innes.

Al Siegel's infallible sense of timing, Normie Walker's convulsively sincere interpretation of a student in distress, and a graduated trio of rollicking Skulemen were highlights in the comedy department.

The skits betrayed on the whole a woeful paucity of funny ideas, and a tendency (at times alarming) to plug the resulting lacunae with mere filth. Mr. Smith Goes to Aurora was redeemed by an amazingly lifelike imitation of its title character on the soap-box, and The Varsity Goes to Press by an air of gay abandon which covered up any suggestion of want of familiarity with the actual torments of journalism in years.

The healthy high spirits of the whole cast easily outbalanced a rather flat though splendidly staged finale and an incomprehensible reluctance to exploit properly the most glamorous chorines in years.

One thing saddens us—nay, alarms us. There was evident throughout whole stretches of the production a morbidly preoccupation on the part of the script-writers that may at the present rate of increase bring The Follies into the disrepute and disarray of other campus shows that have in the past been scripted not wisely but too—well!

Chancellor Cody Expresses Thanks For Co-operation of Students

By Janice Murray

"I regard my election as Chancellor as the last chapter in a life spent in the service of the University," Dr. H. J. Cody told The Varsity in an interview Saturday, after his unanimous election as Chancellor by the Senate Friday evening.

To clarify this statement, Dr. Cody said that he had been an undergraduate, a lecturer in Latin, an examiner in Classics, a member of the Senate, a member of the Board of Governors and Chairman of the Board, and finally President.

"In 1905 and 1906 I was a member of the University Commission which framed the Report leading to the University Act of 1906. The only other surviving member is Dr. Bruce Macdonald, now Chairman of the Board of Governors. We were the two younger members of the Commission chosen to represent the feelings of the younger members of the University."

"The Chancellor's duties are less than the heavy administrative duties of the President," said Dr. Cody. "As Chancellor, one must present all degrees given by the University, and one can do much to shape public opinion concerning it and its work."

In answer to a question concerning the Chancellor's relations to the Board of Governors, Dr. Cody said that he would only be required to move down one seat in the Board room. However, as an ex officio member of the Board, with the President, Dr. Cody can help form University policy and can present the problems of the University in respect to the faculty and students.

"I will continue to hold the position of President until June, with that of Chancellor. In June Dr. Sidney Smith will take over the Presidency."

"I would like to count on the co-operation of the students in the future with the new President, who will take over in June. I would like also to express my profound thanks to all members of the student body for their loyalty to the institution and co-operation with all of us who have administrative duties to perform."

"The students and graduates are the best advertisement of the University and can do an immense service to it in creating favourable public opinion for the support of a higher education. In all universities, including our own, the fees that students pay do not fully cover the cost of education. The balance of the cost must be met either by government grant or from endowments. Therefore, in a very real sense, the University may look to its graduates to aid it in carrying out its work, financially, intellectually, morally, for the development of personal character and the service of the community."

KITTEN'S TALE

Mr. Sample was no little surprised when the dark man stopped him on the street and started feeling his (Mr. Sample's) head. "I am a head hunter," said the bold stranger. "Your head would make my collection perfect. . . I have heads from all types of Americans."

"But isn't head-hunting a trifle outdated," asked Mr. Sample nervously. "Oh, I'm a modern head-hunter," said the dark stranger. "I studied anthropology at Harvard."

"Well, if you're so modern, why do you go around Yonge Street in a G-string?"

"Now, my dear sir," said the head-hunter with scorn, "would you believe I was a head-hunter if I approached you in a business suit?"

"I guess not," said Mr. Sample.

"Now let's not waste time about this," said the head-hunter. "Just bend your head down and I'll have it off in a jiffy."

"N-n-no anaesthetic?" quavered Mr. Sample.

"No, you'll never notice a thing," said the stranger. "You see, I sever the spinal cord first."

"Well, couldn't we go some place a little more private?" said Mr. Sample.

"Whatever would people think of me, getting my head cut off on Yonge Street?"

"Oh, they wouldn't notice it," answered the dark man.

"I know a man who has a much better head than mine," offered Mr. Sample, generously.

"Now, don't be modest," smiled the head-hunter. "I know a good head when I see one."

"Dear me," said Mr. Sample, "you are very persuasive."

"Oh, they all try to think up excuses," said the dark man, "but I usually head them off."

At this moment a very beautiful woman walked by and Mr. Sample turned to take a gander at her legs.

Three Left . . .

St. Michael's College gridders fell by the wayside Friday afternoon in the fourth quarter of their game with Vic as the winners took advantage of the breaks to score all their points to gain a 8-0 victory. Vic now advance into the semi-final bracket against the highly-touted Senior School club, the game being scheduled for this afternoon at the Stadium.

The Irish made a determined bid for the honours by opening up a prolific aerial attack which bogged down at the most opportune moments. The cold hands of the receivers dropped numerous long passes just when they could have been away for a long gain.

Vic, on the other hand, played a steady but effective game, using to good advantage the short pass over the scrimmage line. Their line stood up remarkably well and roughed up the Irish backs no little.

After three scoreless quarters, Butch O'Malley, the Vic captain, booted the ball from his opponents' 30. The receiver fumbled but fell on the ball back of the goal line, giving the eventual champions of Group III the first blood of the game, two points. With four minutes left in the game, Wheeler blocked a St. Mike kick from the kicker's 20. McDonald gathered up the loose ball to scamper over for the touchdown, which Hamilton converted.

The annual senior harrier was run off Saturday morning over the gruelling five-mile course at High Park with thirty-seven starters. J. Moull, of School, led all thirty-seven finishers across the line in the fair time of 30:46. Second across the finishing line was Frank Fordyce, of S.P.S., followed by Rutherford of Emmanuel, Hanley of Trinity, and McDonough of St. Mike's.

S.P.S. won the Brotherton Cup with the minimum of 23 points. Trinity, St. Mike's, and Wycliffe followed in that order.

Hee Phillips' indoor classes start tonight at five o'clock on the indoor track. All tracksters, regardless of experience, are bid welcome.

In a moment the head-hunter had whisked off Mr. Sample's head, popped it into his brief-case, and walked off, whistling "Ain't Got Nobody."

Mr. Sample is not the first man to lose his head over a woman.

A Bedtime Story . . .

Once there was a baseball team, as a matter of fact two baseball teams which were to play a semi-final game, so that the winner in turn could play the team from an obscure college known for its girls and glamour only, called U.C.

These two teams came also from an obscure part of the campus, as a matter of point no one knew what part of the campus they did come from; anyway, it was P.H.E. or P.H. & E., or sump'n. Now these teams, the P.H.E. A baseball team and the P.H.E. B baseball team were good, or so they thought, and neither would be persuaded to play the semi-final game to see which was better, in case the other's feeling might be hurt, or so it looked to the harassed Head of University Baseball.

Of course it rained, or looked like rain, and so the evil day might be put off, and on the days when it didn't either rain or look like rain there were basketball games or bridge games which might gain the works. And the H.H. of U. Baseball was getting mad, and madder and madder. One day she said to the Sportswoman, an obscure column in an obscure daily paper of an obscure and practically unknown university, "This sort of thing must stop." But it didn't. So next day she said: "U.C. B baseball team will be awarded the University Baseball Championship by default, since the P.H.E. A and P.H.E. B baseball teams are not willing to hurt each other's feelings by playing off their game to see which is best."

And it happened. U.C. B was very happy. So was P.H.E. A and P.H.E. B. It Could Happen to You! . . . (And it shouldn't happen to a dawg!)

New Chancellor . . .

300 graduates, making the same request, was presented by J. S. McLean, R. Hon. Arthur Meighen, Clifford Sifton, and John S. Dickson. The reason given for this petition was that the graduates felt that the usual procedure should be followed for the election of the Chancellor as the spirit of the University Act did not call for a Senate election under such conditions.

A two-thirds majority of the Senate was required to re-open the question considered in the petition. The motion to re-open the question was defeated by a large majority.

her love of music and her native art to reach an intently appreciative audience. Those who heard her in Trinity Church a year ago were impressed by her advance in maturity; with a few more years of study, Portia White should rank among the finest in the musical world.

Her delicate intonations overcame an unsympathetically heavy-handed accompanist in the opening group of early English songs: The Lass with the Delicate Air was pure delight. Mon Coeur S'Ouvre à Ta Voix stood out in the French and Spanish group, and the concluding spirituals were quietly and beautifully rendered.

It was not great singing, but it was moving. Once or twice came the summit of musical enjoyment: liquid notes dropping like fire into pools of silence. To have achieved that magic, even sparsely, is a measure of Miss White's present talent and an earnest of her future flowering.

Principal Cancels Queen's Broadcast By Sunday Ruling

Radio Workshop's Sunday Night Programme Time "Too Late" for Freshette Members of Cast

DEATH-KNELL OF PROJECT

Kingston—(CUP)—The first broadcast of the Queen's Drama Guild Radio Workshop, scheduled for 11:30 last Sunday evening, was cancelled by Principal R. C. Wallace because "the University does not permit dramatics on Sunday" and the time was "too late" for several freshettes involved in the broadcast who live in residence.

The question arose when the Dean of Women, Dr. A. V. Douglas, was asked permission for several freshettes living in residence to return after the half-hour broadcasts. Queen's freshettes must be in by 11:30 Sunday evenings. Dr. Douglas then consulted Principal Wallace, who immediately proscribed the Sunday broadcasts.

"I hope that some other arrangements can be concluded," he said, "however, I would rather not have them at all than at that time." He inferred that the question of late leaves alone did not cancel the broadcasts, saying that "whether we would allow a freshette to remain out late would depend on the merit of the individual girl concerned."

It is feared that the Workshop may have to be abandoned, since no other time is available. Ken Phin, Student Workshop head and former Journal editor, speaking of the prohibitive action taken, deplored the "University blue Sunday ruling."

Dominican Consul Gives Talk Here

The speech of Mr. J. U. Garcia, Dominican Consul, at the International Affairs meeting on Monday afternoon at the Women's Union Library, outlined the aims and ideas of South America.

"Spanish America has definite individuality," stated Mr. Garcia, "which she wishes to express in her ideas of liberty and democracy." Mr. Garcia added that there cannot be harmony between North and South America without a basic understanding and a common desire to iron out difficulties.

He added that racial prejudice and language, as well as the geographic location of North America were conducive to a misunderstanding of those south of the Rio Grande as inferior culturally and economically, whereas the Spanish Americans tended to think of the North Americans as materialists. However, the increasing ties of relationship between the North and South American governments was tiding over many differences.

Mr. Garcia stressed that South America was essentially a land of poets and artists.

Humanistic Trend Noted In Engineers' Curricula

By Mike O'Brien

Twelve hundred engineers-in-training embarked on their various courses this fall on revised curricula, when in addition to such mundane matters as mathematics and molecular movement, they found on their time-tables modern history, modern political trends, and management—by no means mundane.

It all started with a Report of the Committee on Engineering Education after the war, composed of the heads of twenty-one or more engineering schools on the continent.

This committee published their report, "On the Aims and Scope of Engineering Curricula," in 1940, and in it "advocated the strengthening of engineering education by the organization of the curriculum in parallel integrated sequences of scientific-technological and humanistic-social subjects, and transfer of some of the more specialized subjects to the post-graduate period," according to the report published by Dean Young, who served on the committee.

When interviewed on the subject, the

Toike Oike Seeks Entries

A new feature in the magazine Toike Oike this year is a contest open to all faculties affiliated with the University other than S.P.S., Tom Munford, Toike Oike editor, told The Varsity yesterday.

Two $300 prizes will be given for each of the best entries in prose or poetry concerning engineering students. This is believed to be the first time that a college magazine has asked for contributions from other than its own students and is being done in an effort to help foster a better understanding between all students on the campus, said Mr. Munford.

Contributions should be from 200 to 500 words, in the case of prose, and less for poetry, he continued.

Contributions are to be sent to "Toike Oike," c/o the Engineering Society, School Building. The deadline is December 2, 1944.

A similar contest open to Schoolmen is also being held. Details will be found on the notice boards in the Engineering Building.

This is the second year that School has undertaken publication of a magazine and it is hoped that this year's Toike Oike will be classed among the better publications on the campus, said the editor.

Colonial Research Allowances Given

The Secretary of State for the Colonies has decided to institute a number of "Colonial Research Fellowships" which will be open to qualified scientists for research work in the Colonial Empire.

The fellowships, which are usually for two years, will normally be reserved for University graduates under 35 years of age, medically fit for the type of work to be undertaken. Any candidate may be from any part of the British Empire but must have had experience of research.

These fellowships are being brought into force immediately and provision has been made for 25 of them within the (Continued on page 2)

The Function of Education

The attitude of many university students is often resented by the rest of the world. Even university professors sometimes remark that sophomores return to college with the superior feeling that they have learned all there is to know, or at least all that is of any value to know. One might well ask if this is the true function of education.

All this might seem rather hyperbolic, but that such an attitude is prevalent among students is evident in the many remarks one hears aimed at them as being "intellectual snobs" or "pseudo-intellects." That such an erroneous belief in their own mental abilities exists among a considerable number of students is, unfortunately, all too true. However, the fault should not be laid at the door of the educational system, but on the individuals themselves, who have not matured enough to assimilate and correlate the many conflicting ideas that they begin to absorb when they enter the atmosphere of a university. One of the wisest things Alexander Pope ever said was that "A little learning is a dangerous thing." It is often said that a well-educated person is one who finally comes to realize the paucity of his knowledge. And this does not mean that he is doubly impressed by the little that the rest of the world must know in comparison to what he has learned in three or four years. After all, neither Abraham Lincoln nor Thomas Edison ever attended a university, but in spite of that, both have contributed a great deal to the benefit of humanity.

In other words, a truly well-educated individual has developed an old and admirable characteristic, which today suffers a great deal of criticism in the world—humility. He is humble in the realization of the inadequacy of his knowledge; humble at the limits of his capabilities; and, above all, thankful (which is a form of humility) for the opportunity to enjoy the manifold advantages of a university education. Moreover, it is a quality which should be emphasized more than ever today when we are fortunate enough to have the privilege of being able to continue our studies. Let us hope that we shall have equipped ourselves adequately enough to deal with the problems of the post-war world.

Co-operative Living

In yesterday's edition of The Varsity there appeared a news story which vouched for the success of the students' co-operative movement on this campus. The Campus Co-operative Residence, Incorporated, announced a net operating surplus of nearly $3,000.00. This surplus, which is the result of efficient management and whole-hearted co-operation on the part of the members of the Co-op., is to be distributed as dividends to the members.

The Co-op. (as it is nearly always referred to) is one of the finest extra-mural organizations at the University of Toronto. Here there is no unjust discrimination on racial, religious, or social grounds; here, students from all parts of the country, and indeed all parts of the world learn to live and work happily together in an intellectual atmosphere. There are vast differences of views and opinions amongst the members, and living among such a broad and interesting group is an education in itself.

In a Co-operative Residence, a student receives his room and board at a rate much below that which is generally charged by ordinary boarding houses in this district. In exchange for this considerable saving the student is required to spend a comparatively small amount of time working in the upkeep and operation of the residence. This time is never large enough to hinder a student in his academic work.

This laudable enterprise has been growing ever since its inception in 1936. Its success up to date promises well for the future. If co-operation is a fundamental of democracy, this venture should be excellent, practical proving ground for citizens of tomorrow.

St. Mike's Guild To Present Play

Last night it was announced by Father J. D. O'Donnell, director of the St. Michael's Music and Drama Guild, that his group would produce Emmett LaBourcelle's play, "Murder in the Nursery," at Hart House Theatre on the fourth and fifth of December.

Father O'Donnell explained that this play, though it had a religious background, was not religious in story but was rather a mystery play with the accent on comedy. He stated that a very real impression of convent life was given in it.

In the casting, Rosario Balzac, from Puerto Rico, plays the part of a Spanish student learning English. Winnifred Fletcher plays the part of the august Mother Superior, Millwood O'Shaughnessy the part of Mother Peck, and Doris McKenna the part of Mother Trevor.

The whole play is made up of a series of character sketches, and the cast comprises about forty members.

The staging of the play is to be quite elaborate as in all there will be eight changes of scenery. The action will be continuous throughout the play due to the arrangement of the author in bringing the action out in front of the curtain while the scenery is being changed.

"Merry Wives" To be Presented

"The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be presented in Harbord Collegiate on Thursday, Nov. 23, by the Shakespeare Society of Toronto. Major James Anand is the director, and will play Falstaff.

In an interview, the Society's immediate past president, Professor Ernest Dale, professor of Latin at University and Trinity Colleges, stated that his predecessor, Professor Wilson Knight, formerly of Trinity College, Toronto, and now teaching in a boys' school in England, had been one of the Society's most successful directors and had skillfully produced for Hart House productions several Shakespearean dramas, including Henry the Eighth, Timon of Athens, Hamlet, and Othello.

Professor Knight played the principal roles and is now writing books on the great dramatist on his native heath, said Professor Dale.

"The Shakespeare Society has been producing plays for many years," Professor Dale continued, "although we have increased the difficulties of stage production. There are very few male actors, as most of the former ones have left for active service."

ALL-STAR TEAM

All football managers are requested to submit their respective all-star teams to Room 42A, University College by Thursday noon. Two teams will be chosen by each manager and no more than six players may be selected from any one group.

S.P.S. Enters Rugby Finals

By Al Cowan

As expected, Senior School romped to an easy win over Vic yesterday at the Stadium. The final score of the game was 19-0.

This win puts School into the final round of intramural rugby against U.C. on Thursday.

School looked very good yesterday and are going to be hard to beat for that Mulock Cup. Their blocking and tackling was exceptionally fine.

Vic held the engineers fairly well in the first three quarters but faded badly in the last period. Ross Clare was the outstanding performer on the field, personally accounting for 14 of his team's points.

S.P.S. led by a 6-0 score at half-time. Clare kicked a rouge early in the first quarter and soon after this he made a 20-yard plunge to carry play to the Vic 10. On the next down he was given the ball again, and carried it over for a major. The convert failed.

In the third quarter, Clare kicked far behind the Vic goal line to Wheeler, who was downed for one point. S.P.S. tucked on 12 more points in the last quarter on touchdowns by Keary and Clare. Both converts were good.

Medicals Elect Society Members

The Faculty of Medicine held their annual elections in the Hart House Theatre yesterday afternoon. Voting was fairly heavy and results were announced by Doug Rae during the Meds election tea dance arranged by Medical Women's Undergraduate Association at St. Hilda's.

The following were elected to the Medical Society: president, M. Stephenson; vice-president, Bob Slater; treasurer, J. Findlay; assist. sec.-treasurer, Cam Hill. The Athletic Directorate is composed of J. Fyfe, president; J. Hazlett, vice-president; J. Davies, secretary-treasurer; W. "Mouse" Fielding, publicity manager.

Also elected were a permanent executive for the Class of '45, a Women's Undergraduate Association executive, a Women's Athletic Association, and executives for the fourth and sixth years.

Mine Eyes Have Seen The Glory . . .

Last night Helen Hayes, in the title role of "Harriet," was a trifle disappointing. As Harriet Beecher Stowe, the little lady who caused a great war, Miss Hayes over-saccharined the part. A leading lady who has played too many sweet, noble heroines, she was too adept at all the tricks of the trade. Throughout the play she was the quiet, witty creator of Uncle Tom and Topsy, but in the climax she suddenly lapsed back into Victoria Regina.

The play itself failed to capture the atmosphere of the pre-Civil War period. Some of the lines, amusing and sparkling as they were, smacked a little of 1944. We never felt quite sure whether we were witnessing a comedy mingled with a little drama or a serious drama with too much comedy relief.

Loping along adequately in inadequate characterizations, the large supporting cast were only fair. Robert Harrison, as the righteous, Gospel-hurling Dr. Lyman

Honorary Degrees To Be Conferred At Convocation

Outstanding Diplomats and Savants Will Receive Degrees; Faculty to Introduce Recipients

CEREMONY TODAY

Seven honorary degrees are to be conferred on distinguished Americans and Europeans at a special convocation in Convocation Hall at half-past eight tonight.

The degree of Doctor of Laws (honoris causa) is to be conferred on His Excellency the Honorable Ray Atherton, B.A., the ambassador of the United States of America; Winifred Clara Cullis, C.B.E., M.A., D.Sc., LL.D., Professor Emeritus of Physiology in the University of London; John Calvin Ferguson, A.B., Ph.D., LL.D., Adviser to the Executive Yuan of the National Government of China; John R. Mott, Ph.B., A.M., LL.D., President of the World's Alliance of the Y.M.C.A., and founder and former chairman of the World's Student Christian Federation; George Wharton Pepper, AB, LL.D., D.C.L., distinguished lawyer and author, and United States senator 1922-1927; and His Excellency the Honorable Baron Robert Silvercruys, the ambassador of the Kingdom of Belgium.

Chalmers Jack MacKenzie, C.M.G., M.C., B.E., M.C.E., D.Sc., LL.D., F.R.S.C., president of the National Research Council of Canada, is to be honoured by being conferred the degree of Doctor of Engineering (honoris causa).

The recipients are to be introduced by Dean Kennedy of the School of Law, Dean Gallie of the Faculty of Medicine, Bishop White of the School of Chinese Studies, President Brown of Victoria University, Dr. D. S. McCarthy, Robert Fennell, and Dean Young of the Faculty of Applied Science.

The Right Honorable Malcolm MacDonald, Minister of the Navy, who also was to receive an honorary degree, will not be able to attend, and will be given a degree at some later date.

Polish Professor Will Speak Here

Prof. O. Halecki, former Director of Eastern European History at the University of Warsaw, is to deliver a lecture in Convocation Hall this Thursday evening at 8:15 p.m. Professor Halecki, who is now director of the Political Institute of Arts and Sciences of America, will speak on the subject of "Poland's contribution to the Slavs."

Due to the present interest in Poland's present-day activity, the lecture is expected to prove interesting to the public in general.

Prof. Halecki lectured in Toronto at an earlier date on the occasion of the fourth centennial of Copernicus last year.

MONSTER!

(IN EMBRYO)

Forty-eight bantam hens working in twelve-hour shifts are collaborating with Professor Sinbad Z. Rockhatcher of the Royal Ontario Museum in desperate attempts to hatch a dinosaur egg dating from the Adolescent Age. It was announced last night.

Of such a size that its upper surface is exactly covered by twenty-four squealing hens, the egg has been temporarily withdrawn from display. Mr. J. K. Pickle, University dramatic expert, is said to be negotiating for first stage rights on whatever monster emerges.

"It is doubtful if any results can be expected in our lifetime or in that of our grandchildren," said Prof. Rockhatcher. "Our hens are setting not for an age but for a helluva long time."

An angry bulletin from the U.C. English staff demanded that this be amended to "sitting."

At 2:38 this morning sensitive microphones trained on the egg's under-surface relayed to Prof. Rockhatcher's bedside a delicate clawing which brought him swooning down the marble banisters in his pyjamas. "But it was no faint stirring of life within," he reported. "It was merely one of the hens laying a secondary egg of her own."

"I love hens," Prof. Rockhatcher was quoted as rhapsodizing in a (censored) interview with Frank Razby, Varsity sobhond: "They are so cuddling and maternal. . . . My hand trembles as I lift them, and when I hand them their mash my whole being thrills."

At 4:38 this morning Mr. Razby was reported to be still trying to elicit the hens' opinion of Prof. Rockhatcher.

Come the Finals . . .

The weatherman grimly frowned on the local sporting fraternity yesterday. The steady, cold drizzle added that extra something to the football semi-final played on the mud-covered turf of the Stadium. As the gridders slithered about, they kept an added eye open for a pool or puddle, not so much to dilute the dirt from their tender skin but to dive in and escape the opponent's detection. As tackles were made, the tackled would playfully scoop up a handful of the once-beautiful sward and plaster the same in his attacker's face. It was really fun.

However, the members of both squads must be congratulated for their display of spirit and gameness under the ordeal of the prevailing conditions. Senior School may look at the game as a conditioner for the Mulock Cup finals, and after that trial the players should be ready for come-what-may.

The score was hardly indicative of the play as the Vic team held their heavier rivals on a more or less even keel during the first half. Then the torrent broke loose and the winners rolled up thirteen points. Another seventy-yard touchdown was nullified by the off-side rule.

The Senior School-U.C. final on Thursday will renew the feud of a year ago when these teams battled it out in a similar circumstance. Then, the engineers emerged on the long end of an 8-2 count. They will be out to add to that laurel, while the men of U.C. will be out to avenge the downfall. It all adds up to a battle royal if the field is dry.

This and That . . .

The first edition of our dream will step on the ice for the initial practice on Wednesday at 5:15 for an hour's session under the watchful eye of Ae Bailey. Thus, the Varsity hockey team will start to rebuild so as to maintain the good name it possessed before its scuttling. A second session will be held the following day at five o'clock. . . . Soccer finals are also on hand with Meds I and Vic footing it out. Both won their respective semi-final games yesterday by 3-0 scores. The embryo physicians knocked Trinity out of the running, while their brethren were suffering a similar fate at the hands of the Scarlet and Gold.

Dr. Deck to Speak Of South Seas

Dr. Northcote Deck, M.B., Ch.M., F.R.G.S., will address the U.C. V.C.F. on conclusions derived from his experiences in the Solomon Islands at a noon-hour meeting in Room 51, U.C. today. Dr. Deck, a graduate in Medicine from Sydney University, and presently residing in Toronto, is a member of the Board of Directors of the InterVarsity Christian Fellowship.

He has spent the greater part of his life in the South Sea Evangelical Mission, where he was in charge of the ship "Evangel," which for 17 years toured the Solomon Islands and vicinity. In 1910 Dr. Deck made the first overland crossing of the mountains of Malaita and in the same year made the first crossing of the now famous Guadalcanal.

What's On Today

U.C. S.C.M.

Prof. Hay of Knox College will speak today at 1:00 on the "Authority of Christ." The meeting will be held in the Women's Union.

MEDS V.C.F.

The regular 12:30 p.m. meeting will be a discussion on Romans 14, led by Mrs. Graham Hay, of the Sudan Interior Mission. All students are invited to come and bring lunches. Usual place—Academy of Medicine, 13 Queen's Park. VIC S.C.M.

Everyone is invited to come to the Vic S.C.M. party in Alumni Hall at 8:00 p.m. tonight.

ENGINEERS' V.C.F.

Mr. Wm. G. Miller, of the Massey-Harris Co., will be the special speaker at a meeting today in Room E-34. Bring your friends. Lunches will be available.

Women

Last Night . . .

A lot of things happened. 1. We received a little, painfully formal note from the P.H.E.U.W.A.A., which, translated, means Physical and Health Education Undergraduate Women's Athletic Association, which took exception to our column of yesterday concerning a decision purported to have been reached in the Women's Baseball Finals. As the column had not been read carefully, obviously, or had been badly misunderstood, we telephoned the P.H.E.U.W. etc., and cleared the matter up. Of course no decision had been reached to any final or anything else as far as we were concerned. Obviously we shall have to keep to strict facts if our attempt to make a mildly humorous hypothetical—and only hypothetical—case should always be mistaken so thoroughly and completely. Such a thing only happens when a poor worst-out Sportsman runs out of facts. The fact to be urged, and this in no way reflects on P.H.E., is that the baseball semi-finals should be completed at the earliest possible opportunity, preferably before the first snowfall.

2. The St. Mike's-P.H.E. Sr. game was called off due to the fact that St. Mike's could not make it, and the game will be played on Friday, at 5:30.

3. Meds-S.P.S. defeated O.T. about 30-to-something which wasn't very much. If some rep. of these teams would phone in the results of such games, we, and possibly you, would be made much happier.

4. Physio defeated Pharmacy by something (see comment above).

5. U.C. Freshies defeated Vic Freshies 30-12 in a fairly fair game.

Humanistic Studies . . .

academic week the American colleges should take more than four hours in the arts subjects. This would amount to about twenty per cent of the available time. However, the average Schoolman's time-table calls for 33 or so periods a week, and this works out to only six per cent of the allotted time. In order to find the time for these added courses, Professor Jackson advised tripping time from the technical subjects. A few students from each of the four years were quizzed on the new courses, and their feelings, to say the least, were divided. However, the trend was rather marked; it ranged from a complete approval in the graduating year to a more or less dubious disapproval in the first.

Three perplexed freshies admitted the course in "Engineering and Society" was "Okay," but couldn't see the connection between the various topics discussed. One first-year aspirant actually was unaware of the existence of a non-technical subject.

A second-year lab. worker was of the opinion that the Economics given was interesting "up to a point," but that "there wasn't time for it."

A little more mature thought came from a soph who wears his service badge from the R.C.A.F. He observed that the course was very badly needed and "it was a step in the right direction."

The third year Schoolmen were divided over the subject of Dr. McInnis' course on Modern World History. On the one hand there was condemnation: "I don't get anything out of it at all"; while from the other side came high praise: "The doctor is doing a great job in his course by presenting the highlights of a long historical course, and correlating the various influences which form the background for history." As for the fourth year, it was remarked that the realization of the necessity for a course in Modern Political and Economic Trends has been felt.

Future plans for the development of the social studies courses are not definite as yet. These will be decided when the results of a full four-year course can be studied. A majority of engineers voted for a course in Modern Political Trends in the student elections in 1942. They backed their vote by turning out 75 per cent strong for a non-compulsory course in this subject last spring, and as a result the course was introduced into the curriculum this year.

What the future holds will be a matter for the Committee on Development when the results are listed next spring.

Flying College Open to Grads

London, Eng.—Possibility that Canadian University graduates planning a civil aviation career will be able to study at an $11,000,000 British air college was forecast here over the week-end in a news release.

The release quoted a report emanating from a Department of Aircraft committee which advised that the proposed college should provide high-grade engineering, technical and scientific training in aeronautics for selected students. It would fit them for leadership in the aircraft industry, civil aviation, the armed services, and education and research fields.

The report said it had consulted the interests of the Dominions "and share their hope that the college may become a great imperial venture."

Principal Norman Wilks Dies Following Short Illness

Principal of Toronto Conservatory of Music Since 1941; Played for the Boston Symphony Orchestra

EMINENT PIANIST

After an illness of three weeks, Norman Wilks, principal of the Toronto Conservatory of Music, died Monday night.

Mr. Wilks, a distinguished pianist, joined the staff of the Conservatory in 1928 and became executive officer in 1936. In 1941 he became Principal succeeding Sir Ernest MacMillan.

He was born at Birchington, Kent, and won a singing scholarship for the Duke of Newcastle choir. He played for the Queen's Hall orchestra and the Royal Philharmonic and Continental orchestras in Belgium, Germany and England. Mr. Wilks was wounded in 1917 at Arras and was in hospital for a year. He served with the 7th Division and the "Buff's" and won the Military Cross. He was staff lieutenant and liaison officer with the French police at the time that King George V stayed with the 1st Army.

A Liberal candidate, Mr. Wilks unsuccessfully contested the Beaches riding in 1934 and the Danforth Federal seat in 1935.

Since the beginning of this war Mr. Wilks has served as chairman of the Citizens' Committee for the Troops in Training.

He played for the Boston Symphony orchestra, and toured Holland, Germany, Belgium, Australia, the West Indies and Canada.

Of Mr. Wilks, Sir Ernest MacMillan said: "He was a very notable concert pianist and appeared with many orchestras, including the Toronto Symphony. In addition, he was a very fine administrator and I very much admired the work he was doing at the Conservatory. It is most unfortunate that death should have terminated his work as principal after so short a time."

Authority of Christ Topic of Prof. Hay

No one can read the Gospels without realizing the insight Christ has into the mind of God, said Prof. Hay of Knox College yesterday, speaking to the S.C.M. on "The Authority of Christ." This was the third in the series. "Religion: The Authority for

In Jesus, Prof. Hay continued, we come up against the only real authority there is, which is God. The Bible, as a history book, is not concerned with what man did but what God did in His attempts to save His people.

"We all," he said, "owe to God an unblemished life and none of us has it to give Him, but God made the sacrifice in our behalf." That is the authority of Christ—His supreme sacrifice for us. For Christ said "I have redeemed you, you are mine."

Labor Alliance To be Debated

The U.C. parliament will meet this Friday afternoon at 4:00 p.m. The topic of the resolution is that the best interests of labour lie in alliance with the C.C.F. party.

Dennis Wrong and Roy Clark will speak for the government while Bob Bell and John Harbron represent the opposition.

Mexican Movie Full of Color

At the second meeting of the Spanish Club yesterday at the Women's Union, Dr. A. I. Willinsky presented a movie of Mexico. Dr. Willinsky, from the National Film Board, and a graduate of this University in Fine Art and Medicine, is a consulting surgeon here in Toronto. In his four trips to Mexico he has taken many pictures.

"Mexico is a highly colourful country," said Dr. Willinsky. "It is also a country of extremes. The rich are very rich, the poor very poor; there are deserts and jungles, volcanoes with snowy tips and the oceans on both sides. This picture was made to show the human side of a country and not the official side. That means that I took whatever was beautiful and strange, and not what the officials wanted me to shoot."

"The main feature was a trip through to Acapulco on the Pacific Ocean. The first lap was to Vera Cruz and then on through the land. We saw beautiful cathedrals, flowers, costumes of all kinds everywhere. The flowers included orchids and there was even a swimming-pool with fresh orchids in it every day. Then the Venice of Mexico came with its gondolas named after girls, and its oarsmen driving their long stick rhythmically in the water. During the hat dance the girl has to step around the rim of the hat of her partner. The volcanoes, including the new one, have snow on their peaks, a contrast to the blue sky. But do not think that there is always sunshine in Mexico."

"One of the most noticeable features is the way the natives carry everything on their heads, beginning from house furniture to the water supply. Backwardness showed up in their dance to the gods so that the volcano would not erupt. Their home-made carts drawn by bullocks exhibited the same idea."

Jr. Pharmacy Ball To be Held Friday

Len Sale's orchestra, "Hamilton's Latest Dance Sensation," will make its debut on the campus this year at the Junior Pharmacy Ball, to be held at the Club Top Hat on Friday, Nov. 24. The band features the Sale Trio, with Nancy Latner doing the vocals. This is a new professional band organized in 1943, and they have just completed a summer contract at Port Dover.

The Ball is an annual event, sponsored by first year Pharmacy. Dancing is from 9:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m., and tickets may be obtained from any Pharmacy student.

Glee Club to Sing At Trinity Church

The U.C. Glee Club has been invited to sing at the Carol Service performed by Trinity United Church Choir in December. They will sing two or three carols selected from those sung at the Dean's Christmas party, for which plans are already underway at U.C.

This is the first time that the Glee Club has been asked to sing at a non-university function. Their carol singing will supplement the music of the church choir and the soloists.

Ruth McCubbin, music director of U.C., says "This gives the Glee Club something to look forward to, and work for. We want to do our best at the performance."

U.C. French Club Presents Comedy

Moliere's play, "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," will be presented in the Hart House Theatre on Wednesday, Nov. 29, at 8:15 p.m.

Complete with ballet, singing, and seventeenth-century French music, the show will tell the story of the bourgeois Jourdain's struggle to acquire social poise and accomplishments.

The play is produced by the U.C. French Club and is dedicated by French professors J. Andison and R. Finch. The dialogue is all in French.

"It is traditional for the French Club to produce a play each year," said Ainslie Campbell, of the French Club executive, "and with the colourful costumes, especially in the Turkish scene, we think this production will be one of the best."

Peggie Miller and Jack MacAllister will handle the vocals. Martin Oswald and Mary Creighton will play M. and Mme. Jourdain; the part of Lucille is taken by Marjorie Henderson, and that of the maid, Nicole, by Monica Allcut.

There will be a four-piece orchestra, and the dancing is directed by Miriam Lavine, III P.H.E.

Tickets are on sale in the Hart House box office every day from 11:30 to 3:30.

Christmas Employment

Application forms for work in the Post Office are now available in the S.A.C. Office, Hart House, for men and women students.

Students' Paintings To Be Exhibited

The traditional exhibitions of paintings of senior and undergraduate members of the University in Hart House art gallery will be on display again this year. The Art Committee of Hart House has decided to return to the former practice whereby the undergraduate members of Hart House and the senior members of the University hold separate shows.

The Undergraduate Exhibition will take place from Feb. 23 to March 16, while pictures by senior members will be shown from March 16 to April 6.

It is hoped that a large number of paintings and drawings by both staff and students will be submitted for this exhibition. Even beginners should not be discouraged from sending in their work, said the Art Committee.

Undergraduate members who are interested are asked to get in touch with the Warden's Office for further details.

Clothes Contest To be Featured

If everything goes according to plan, Warden Bickerteth will choose the best-dressed man at the War Services Drive. Held before Christmas, the Drive will again feature a parade of floats from all faculties, a co-ed contest, and a street dance.

Al Klasen, chairman of the Drive, said that girls are needed for an all-day tagging job. Men are also required to run the parade and to arrange publicity. Those who want to help can contact Klasen at the Engineering Society office.

Proceeds will go to the Canadian Red Cross and the Salvation Army. There will be a Salvation Army parade outside Convocation Hall on Canada day to sell doughnuts.

Stalin Prize Novel Screened by Russians

Out of Russia has come a stirring, memorable moving picture. As well as being a monument to Russian bravery, "The Rainbow" shows the sadistic cruelties of the invading Germans.

The Stalin Prize novel, by Wanda Wasilewska, has been dramatized for the screen by the Kiev Studios and will be shown at Eaton Auditorium on Nov. 24, 25, 27 and 28.

Here is a realistic story of the Nazi occupation of a small Ukrainian settlement. Here is an epic of the horrible suffering endured by the same people who withstood and repulsed the onslaught of the Wehrmacht. Here is a tribute to the unsung heroes, to the courageous spirit of the women, children and aged, who defied the over-bearing warlords.

Unlike most Hollywood films, the plot is not centred about one or two personalities but, rather, is woven around the lives of the supposed villagers. A mirror who, at the risk of her own life, guards the corpse of her dead son, a woman who sacrifices her life as well as that of her new-born baby to keep the secret of the whereabouts of the Partisan Army, a number of children who resist the invaders with all the hate and contempt of their elders and a treacherous female quisling are the characters who reveal the soul of the stout-hearted Russians.

For the average theatre-goer, "The Rainbow" is perhaps too realistic. It brings to our peaceful homefront the pillage, rapine and horrors of modern warfare. The Russian picture-makers do not soft-pedal the atrocities of the Nazis as do the men who produce the majority of Hollywood war movies.

Unlike most European productions, the photography is exceptional. The wintertime setting of the picture gives the cameramen ample opportunity to display their skill with chiaroscuro.

In our opinion "The Rainbow" is one of the finest movies to emerge from the present world conflict.

Objective Near $2500 Set For McGill Drive

Montreal—(CUP)—Over 100 student canvassers were out yesterday morning contacting members of their classes at the opening of the McGill Amalgamated Charities Drive. An objective of "near $2500" has been set, with an expected dollar from every student on the campus. It is hoped that all previous records will be broken.

The campaign carried out by class representatives, and to last this week, will be publicized from day to day in the McGill Daily in an effort to boost contributions.

University Lauded for Its Contributions to Culture and Science in Past and in the Present War Effort.

HONORIS CAUSA

President H. J. Cody presided over the special convocation held in Convocation Hall last night for the first time in its capacity as Chancellor of the University. The convocation was opened with a prayer by the Provost of Trinity College, Rev. F. H. Cosgrave. Following this, the honorary degrees were conferred.

Thanking the University for the honour conferred upon him, His Excellency the Honorable Ray Atherton, the American ambassador to Canada, spoke of "the active and sympathetic interest displayed by Canada and the United States in the history of the other, exhibiting the will to know each other freely and completely."

He went on to speak of the interchange of professors between American and Canadian universities as an "academic interbreeding" of the two nations. "Education," he said, "is more than teaching and learning. It is also a way of life."

Dr. John R. Mott, president of the World's Alliance of the Young Men's Christian Association, recalled his first visit to the University in 1889 and 1890 in the days of Sir Daniel Wilson and his twenty-seven or twenty-eight subsequent visits. He expressed his recognition of the invaluable initiative to be found here and his appreciation of the "fact of adoption" under which he had been taken into the University.

He told of "the larger University of Toronto beyond the confines of this campus" which he had seen in his travels.

Dr. Winifred Clara Cullis, Professor Emerita of Physiology in the University of London, spoke of her first visit to Canada during the last war, when she was on the Faculty of Medicine of this University. "Now you have allowed me to become almost officially a Canadian," she said.

She complimented Canadians on their contribution to the war, adding that those in the old country were probably more conscious of what Canadians are doing than Canadians are themselves. She singled out the work of the Federation of University Women for special mention.

Dr. John Calvin Ferguson, Adviser to the Executive Yuan of the National Government of China, thanked the University for honouring him with a degree, explaining that "as a Canadian-born citizen of the United States for sixty years I come back to acknowledge the gift given me by Canada."

The Honorable George Wharton Pepper, distinguished lawyer and author, was the next to speak; explaining how he had found that throughout the world the rights and privileges of an Arts degree consisted in the "fellowship of those who have caught at least a glimpse of the world of ideas."

Sunday Visitors Day At Hart House

Next Sunday, November 26, will be Visitors' Day at Hart House, when members may introduce their friends, including ladies, to the House between the hours of 2 and 4 in the afternoon. Members will be asked to show their membership cards at the door. An exhibition by the Montreal artist, Jacques de Tonnacour, will be on view in the art gallery. Five or six Visitors' Days are held throughout the year, usually on the last Sunday in the month.

The Students' View Point

"Whereas we, the students of McGill University, are opposed to all forms of racial discrimination, and whereas racial discrimination has been used in the past, we move that a committee be set up to watch and study such possible discrimination; and that if such discrimination be found it shall be brought to the attention of the Students' Executive Council, who shall call a meeting to attempt to rectify such discrimination.

This read the motion passed on Wednesday last at the first meeting of the Students' Society at McGill University. This motion arose from the feeling of the student body at McGill that the University Senate had been bigoted and unjust in their policy of refusing eligible Japanese-Canadian students admission into the university. This motion supported the motion passed and "respectfully submitted to the Senate" by the Executive Council asking the Senate to reconsider its decision in view of the fact that it had caused considerable unfavourable comment both on the McGill campus and at other Canadian universities.

This step, which was backed by a petition signed with some 300 names, showed the broad and unprejudiced viewpoint of the students in this question. The whole situation is reminiscent of the alien controversy here two years ago, when the Board of Governors finally rescinded their ban on loyal alien students after student opinion showed itself to be opposed to the undemocratic measure. At that time The Varsity crusaded indefatigably for the cause of the aliens, and at this time it again takes its side against social injustice and racial discrimination.

The above proposal on the part of the McGill students was drafted for the immediate purpose of clearing up the Japanese-Canadian situation, and as such was widely praised. However, the tendency on the part of some to take the motion literally and investigate any and all acts of discrimination was severely criticized both on the campus and in the editorial columns of the McGill Daily. The students who wished to carry out the letter of the motion were concerned primarily with the strict regulations limiting the entrance of Jewish students into McGill; the university has always taken a strong stand against Jewish students, and the persons responsible for retreating from the laudable stand set forth in the proposal felt that student opinion could in no way influence the attitude of the University in this manner, nor was student support unanimously in favour of the motion when applied to the Semitic problem.

We feel that once such a stand is taken by the students, if they are truly sincere in their belief and acceptance of the Christian and democratic ideals that prompted them in the beginning, they must condemn and take action against any rulings that amount to racial or religious discrimination, regardless of whether the rulings are aimed at Japanese-born Canadians or Jewish Canadians.

Correspondence

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Dear Madam,

At the risk of receiving an editorial spanking in your columns, I wish to add my own timid voice to this "Control Education" discussion.

To begin with, suppose we re-examine the original issue. Mr. Coldwell, it seems, remarked that any university which practised racial discrimination with regard to admission or examination requirements "would forfeit its right to receive such educational grants as would be made under a C.C.F. government." Into these words you read a threat to "academic freedom," an attempt to interfere with "intellectual speculation." Now I myself am well disposed toward "intellectual speculation," and should feel no little irritation to see it meddled with. But on the face of the evidence presented I fail to see any grounds for the fears you express.

Mr. Coldwell's statement was concerned with the practice of racial discrimination, and you yourself uphold his view on that particular issue as such. Presumably, however, racial discrimination is regarded as a special form of "intellectual speculation," since in no other way could Mr. Coldwell's remarks be construed as an attack upon "academic freedom" (italics mine). If you will pardon my saying so, I think your imputation is just a trifle absurd. Mr. Coldwell said nothing of subject matter taught, of "intellectual speculation," and even of general admission or examination requirements. He simply asserted that there should be equal justice for all, in universities as throughout the rest of society; academic freedom, as other forms of freedom, should not become the exclusive property of any racial or religious in-group.

The issue with which Mr. Coldwell was concerned was not one of academics, but one of common civil rights and liberties. The principle involved here is broader and of more fundamental significance than the rights of academic institutions; it pertains to the essential status of the individual in a democratic society. In your reply to Barry Allen's letter you assert that the university is concerned with the individual good; if we grant this assumption, it is plainly apparent that discrimination against individuals on racial or religious grounds is a direct betrayal of this interest.

Here, however, I wish to uphold Barry Allen's view that if universities need to be endowed at all (and of course they do) it is better that they be publicly rather than privately endowed. His argument that the supporting body should be responsible is thoroughly sound; to point to instances of good done by irresponsible bodies proves no general principles, but is like defending dictatorship on the grounds that dictators may sometimes be benevolent. And here let me point out a logical (or rather illogical) contradiction in your line of reasoning. The university, you say, is concerned not with the common good but with the individual good; yet you go on to assert that "for the sake of the common good (italics mine) it is to the advantage of the state to endow the university." Why? Presumably because if the university is kept functioning it serves the interest of the state, the common good, which is precisely the contrary of your original proposition.

As a matter of fact, your distinction between the functions of the university and the state strikes me as so much idle and inexcusable nonsense. The state has at all times had a vital interest in education, and rightly so, since the efficiency of the whole society ("the common good") depends so largely upon it. The common good and the so-called individual good are so inextricably bound together that it is virtually impossible to treat them separately. In the interests of the common good, the state is bound to take the individual good into account; it is for this reason that the state recognizes individual rights. Social scientists would be inclined to regard the whole concept of individual good as distinct from the common good as largely an illusion; "individual personality" is not so individual as you seem to suppose.

Patently,

PHILIP L. COOPER, U.C. II.

(Editor's Note.—We do not think that we read extensively into Mr. Coldwell's speech. He is admitting a principle regarding the control of the internal policy of a university. Although the promulgation of this principle was in reference to racial discrimination, the fact still remains that his theory concerning the control of universities will be a matter of state interference. As yet, in C.C.F. policy there has been no line drawn to limit state interference.

The author states that it is preferable to have the university publicly rather than privately owned. If

Who Would Eat Ersatz Haggis? Pipers Mutiny

"Earthworms or Mutiny" is Battlecry of McGeeches, McGooches, McJones, McSmiths, McSchmalzes and McMacs

PUTTEES DONATED

Unanimously of the opinion that "they can't fill us up with that stuff," seventeen members of the University C.O.T.C. Pipe Band had gone A.W.O.L. by seven p.m. yesterday, with further delinquents still expected to swell the total of protesters against synthetic haggis.

"A' gone, a' gone, my braw bonny pipers," Bandleader Major Angus Fitzhaggie wailed to reporters last night. "But it's nae sae muckle loss. They weren't true Gaelic pipers."

Informed sources credited the outbreak of mutiny to Fitzhaggie's insistence on haggis as a food fit for braw pipers. Owing to the action of the Axle Grease, Boffed Rag, and Earthworm Controllers, haggis is a commodity in short supply, and Fitzhaggie was driven into disastrous dealings with a duo of Engineers who claimed to have perfected a synthetic substitute.

"Decayed tripe and seaweed they could stomach," said an informant, "but not a paltry mess of cabbage and onions."

"They were true Scots," he went on. "They hoarded their haggis with a passion hardly pure. Only last Friday evening I found one brave fellow at mess scooping his portion into a G.I. sock; and he assured me between belches that prudence forbade him to gobble his delicious meal immediately. He was saving it for a V-Day treat."

Controlling interest in the cabbage-and-onion-substitute concern was rumoured to be held by Mitchell F. Heartburn, an obscure Western Ontario onion grower. "I have had my eye on this man Heartburn for a long time," state Prime Minister George Brew, "and now we have him. He will be charged under the Weed and Tripe Control Act of 1437."

"Heartburn," he went on, "has obstructed recruiting in His Majesty's forces. He has struck at the morale of our soldiers by silencing their bagpipers."

A passing student of music promptly started a fund to hire Mr. Heartburn a lawyer.

STOP PRESS.—Eleven of the delinquent bagpipers have been apprehended this morning as a result of waterwauling issuing from a musty chamber behind the organ pipes in Convocation Hall. Dismissed for several hours by the caretaking staff as signifying merely Dr. Squealy Villain at his early morning practice, the wailing sounds finally drew the attention of "Feathers" McFiggins, S.P.S. janitor, who recognized the strains of bagpipes and led authorities to the spot.

The missing pipers were found to be cutting up the leather organ bellows and stewing them in jive juice as a forlorn attempt to manufacture haggis. Asked whether a court-martial would be held, Col. Madrool demurred on hearing the bagpipes would be played in court as evidence and offered to contribute his last year's puttees to the haggis pool.

All-Varsity Hockey Team To Meet Today At Arena

Men in Graduate Studies Are Eligible; Ace Bailey to Look Over Prospective Players for Talent

BRING EQUIPMENT

The Varsity Hockey team will get together for the first time today at 5:15 at the Arena. Mr. Reed has contacted Ace Bailey, who will be out to look the material over and drop a few helpful hints towards organizing the expected throng of players. All those who are coming to the practice are requested to bring their own equipment and change all but their skates at Hart House as the old Varsity dressing room at the Arena has not been opened as yet this year.

Only 14 have signed the eligibility list in the Athletic Office so far, but there are more fellows around who intend to turn out. Lawlor, who had gone out for Marlboro's this year, is reported to be seeking his release to play for Varsity. Mel Lawson, reputed to be back at Forestry again after a prolonged absence while playing for the Hamilton Wildcats this fall, should be a welcome addition to the team if he shows up at practice. All other players who have signed contracts with outside teams cannot play for Varsity unless they first receive their releases from these teams through the Athletic Office. This is due to a ruling of the Athletic Directorate on how the team shall operate.

The team will carry about 15 players

ALL-STAR TEAM

All football managers are requested to submit their respective all-star teams to Room 42A, University College by Thursday noon. Two teams will be chosen by each manager and no more than six players may be selected from any one group.

Group Honors To Victoria Team

Vic lacrosse team won the Group III championship by defeating St. Mike's 6-1 in the last scheduled game of the season yesterday. Vic now meets Forestry, first place team in Group IV, in the play-offs.

The game was a very loosely played affair with Vic having a decided edge. The Artsmen had several chances to make the score more one-sided than it was, but just couldn't seem to capitalize when they got close in. The half-time score was 4-1 and with this lead Vic eased up in the last half. Hart and Fullerton were the outstanding men on the floor for the winners, splitting the six goals evenly between them. Reg Campbell made many good saves in goal. Hinds scored the only St. Mike's goal and played well throughout. Rochie also tried hard.

when it is organized. There is plenty of practice time available around noon every day and the team will likely get in one practice a week this way. Wednesday and Thursday from five to six will also be used each week till the players round into shape. The games are to be played on Friday nights and as many teams as possible will be contacted to play exhibitions with the Blues. Men in Graduate Studies are eligible for the Varsity team as they are eligible for Intercollegiate sport, but not Intramural athletics. This should affect two or three top-notch players.

A sub-committee has been set up by the Standing Hockey Committee to look after the administrative details of the team. This committee is headed by Chairman George Lewis of Meds. He will receive able assistance from three advisers from the Standing Committee, namely, Ian Hart of U.C., Freddie Bryans of Meds, and Jim Boa from School. They will also help to arrange games for the team. The team manager has yet to be chosen from Ken Carroll of Dents and George Ferguson of U.C. The trainer will be the indomitable Joe Carruthers, aided by some of his personal staff.

Speaking OF SPORT

By George Hougham

(Editor's Note.—As a direct result of the challenge flaunted by a School senior a week ago, we present the manager of the U.C. football team. While he makes no rash boasts, George does a commendable job of selling his team.)

IN THIS CORNER . . .

Again this year, as the Mulock Cup Rugby final approaches, we find University College pitted against Senior School. Dare we predict the outcome? Well, not being a Skuleman, I only intend to present the U.C. case and let you judge for yourself.

While the Red and White lays no claims to the questionable honour of the "beef trust" sobriquet, they make up the shortage of avoir du pois with brains and speed. Their record of 98 points for, 13 against in six games proves that they don't lack in football know-how and scoring punch.

Who are they? From last years squad we have in the quarterback spot Alex Saltzman, a sure ballhandler and a dangerous man in broken field running. On the half line, there is big Art Staley, star of the Junior Meds last year, Erin Horwitz a driving plunger and a good mudder and Ed Matthews, small but as speedy as they come.

Other holdovers include ends Bill Wade, veteran of intercollegiate warfare and vastly underestimated Doug Whittle, a man who will bear close watching. Team captain Wade is also the University's placement kicker de-luxe and although bothered by a trick shoulder, is determined to make his third Mulock Cup effort a winning one. Teaming up with Wade and Whittle is Syd Bossin and Masewich, who make up for lack of experience with good tackling ability and college spirit.

On the line there is hard hitting Ed Currah and Dave Goldberg. Nor must we neglect hard working snap Ron Bronsten and flying wing Jerry Raffelman.

Rounding out the halfline are newcomers Colin Cranham, enticed away from Balmly Beach and Doug Leetch, a happy go lucky grinder who plays well nonetheless. The centre secondary spot is ably filled by Nels Kuhn, an experienced and hard fighting veteran, formerly of Oakwood Indians, who has just claims to all star rating for his defensive work this year. On the forward line, freshman Ed Koby, Claude Brundage, Cheesman and little Phil Rosen, are determined to give ground to no one.

Separate space has been reserved to mention that hard fighting Irishman Mike Pyle, a line standout all season will be forced to contribute moral support only. Mike was hospitalized for several days due to serious injury sustained in the game against Senior Meds, and the line is determined to uphold the standard he set.

So we say, give us a dry field, an even share of the breaks and there may be some very surprised Schoolmen come Thursday night. Win or lose you can be sure the Red and White won't lack the old college try, so what say Artsmen? How about lending your vocal support against the beer-drinking "beef trust"? There will be no lack of gorgeous gals from the Follies. Quit your drooling!

Editorial

such were true, then Canada would have one academic policy dictated by the structure of the political set-up. At present each university is free to have its own policies, be they directed by private or public standards. Such a set-up leads to greater expression of individual opinion as well as increased initiative. It might be argued that a university controlled by private endowments is just as sterile as that owned publicly. But not all universities which are comparatively free of state control have the same standard policy as would be found under a controlled education.

If the social scientists are inclined to regard the whole concept of individualism as distinct from common good an illusion we should like to hear from them.

NOT EVERYONE . . .

is happy, they tell us. For instance, we fixed it up with P.H.E. about the other night's column, but since then U.C. has been out after us with a pea-shooter. The Royal College gals claim that in our statement, "an obscure college noted for its girls and glamour only," we misrepresented their college. We were unaware of any slander, and such was not, really it wasn't, intended. We apologize. We weep big tears and we reprint our statement, thusly: "an obscure college noted for its girls, glamour and its high academic standard only." We feel that this should make everyone really happy. We will also make a quick memo to the effect that we should not base our ideas of the said obscure college on a little dirty about Lucy again.

UP AT O.C.E. . . .

In the first game, U.C. Sr. defeated St. Hilda's Sr. 25-13. At the risk of plugging St. Hilda's too much, which we don't think that we do, we will say that St. Hilda's had three-quarters of the shots, and still U.C. won by numerous baskets. The U.C. guards aren't their best feature. We can make such a statement "cause someone counted the respective inaccurate shots on baskets of each team. This supports our claim for the most inaccurate shots in the league for the Saints. It similarly speaks well for our guards. But U.C. has the shots. Joan Davis was rather off her game, but Mary Mulligan, and the other forwards were really on the beam. Accuracy is the great thing in this game. Barbara Allen played a smooth guarding game for U.C. If that team tightened up on zone, which, if that is what they are playing, and it is hard to tell, they would not have lost so decisively in the past, to other good teams.

In the second game, U.C. II took P.H.E. II 17-16. This was a fast, hard game, and the issue was doubtful till the last. Birdie Tate, a fast elusive forward, starred for U.C. She is one person we have been annoyed at in a nice sort of way since back in High School days, when she and her twin played against the team we played on. It was moider. After all, in man-to-man play it's hard to keep track of two people if you think that they are just one person. And she is even better in College, although alone and now only one person. On the U.C. guard there were Helen Taylor and Mary McKenzie, who held against the fast-shooting P.H.E.'ers in no uncertain fashion. P.H.E. can lay proud claim to Helen Sheppard and Kay MacMillan, who are good, steady forwards, and Marg. Fellow, a staunch guard. At the end, the game tended to be rough.

In the last game P.H.E. Jr. had a hard time pulling out of their bout with Nurses with the score that they did, 20-13. P.H.E. were pulled through by the playing of Betty Jackes and Bobby Beaton, while Pat McPherson held up the end of the Nurses.

AT THIS TIME . . .

we feel that we can safely say some things about the picture as a whole. Later we will try and say who will take each league, but unless something happens which shouldn't, Vic A will clean up the Championship. The doubtful element is P.H.E. Sr. They should take St. Mike's fairly well, in view of the pasting Vic gave St. Mike's. This defeat also pasted the Double Blue chances for a championship unless St. Mike's defeats P.H.E. Sr. and P.H.E. Sr. defeats Vic A. This would be an upset that we would say definitely cannot happen. In reality the outcome depends on the Vic A-P.H.E. Sr. game, which was postponed. The other two games, against Vic B and U.C. Sr. should be easy for the A team.

In Hart House the finals will take place, but we think that the real final will occur earlier. We hope there is a dark horse in the crowd of teams in the other leagues.

Boy! We certainly do stick our neck out, don't we? The teams in the other leagues won't like us, we are thinking, as we pack up and plan to go home to a well-earned sleep, come 2:00 a.m.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

Anticipation

The past few years on this continent have been especially fruitful in the discovery and development of budding musical geniuses whose creative talents would never have come to light but for the growing interest, financial and otherwise, which public-spirited citizens have been showing in music. As a result, the musical life of this hemisphere has become that much richer each year in proportion to the number of new discoveries.

One young man who deserves careful watching, namely Francis Chaplin, hails from Mount Allison University of Sackville, New Brunswick. This sixteen-year old prodigy, "a remarkably gifted young violinist" in the words of James Levey, has obtained extremely favourable reports from many other distinguished Canadian musicians, among them Sir Ernest MacMillan, who said of him in 1941: "Possesses a genuine sense of beauty, a most rare thing, rare even in the best players . . . most exceptionally gifted."

It is thought that this lad should be of interest to musical Toronto and to University students in particular. He will appear in Eaton Auditorium, Saturday, December 2. We feel that all too little encouragement is given to Canadian artists, that the tables should be turned from the day when an artist's musical capacity is immediately distrusted if he does not possess a foreign name. So let us all remember young Chaplin, who "held the audience spellbound from the first note . . . a never-to-be-forgotten experience" (St. John Telegraph Journal) and give him a big hand when he plays here next week.

ing to promote good relations between Britain, the United States, and Canada and his own country, Baron Robert Silvercruys, Ambassador of the Kingdom of Belgium, expressed his admiration of the Canadian people which had been heightened by their help in the liberation of his country. "I am satisfied," he said, "that the University of Toronto has wished to honor, not the ambassador, but the nation."

Dr. Chalmers Jack Mackenzie, President of the National Research Council of Canada, who was awarded the degree of Doctor of Engineering (honoris causa), stated that he fully recognized the double honor paid to himself, but also to the many people of his institution, who have laboured so faithfully and so well over the years. He concluded with a reference to the part which the University of Toronto has played in the war which we will fully realize when its history can be written.

Controversy ran high not so long ago over what the well dressed man should wear but we think the the most spectacular form of clothing around at the moment are those red kind of skiing underwear things that appear in the weirdest places. Practically all over the campus you might say.

The other day we observed one of these little Halloween suits, inhabited by a mighty athlete, on its way up to the stadium which is where presumably they really do hang out. On the way this refugee from the Santa Claus parade passed two freshies. Naturally they were just fascinated; they watched him till he was way up the street and then, when you couldn't tell him from a post box one coed murmured to the other in an awed tone—"Gosh, don't his mather dress him cute."

All our college life we've thought of professors as being secretly romantic. Even though they often describe the most eloquent parts of essays as 'padding' and appear to have no conscience as far as giving low and undeserved marks is concerned. However, we always felt that, at heart, even the mathematical ones were poetically inclined.

But this is not true; even if, girls, one sometimes opens a door for you or takes off his hat in the street it is still mistake because the other day in a lecture we heard one murder the theory of the sentimental professor forever.

"Helen of Troy?" he said, "She wasn't worth it!"

Life is just awful at times and one of the awfullest times is from the end of April to the middle of May. Last year we remember a Trinity freshie upon whom exams descended while she was still, you might say, practically unaware of their existence. This of course necessitated much burning of the midnight oil. Finally, the battered and scared veteran of several all night sessions, she went down to Simcoe Hall to pick up her pseudonym which, she felt, should be a word filled with intellectual significance capable of acting as an omen. However, instead of receiving a pseudonym of fitting inspiration, such as Socrates or Aristotle maybe, she was handed a slip of paper bearing the good old English word,—"BAG".

All smart girls know that it's never clever to write letters to the fellows on a typewriter. This is because of all kinds of things but actually one of the best reasons why people shouldn't is because it's DANGEROUS.

Frinstance take Lucy from U.C. who spent all summer at a stenography school. Lucy carried a printed epistle around in her notebook for a long while before she decided to mail it. When she finally did she just bundled a whole lot of typewritten stuff into an envelope and stuck it in the post. Well, a week or so later Lucy got a letter back which also contained a lot of typewritten stuff. On examination Lucy found that it was exactly the same material that she'd mailed the week before which of course upset her considerably until she discovered that there was something peculiar about the letter. It didn't actually seem to be a letter at all; in fact it looked more like the essay Lucy'd handed in the week before on Johnson—The Literary Colossus. Well it seems that that is exactly what it was and Lucy is still laughing over how surprised the prof is going to be when he starts reading her essay which begins amorously,—"Dear Joe"

Let's throw in a 'yon' just for good measure. It seems that up Queen's way an organization called the W.D.W.T.G. B.Y.M.H.A.U.A. Club sprang into being. Fascinated, but at the same time suspecting dire and dreadful things, the Varsity hurriedly made use of the CUP services. Finally we discovered that Queen's recently held a Sadie Hawkins Dance and that the terrific title of the club which we won't bother to quote again stands for We Didn't Want To Go But You Might Have Asked Us Anyway.

If there is anything worse than that 8.30 nostalgia it could quite possibly be that 12.15 feeling that is strictly from hunger. Not so long ago we watched two Trinity coeds in an 11.30 class who had that we'll-never-last-till-lunch expression in their eyes. After nibbling the india rubber on their pencils for a while they started to draw, course by course, item by item, the lunch that they hoped their residence would give them!

Of late we've noticed that the hithers have 'gone literary' and have been appearing in verse form. Here's a poem that appeared in The Varsity several years ago back on a repeat performance to write poetry one must be born poet to write prose one requires a certain amount of intelligence but to write this damn stuff all one needs is a typewriter

The latest Beery vehicle with, by, and about Wallace Beery, offers its audiences nothing else. The story is novel in its utter lack of originality, the acting is non-existent, the direction and photography belong to the typical B picture, and Beery is not even good Beery in a picture littered with goody-goody morals. As a down-and-out confidence man, Beery squints his way into the good graces of the frontier population of Goldtown, reforms, is ruined by sinister villain, and begins robbing Wells Fargo stages to pay back the townspeople. The ending is happy, especially for the audience.

MULOCK CUP CONTEST AT STADIUM TODAY

U.S., British Co-operation Stressed By Prof. Owen

Isolationism and Economic Question Asserted to be Two Great Problems of Post-war Period

PEACE-PLANNING

Britain may be able to use the experience gained in building up her commonwealth to help lay the foundations of a world community, said Prof. David Owen, Harvard University, who spoke on "Great Britain and World Organization," the third lecture in the series on "Peacemaking and World Order" yesterday afternoon.

Prof. Owen pointed out that a negative and defensive attitude is evident in plans for peace, since the kind of a peace that is either desirable or possible seems to be undecided. A few countries, differing from the ordinary small state, hold most of the power, and the primacy of such states is a premise of plans for post-war stability.

Britain's position of almost unchallenged leadership in the nineteenth century has declined until now the U.S.S.R. has inherited her power in Europe, and the United States her leadership across the Atlantic, the speaker asserted. In this connection, he stated that of the three major world powers to emerge from the war, only two can be placed without qualification in the "super power" class.

Britain's population and wealth are not likely to expand at a sufficient rate to match either the United States or Russia, and therefore she should continue to collaborate with these two major allies, Prof. Owen said.

Prof. Owen outlined the conditions necessary for successful co-operation of the victorious allies as: a common policy towards Germany, so that she will not become a wedge between them; a settlement concerning their own security spheres, to eliminate present suspicions and fears; a determination on the part of the Allies that no dominant power should interfere liberally in the affairs of smaller states; and an avoidance of economic friction between Britain and the United States. "The vital thing is that the Allies liquidate whatever differences they have so they can, with no reservations, form the nucleus of a world organization," Prof. Owen asserted.

Referring specifically to Britain's place, the speaker said that continental policy should be her main preoccupation in the future, as more of a European power, with a less imperative world influence.

This more positive European role would serve the interest of both Britain and the Allies, Prof. Owen believes. Geographically and morally, Britain is in a strong strategic position to help prevent the coalition formed under pressure of war from collapsing as so many former alliances have, when that pressure has been removed.

All Post Office Jobs Are Filled

All positions that were available for Christmas employment at the Post Office have been filled, it was revealed at the S.A.C. office last night. In spite of this, Miss A. E. M. Parkes stated that "we are still being bounded all the time."

This year, as in past years, Post Office positions were offered to students. A quota of 150 application forms are given to the S.A.C. which are usually taken as soon as their arrival is announced.

Experience Gained in Building Up Commonwealth to be Aid in Founding World Community

HISTORY CLUB

England and the United States will co-operate in strategic matters because they have to, stated Professor David Owen, of Harvard University, in an informal talk to the Modern History Club last night in Wynnwood.

The result of the so-called invasion of England by U.S. troops may be mixed, probably because of the adverse conditions under which associations have been made. "The English and the Americans are not naturally addicted to each other," said Prof. Owen, "but the tremendous exposure to one another may produce either cordiality or otherwise."

Whatever their attitude may be after the war, the English have gained a greater curiosity about American history and institutions.

The two great problems of the post-war period are isolationism and the economic question. With regard to the question of isolationism, a great deal depends on the policy of the next government, but it is likely that while the U.S. will not be very willing to co-operate in a world plan, they will want to be a world power in their own right.

American criticism of British policy is confined to small groups concerned with different geographical areas. The spheres of interest are India, Ireland and Palestine, about which the groups concerned seem to know rather little, Prof. Owen stated.

The economic issues are of the greatest importance and are likely to provide the greatest friction. Divergence arises over the question of post-war government control of industry.

Britain sees that control will be necessary after the war, but the U.S. regards this policy with alarm, considering it will provide unfair competition, said Prof. Owen.

After the war the U.S. will probably focus its interest on the Pacific area, while Great Britain will centre its attention on Europe and the East, so that friction will probably not be caused by territorial interests.

Dr. Owen is a professor of History at Harvard University.

Pen Sketches of Teams

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE

EDDIE MATHEWS: a good job as playing coach and is a fast back. Eddie will be a hard man to catch and will be more than a match for speedy Booth.

ALEX SALTZMAN: a field general of no mean ability who will prove to be a thorn in the side of School. A tricky broken field runner who is liable to break away at any time.

ART STALEY: a kicker de luxe. Art is equally at home with a wet or dry ball. Besides kicking, Art is a powerful running back who should return to his spot on the All-Star team.

COLIN CRANHAM: a P.H.E. freshman comes here from last year's high school champions, Riverdale Collegiate. He is a shifty back and is determined to keep intact his record of playing on championship teams.

AARON HORWITZ: a hard hitting plunging half who will watch Keary in yards gained. The forward combination of Horwitz-Whittle should make the first entry upon School's unscathed-upon record.

BILL WADE: School lookout. Will enter the game as flying wing, and his ability to receive passes will likely prove more than a headache to School. Bill is hard hitting and will be a constant threat.

"HAPPY" LEITCH: a hard hitting, fleet back from East York whose specialty is intercepting passes and running for touches.

JERRY RAFFELMAN: a utility backfielder who is small but very effective.

PHIL ROSEN: all-star high school lineman. Watch for the nose guard. His 185 pounds will prove too much in tomorrow's fixture.

RONNIE BRUNSTEN: a snap who has three years' experience in line play. His all-round aggressiveness counteracts his lightness.

CLAUDE BRUNDAGE: another frosh playboy at inside who has proved that he hits hard and often.

ED (REMEGIS) CURRAH: the iron man whose specialty is breaking up plays in the opponent's backfield. Will see the last rugby playing in his life, due to knee injury.

NELS KUHN: an Oakwood Indian star now playing for his alma mater. Brings with him three years of senior experience and is the backbone of the line.

SENIOR S.P.S.

"STUMP" EVANS: quarterback; "Stump" has been lying awake at night dreading how to beat the "Red Menace" from U.C. Built low to the ground, "Stump" moves like a runaway ten-ton truck.

VERN BOOTH: running half; a sprint and a hurdle man on the Varsity track teams. Vern has enjoyed his best season of intercollegiate football. His tricky running is a threat at all times.

DOUG KEARY: plunging half. Who can forget Doug as he carried the mail in last year's final to beat U.C.? Doug will be twice as good today.

ROSS CLARE: kicking half; Ross kicks, plunges and plays. Heads up the ball at all times. Had intercollegiate football been here he would have been the apple of Warren Steven's eye.

DON MCMICHAEL: flying wing; a dark horse who, when aroused, becomes a football great. Watch him break up U.C. end runs.

The first string line undoubtedly would all be on the "Big Blues" if such existed. They back up a wealth of experience with size and all kinds of eagerness.

JIM BROMLEY: end; the "Pride of the Maritimes" is a deadly downfield tackler. His ankle-grappling will be a treat to watch.

KEN CRAIBBE: end; up from the Oakwood Indians, he is a tough kid. We sure wouldn't like to meet him in a dark alley.

"SWIFNEY" CROSS: middle; a brick wall if there ever was one, he's captain of the team. Horwitz, Salzman, et al please stop.

WALT SHARPE: middle; ten years of football experience, backed up by size, desire, and a keen delight in making bone-crushing tackles.

BILL MOFFATT: inside; "Moff" has been playing football since 1925 and is keen on being in on a Mulock Cup championship in his second decade of football.

DOUG CURRIE: inside; this guy's a dead-end street by himself. Watch him muck-in all afternoon.

"GUS" CAMPBELL: snap; Gus played for the Stratford O.R.F.U. entry in 1941. His 220 pounds will make more than one U.C. man wish he was on a slow train bound elsewhere.

RUSS UPPER: alternate quarter; a brother of the famous Art Upper. Russ is a real threat. Once in paydirt, (Continued on page 3)

Senior S.P.S. Meets U.C. In Championship Clash

Both Faculties Hold Rugby Rallies and Plan to Put On Big Displays for Their Teams at Stadium Today. Public Address Systems to Provide Entertainment Throughout the Game.

CHEER LEADERS, MUSIC

The highlight of the sporting year takes place today at Varsity Stadium when Senior S.P.S. meets U.C. in the final rugby game for the Mulock Cup. This colourful Varsity classic is the only real substitute for the displays that characterized every Toronto game back in intercollegiate days.

Things get under way at 2:15 this afternoon, when both U.C. and S.P.S. will turn out in full force to parade to the Stadium. Large crowds are also expected from many of the other faculties as the day's activities will provide a real spectacle. Rivalry between U.C. and S.P.S. will be confined not only to the gridiron but will effervesce into the stands by means of cheer leaders, public address systems, and various other features.

The scoreboard at the north end of the field will be in operation today also, due mainly to the efforts of Mac McCutcheon.

S.P.S. will start the ball rolling with a blast of the famous School cannon at 12:30 today. This will signify the cancellation of all labs and lectures, made possible through the co-operation of Dean Young.

"After a conference with his department heads yesterday, Dean Young authorized the cancellation of all labs and lectures for the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, so that the Schoolmen would be able to go to the final game," Don Gibson, president of the S.P.S. Athletic Association, said yesterday.

After lunch, mid blaring music, rousing "Toke Oikes," lusty cannon belches, and lead by "a bevy of beautiful girls, S.P.S. will form up and snake-dance to the Bloor Street Bowl. Miss O'Toole, of School, will be in the fore.

At the Stadium there will be music, cheerleading by three girls and two fellows, and more spasmodic outbursts from the cannon, which incidentally is stuffed with old copies of The Varsity to pack in the explosive mixture.

U.C. will counter all of School's efforts with displays of its own. A rugby rally will be held in the Junior Common Room at 1 p.m. to get the guys and gals organized as a body. They will practice up on the College yells, ably led by four members of this year's Short Chorus from the Follies. They will then march to the Stadium and seat themselves in a special "Arts" section which will be reserved for this purpose. They will also provide a P.A. system and will have novelty numbers from the Follies broadcast at half-time.

Bob Bell, president of the U.C. Literary and Athletic Association, was overheard to remark yesterday, "U.C. will be out there in full force to give all the (Continued on page 3)

This is $43,000.00 more than was subscribed in the 6th Varsity Loan he said. Mr. Higinbottom said he is satisfied with the result. "It is good to know that everyone in the University was wholly behind the War Effort to make Victory sure," he declared.

Members of the A.L.E.E. will attend a dinner at Hart House before the lecture, and Dean C. R. Young, of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering will lead a discussion group on "Engineering Education in the Post-war Period."

Mulock Cup Perpetuates Sir William's Memory

By Frank Rasky

There'll be an air of sadness up on Bloor Street today.

No, that is not to say that the tumult and the shouting, banner waving and college cheers won't be in evidence at the big game in the Varsity Bowl. You don't expect all that to subside.

At the same time, though, they will be many eds and co-eds who'll think with silent regret that it will be the first time in 51 years that old Sir William himself won't be around to present the winning team with the Mulock Trophy.

No, it's not expected that there be open lament at the game today. Sir William wouldn't have liked that. In his time he was a devout sportsman, and he entertained the belief that din and shouts were, properly, part of sports spirit.

Fragments from his history bears that statement out. It's not generally known, for instance, that he was captain of the first University rugby team here. As a University junior, he led a team whose members later became famous Canadians. These included John King, father of William Lyon Mackenzie King, and James Londen, former president of the University (who, incidentally, caused to be built the University's first gymnasium, a ramshackle shed on the back campus).

Illustration of Sir William's leanings towards healthy interest in sports is revealed, moreover, in the inception of the cup itself.

At the outset in 1894, the Trophy was the brain-child of Bruce MacDonald, an undergraduate, now better known as the chairman of the University's Board of Governors. It was his idea that the University was too much engrossed in intercollegiate competition, while intramural sports were being ignored.

So he broached his idea about, and other students elected him to canvass people likely to be interested in donating a cup for intercollegiate competition in rugby. First on his list, naturally, was Sir William Mulock, then Vice-Chancellor of the University.

"What," asked Sir William, "will the price be?"

"About $50 or so," MacDonald said. "Well," Sir William is reported to have said, "why don't you get a really good cup? Then send the bill to me."

MacDonald, of course, promptly did this, and so the University established the oldest existing football league of all universities throughout Canada. It has also become one of the University's best known sports institutions, with the Sifton Cup for basketball and the Jennings Trophy for hockey nosing in as close second and third.

Should you thumb through pages of Varsity past issues, you would find that Sir William was proud of the trophy which bore his name. And until his health became somewhat feeble in recent years, he was delighted to present the two-and-a-half foot tall trophy, decorated with lion's heads and gilt shields, to the winning team at an official dinner.

On one yellowed page of the Varsity, published in 1894, when the publication announced itself as "A weekly Journal of Literature, University Thought and Events," you will find two paragraphs recording the first Mulock Trophy Dinner. They read in part:

"The Mulock Rugby Trophy, won by final years in medicine, occupied a prominent place on the table and was much admired. . . ."

"Several University graduates who now reside in London, England, telegraphed, 'Toronto, Forever!' and a reading of this laconic message elicited hearty cheers."

At the dinners that followed, Sir William preceded the actual handshakes and presentation with speeches brim full of wit and anecdote. Mr. T. A. Reed, Financial Secretary of the University's Athletic Association, who is writing a history of the University's athletic background, still recalls one comment Sir William made at one of these functions during the prohibition period.

Victory Drive Is Successful

A total of $232,050.00 has been subscribed by the staff and students of the University in the seventh Varsity Loan. Mr. C. E. Higinbottom, the Bursar, reported yesterday. He announced that the University once again has won the "Honour Certificate" for obtaining their objective.

This is $43,000.00 more than was subscribed in the 6th Varsity Loan he said. Mr. Higinbottom said he is satisfied with the result. "It is good to know that everyone in the University was wholly behind the War Effort to make Victory sure," he declared.

The Mulock Cup

Today the time-honoured Mulock Cup, the symbol of gridiron supremacy in the campus Interfaculty League, will be contested for the fifty-first time. In honour of this highlight in the sports scene, The Varsity changes its colour and dedicates its annual Athletic Blue Issue to the gallant teams from University College and School who will fight it out at the Stadium this afternoon.

This is the big day in the campus sports calendar. With the departure of intercollegiate sport until after the war, the students find very few occasions to manifest their spirit. The Mulock Cup finals provide such an occasion. Strong cheering sections, the Skule cannon, and the U.C. Follies Chorus will be in evidence. Lectures and laboratories at both institutions have been cancelled for the event. It is true that the game will not provide the same incentive for a display of student enthusiasm as would an Intercollegiate football final, but we trust that the return of these gala days is not far off.

The Mulock Cup is the brain-child of Dr. Bruce Macdonald, the chairman of the Board of Governors, who, when an undergraduate, conceived the idea of a trophy to stimulate interfaculty competition in a fast-growing university. The Senior Meds team was the first to have its name emblazoned on the silver trophy, back in 1894.

Since that time the Cup has changed hands many times. Before the war, the Interfaculty finals were naturally eclipsed by the more exciting Intercollegiate contests; but during the last five years the venerable old chalice has come into its rightful glory.

And so this afternoon the two strong teams which have emerged successfully from a fast, rough, and thrilling season will battle it out for possession of the Cup. The contest is likely to be a close one, and both squads will be out for victory. May the best team win!

Correspondence

The Editor, The Varsity.

Madam:

I was interested to read your editorial on Wednesday last on the control of education, using Mr. Coldwell's statement regarding McGill as a text.

While appreciating your disclaimer of any disguised attack upon him, I feel that you make an entirely unwarrantable deduction regarding CCF policy. You say:

"... it is abundantly clear that the CCF party, when it forms a government in Canada, proposes to use its financial aid to exercise a control on the internal functioning of educational institutions."

and you make it clear that you intend your phrase "internal functioning" to refer to academic matters.

Most Canadian Universities are State Universities or receive large grants from public funds. When this is the case the University assumes certain responsibilities, most important of which is that of providing the same education for every member of the state (who is academically qualified for admission) irrespective of race, creed or class.

If a University fails in this trust it should be the duty of the State to insist upon it by whatever means are at its disposal, for example by withdrawing the funds which it gives to the University for the trust which is being abused. Unless some such safeguard exists such phrases as "equality of opportunity" are meaningless.

But this is not a matter of academic freedom. The state can tell professor A that he must teach student B, but the state must not tell him what he must teach student B.

The distinction is not subtle; it is perfectly straightforward, and adequate safeguards can be provided.

Those who phrased the University Act for the University of Toronto wisely made a strong and independent Senate, consisting mainly of university teachers and graduates, and gave to it full authority on academic matters. The Board of Governors exercises authority only over matters arising out of the expenditure of public funds.

It is a gross misinterpretation of Mr. Coldwell's statement to infer from it that he or the CCF favours state control of education in the sense of the State dictating what shall be taught. Mr. Coldwell is a teacher and has fought for years for academic freedom. The CCF is made up of those who fight for freedom now—academic, economic, political, religious—and who know what freedom means.

The misapprehension probably comes from the adage of private enterprise that "he who pays the piper calls the tune." Socialists have never accepted this. For them the tune is called by the majority of the public or by those to whom the responsibility belongs—for example the Senate of the University—and the piper is paid fair wages, irrespective of the tune.

Our Universities must look to a future that involves enormous increases in enrolments, staff and facilities and the abolition of fees. These could be financed in no other way than from public funds. But this does not involve a "vested interest" unless it be a vested interest in the wisdom of an educated public—surely a desirable one for a University.

While no suggestion is made that those of our Colleges which have private endowments are any less free, it must be admitted that in the search for the ideal which gives perfect academic freedom, most endowments must be rejected. For if the income accrues from dividends from any particular economic system there might be an academic interest in maintaining that system: nor may it come from land or rents lest there be a vested interest in slum property or real estate values: nor yet from royalties or patents for these involve the status quo. No, the income for the ideal University must drop like manna from heaven? Even if the University were to exist entirely upon students' fees there would be a vested interest in the existence of a privileged class that can afford to pay them. So as you suggest, Madam Editor, if you reject state financing your ideal of perfect academic freedom will involve Universities that are small and struggling—but very small and very very struggling.

ART MUSIC Drama

Thunder Rock

Thunder Rock

To see the audience at an amateur, or professional, production held spellbound is an impressive sight. To feel the emotional impact of Thunder Rock, presented by the U.C. Players Guild last night to a military audience, was an experience not quickly forgotten.

The idea that the world has a feature if people have the courage to recognize it is the core of the play. And John Peck as the optimist-turned-pessimist Streeter provided a criterion of normality. His naturalness held the production at even keel.

Mel Breen as Charleston was convincing throughout. He handled a difficult role with finesse, at times approaching brilliance.

Robert Endleman wisely underplayed Briggs. His restraint was advisable because of the role's tendency to become ludicrous in the hands of a less-experienced player.

Charmion King's Melanie was spirited. Ruth Cary's Miss Kirby, dignified. Realism was the keynote of Robert Bontaine's portrayal of Captain Joshua.

It is a credit to John Peck's directing that no one player obliterates the other. He has gotten over the fault of last year's Candle in the Wind, in which the leading roles were emphasized by allowing the minor

POOL ROOM CLOSED

Crepe hung about the doors of the Hart House poolroom yesterday afternoon and disconsolate Schoolmen leaned against the wall picking their teeth, following the sensational closure of the Green Room late Wednesday morning. The ban was understood to have closely followed reports that enthusiastic golfers had taken to standing on the tables and using the side pockets for putting practice.

A succinct account of the affair was given by Mashie McPuttock, Meds IV and University Golf Champ, who stated that rain had driven him and his conferees off the links and the bruised head of an irate Sanskrit professor emerging from a smashed window had been instrumental in making them give up driving practice in the U.C. quadrangle.

GOLFER McPUTTOCK

On the Baize, no Divots

"The smooth inviting green baize of the pool tables sang to my soul as I passed the door one day," continued McPuttock "Without a moment's hesitation I uncoiled my collapsible mashie and, standing on the table, attempted a practice putt at the south-east pocket. It was at that moment that Mr. Lickerbreth intervened."

"I am no enemy to golf in its place," stated Warden J. Burblin Lickerbreth. "In fact, it was at a little foursome on the greens of Lickenspitte that I made my memorable retort to the Major, the Brigadier, and the Personage I Dare Not Name on the very eve of D-Day."

"Lickenspitte Links is picturesque itself. A uniquely contrived water-hazard fitted with alligators serves to deter all but the most skilful players, and the sheep that wander about the greens are trained by the Greens Committee to swallow approaching balls and then look blandly innocent... but I digress."

"Matters involving highest strategy were under discussion, and the Major gave it as his opinion that the approach for the coming operations had been badly chosen and that failure was imminent. I may say that he was a contemptible tommad of a pantywaist at best... but I digress."

"The Brigadier and the Other Personage showed signs of siding with the Major, when I broke in with my accustomed courage, which I may say is derived in unbroken male descent from an ancestor who valiantly threw a dead cat at Charles the First on the scaffold and thereby signified to the world the reckless and even high bravado of the Lickerbreth line... but I digress."

"My retort—I give you the exact words—my retort was 'But my dear Brigadier, you don't know a damn thing about it.' I thereupon demonstrated by Fencible II-47 and X-22 that the approach to the hole, granted a rebound from a passing sheep and a bit of luck with wind eddies, was not at all impossible. They were overawed and agreed to concede me the putt... but I digress."

let's go places

Twentieth Century Fox has, apparently, not tired of the formula it used back in 1940 for "Down Argentina Way" so very successfully. They seem to consider the mixture of technicolor, a beautiful dancing and singing blonde and a dashing (also singing) hero all that is necessary for a five star musical—strangely enough, they are quite right. Betty Grable is replaced in this by a newcomer, June Haver, who resembles "Our Betty" in figure but surpasses her in facial beauty. She handles her assignment very well, adding a refreshing note to something that was getting slightly monotonous. Dick Haynes has the lead. He combines the two traits of a physique and a little acting ability.

"THREE CHEERS FOR THE IRISH" SHEA'S

The story deals with the trials and tribulations of Ernest Ball (composer of "When Irish Eyes are Smiling"), in reaching success as a composer. Beverly Whitney, former student at the Toronto Conservatory of Music, plays the part of an extremely decorative "other woman"—unfortunately, she is only given a chance to display her beauty, not her talent. Monty Woolley is good as the promoter. He plays a "Frank Morgan" role, with a lot more dignity than Frank, and adds some of his more subtle humour.

If you liked "Coney Island" or "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," you will most certainly like "Three Cheers for the Irish." J.D.R.

The movie version of Eugene O'Neill's book is an excellent production with more than a little melodrama. William Bendix, "The Hairy Ape," as a sweaty stoker in an old ship, plays the awe-inspiring role of a great beast of a man, fighting the social status into which life has cast him. Striving to compensate for his feeling of social inferiority, he assumes an over-bearing, blustering attitude and bulldozes men weaker than himself. Bendix plays his role with remarkable feeling and insight.

It is Susan Hayward who, as a vain, scheming American girl, Mildred Douglas, finally breaks down the Ape's conception of himself as all-powerful. Siding with her in this is the ship's second engineer, Tony Lazar (John Loder). These two become a source of ruining torment and his work suffers gravely. Only the thought of Mildred shock and let-down, therefore, when the Ape, set for murder, finally comes face-to-face with his enchanting temptress, only to shake her thoroughly like a rag doll.

The personality of Mildred Parker, portrayed by Miss Hayward, is none too convincing to the theatre-goer in that she is too clearly defined as an incredibly vain and selfish woman. In striking contrast, Dorothy Coningore, as Helen Parker, plays her patriotic, naive, too-good-natured friend.

We felt the picture was rather worth seeing, and we intend to read the book immediately. C.E.

Speaking OF SPORT

THE BIG DAY . . .

The proud possessor of the famed Mulock Cup for the 1944 season will be determined this afternoon when the famed arch-rivals meet in the annual football classic. For the second successive season the struggle becomes an Arts-Engineers fiesta with the Senior School and University College teams holding forth for their respective homes of learning.

Out of the great sports past lingers a memory of the first final for the possession of the Mulock Cup 51 years ago. Now that grand old man who donated the historic cup has passed on. During his fifty years of Mulock Cup play, Sir William saw great changes in football. A short year ago he stated, "Modern rugby is a brutal game."

It was in this changing era that University College last won the trophy. In 1911 the Junior team from that college captured the coveted honors. Two years previously, the Seniors had copied the title and cup for the last time to date.

Thus, University College has yet to win the Mulock Cup since the brutal game was inaugurated in its final stages.

Senior School, the present holders of the intramural championship, qualified for that kindly spot by knocking off this same Red and White team by the score of 8-2. In 1940 they were co-holders with their junior brethren after old man winter had set in and hampered the playoff.

On paper, there is little to choose between the teams taking into account their records of the present semester. School are undefeated and unscored upon in five games. In running up this enviable record, the men from the south end of the campus scored some 83 points. In six games U.C. counted up 98 markers with 13 against. The balance of opposition in the two groups is quite debatable.

The individual merits of the players are listed on the front page so there is little need to go into them here. The backfields are fairly well balanced but the weight in the School line may be the deciding factor.

Come what may, we cannot forget that it was a Schoolman who said, "The pertinent fact is that the Mulock mug is School bound, let the heads fall where they may. Be weeping ya at the carnage."

BASEBALL YET

Yes, baseball yet. In fact we are only now approaching the finals of the Varsity tournament although Santa Claus has arrived in Toyland and students are beginning to think of Christmas jobs and that exam this week. The schedule when originally made out was supposed to be completed before basketball started, which was quite possible and reasonable. But it seems that we gals just can't seem to turn out a full team on the day of the game, or we misunderstand the time scheduled, or practically anything! At any rate this year has been unsuccessful as to schedule through no fault of the girls in charge of organizing the whole thing but unfortunately because you and I and the rest of the gals have not cooperated as we should. Next year it is to be hoped that we will appreciate the time and trouble which goes into running these events and will act accordingly. 'Nuff said.

Today saw the finish of the Semi-finals when P.H.E. A team defeated P.H.E. B team in what was possibly the best game of the season. The score of 2-1 is a small indication of some very excellent play—so fine in fact that we are happy to take back our comment of an earlier date stating that Varsity baseball couldn't compare to the city leagues. It not only can but today it did! P.H.E. fielded two of the snappiest teams to be seen around here this year. The infielders played really heads-up ball exhibiting good fielding, accurate throws and a general awareness of what the game is all about. Outfielders—usually the weak sisters on our teams—were every bit as proficient as their team-mates and the pitchers were unusually good. All in all if the final game is half as good it will close the season with a bang. P.H.E. will meet U.C. this week for the University finals which by all indications will be a struggle. U.C. has a fine aggregation who play well together and have yet to lose a game. Don't miss it.

AND BASKETBALL—

Looking over the situation in the hoop circuit we have decided to try our hand at a few predictions. At this stage of the game to attempt to pick the final winner would be sheer suicide but the group finalists are at least within the range of probabilities. In the Senior league there are two good teams contending—Vic and St. Mike's. We pick Vic to win the group because of just one thing—we believe a team on which all players are uniformly good has a better chance than one having one or two star players who carry the load. Of the Juniors there is slightly more doubt but a good bet is U.C. They have a hard fighting bunch who certainly play good ball. In the Freshie class anything can happen—and frequently does but in spite of such uncertainty P.H.E. looks good to us. As a team they have the advantage of height, co-ordination and physical condition over the other less accomplished but equally hard-working groups.

AND ABOVE ALL—

Don't forget to get in some vocal athletics at the game today. Since this seems to be as close to Intercollegiate Sport as we are going to get this fall, let's support our teams to the utmost. Some of us are doing more than their share by turning out as cheer-leaders for School and U.C. This seems to us to be a very fine idea and approaches the ideal of Co-ed sport that we've been talking about so long. Brownie Young started the ball rolling with his Co-ed Tennis Tourney. Athletic Nites with their basketball games also help, and here is just one more instance of the coming thing on our campus. In this matter unfortunately we are woefully behind other colleges but then as far as new, modern ideas are concerned we have always been officially rather biased and old-fashioned. Let us hope that those who frame our sports policy will in the future remedy this state of affairs.

Aside from all this moralizing thought—let's all go to that game and yell our heads off!

ALL-STAR TEAM

All football managers are requested to submit their respective all-star teams to Room 42A, University College by Thursday noon. Two teams will be chosen by each manager and no more than six players may be selected from any one group.

mer who will quietly hold up his end of the line play. Fourth year on the team.

CURLY KOLBY: another frosh with whom School had better not get fresh.

DOUG WHITTLE: the receiving end of the Horwitz-Whittle combo who is the leading scorer of the team. Doug has a pair of sure hands both for catching passes and opposing players.

SYD BOSSIN: a freshman end who has been outstanding at end in all the victories and is about due to break into the scoring column.

SPORKY MASEWICH: fast and dangerous with mean tackling ability.

NORM CHEESMAN: a sharp character both on the campus and on the gridiron. His experience at East York should bolster the team.

MIKE FYFE: now suffering from back injuries and will play his game from the sidelines. This will be School's break and U.C.'s loss.

GEORGE HOUGHAM: manager, who has done a noble job of keeping the boys organized in order to put them on the field against School in top form.

DOUG FERGUSON: more than an able assistant to George and is a wonderful trainer.

GEORGE SHAW: another big back-fielder who, like any red-head, is unpredictable but has been primed to fervor for today's battle of the giants.

HARRY JONES: fast moving back-fielder who moves like a shot from the school cannon. Picks holes in an opposing line with reckless abandon both to his own life and the defending line.

BOB MOORE: end; Bob is still School president. He's an all-star end of last year whose grappling is a threat.

DAN COLLINGS: snap; big, fast, and a team in himself.

GIL BOA: line; big Gil plays head-up ball. Watch him smash U.C.'s front wall.

McKNIGHT: line; another big guy who knows all the answers and always a threat along the line.

BUS BOOTH: fast moving end with lots of experience. Will give his all. MR. LOU PANCER: coach; lecturer in Mining Engineering. Has done a real job with the boys. He has given generously of his time and football knowledge.

physical and moral support possible to their team." Dr. Sidney Smith, Principal of University College, has cancelled all U.C. classes to enable as many as are able to come to the game and cheer for the College's entry this year.

As far as statistics go, Sr. S.P.S. won all their games, without having been scored upon. They defeated Dents twice, 20-0 and 23-0, Sr. Meds twice, 8-0 and 13-0, and drubbed Vic 19-0 in their semi-final affair. That compiles a very impressive record of five wins for five efforts.

U.C. played one more game than their rivals, and emerged with five wins and one defeat, this suffered at the hands of Jr. School. They trounced Jr. Meds twice, 29-0 and 42-0, won two of three with Jr. S.P.S., 1-2, 8-1, 11-5, and nosed out Sr. Meds 7-5 in their semi-final. Their record, while not quite as overwhelmingly decisive as that of S.P.S., is also very good.

Neither team has made rash boasts about their certainty of winning today, which leads to the conclusion that the game will go down in the annals of Intramural Sport at Toronto as one to remember.

Any Time's SHOPPING TIME

A HOUSE WITHOUT a good foundation is apt to be a sad thing when the wind blows, and so is a hair-do without a good foundation cut. Whether you wear the tresses long or short, your coiffure requires exquisite care in the cutting and shaping. Make an appointment with the Antoine Salon, and get a really good foundation cut. It's at Holt Renfrew's, convenient on your downtown shopping trip. M. Antoine's system of hair-cutting has been celebrated in the world's smart cities ever since he first decided to abandon sculpturing in marble in favour of making sculptured lines of women's coiffures.

QUICK GIFT SHOPPING is simplified at the Evangeline Shops where you have the feminine accessory gift awaiting you in all its splendour. Lads as well as ladies find solace to the weary gift-conscience when it's a question of what to choose for Aunt Matilda or how to please the only girl. There is always a sympathetic and knowing sales-lady-counsellor at the Evangeline Shops, ready with intelligent suggestions and quick to grasp your way of thinking. Housescoats, slacks, as well as gloves and the smaller gift items, are available at your nearest Evangeline Shop, and always in the correct tradition.

ALWAYS KEEP A BOTTLE OF SLOAN'S LINIMENT where you can find it quick, quick like a flash when misfortune strikes. Sloan's is a quick respite from the effect of a campus casualty, if muscles are wrenched, or an ankle is sprained. If you're making up a package for a soldier or sailor, slip in a bottle of Sloan's. He'll thank you for it more times than one. Remember... Sloan's is considered right out in front in the liniment field, and there's nothing more welcome than a good liniment when the unexpected strikes. No need to say "Remember the name" because you've known of Sloan's since childhood.

GIFT ITEM to make her think sweetly of you all the year... a large size jar of Du Barry Cleansing Cream which does the job of keeping her complexion soft and smooth and clean and fragrant. She'll know you know your beauty-business if you make it a Du Barry gift because Du Barry is in the business of loveliness in a scientific way, one of the great names in beauty preparations. If your hands get that dried-up feeling after a swim in the tank, better keep a jar of Du Barry in the locker. Good for elbows with an inclination to go a bit leathery in wintertime.

DROP IN TO E. F. SPRINGER'S for the news in what's to be in fur styling. They're at 56 Bloor Street West, one of Canada's most beautiful fur stores. They're authorities on the subject of fur coat futures, and the shop is one of those pleasant places to shop where the interior is an inspiration to be smart and harmonious, and the fur coats themselves follow through with the same sound good taste and modern trimness of line. If you've an out-of-town relative coming to pay a shopping visit to the old town, take her into Springer's and she'll know you know your right-places to shop.

SNUGGLY... those all-wool, all-purpose dresses at Fairweather's, chosen to please you who must rush to early morning classes and look up-and-coming from that time on. They come in plain or fluffy cashmere materials, sizes for the little miss all the way up to her huskier sister. Coloured to flatter you in warm shades of coral, orchid, powder blue, aqua, green, natural. Bow neck or shirtwaist styles from which to choose the dress of your dreams, and remember, Fairweather's Main Floor is also a grand shopping spot for blouses, too. They feature the correct blouse for the Varsity girl, self-assured and of a practical turn, or feminine for a long-skirted evening.

NORTHWAY'S NEW "ANTELOPE COAT" comes in rich new shades of brown, highlighted in shimmering fawn. It's young and warm and it's windproof, versatile too, and can be worn casually for sports wear or in a snugly wrap-around manner for windy weather, or in prim boxy style for evening, to go well with a long dress. Comes in short or regular length, and is the perfect coat for the University gal, being in the economy brackets when it comes to pricing and in the luxury lists for looks. You'd never guess, but the Antelope Coat is priced as low as $115.00 for the "Shortie" length, and $129.00 for the regular length.

Chivalry's Dealer's a Doornail Department

Students meandering out of Ye Wee Coffee Shoppe a short while ago may have been witnesses to an accident of great significance both psychological and sociological.

There, before the eyes of all passers-by, was a bevy of college beauties pushing with every ounce of their oomph a veritable mule of an auto. Standing on either side of the road were slews of mighty males completely immune to the appeal and charm of those sweating gals. At last—one little male figure lunged into the middle of the road in red-faced embarrassment and offered to help.

... WHO'D A THUNK IT?—A SKULEMAN!!!

Which reminds us of another incident that took place in that "home of lost souls"—the Rotunda. You all know how lost and forlorn you feel when you come rushing into the aforementioned Rotunda after your second lecture to grab for a Varsity—just to find the last one already taken. Well, this happened to one soph the other day and, in desperation, she called over her shoulder to her girlfriend who had been standing there the moment before: "Can I borrow your Varsity, DEAR?"—Lo and behold—imagine her embarrassment when a very male hand reached over her shoulder and a strange male voice said, coyly, "Of course."

This shows the state night-editors are in the morning after... The other day a bleary-eyed member of the night-editing staff stumbled dazedly into the Rotunda with a "Hello, Mary, gosh you're looking swell!"—which would have been a good approach its gilt handles, he lifted the silver cover off. With a sly air of expectancy, he peered into the bottom of the trophy. Then, replacing the cover, he turned to his audience with a mock sigh.

"Ah, yes," he said, "all cups are empty things these days."

Though he was taken up with his academic duties, Sir William tried as often as possible to attend some of the games at the Stadium. In those days, though, the finals were played on a greensward situated on the present site of the Varsity Bowl, and students were supposed to pay one dollar fee to attend the Mulock series. Sir William was often wont to laugh at the fact that only professors and graduates paid the money—the undergrads, shouts of the gate-keeper ringing in their ears, more often climbed over the fence.

This ironic note is sounded in a Varsity news story of 20 years back. The story, on a page crumpling with age, reads:

"Last Friday night the cup was presented to this year's winners by the donor himself. Sir William gave some entertaining reminiscences... and mentioned that this was the second occasion in 40 years he had been invited to a function of this kind at Victoria College and he looked forward to celebrating his centenary 20 years hence when he expected the Mulock Cup would be in possession of Victoria again."

as I say, no enemy to golf in its place. Indeed, I am reminded of an occurrence—screamingly funny, too—involving one of the first robombs and the Hereditary Comber of the Queen's Lapdogs... but I digress...

Fear that the Warden on his morning prowling might discover and ban the equally nefarious activities of The Varsity Athletic Club was expressed by Sports Editor Aek-a-shoo last night. "Now that the depleted supply of ash-trays has ended our corridor curling, we have taken to fencing with rolled-up window-blinds," he stated. "If the Warden confiscates those, we are undone." Woo if he hadn't addressed one of those mannikins on display.

A skuleman, sitting in a street-car reading his favourite author, Damon Runyan, was so engrossed he didn't notice the VERY attractive female sitting beside him (if you can believe everything you hear). Suddenly, to the amazement of his fellow T.T.C. patrons, he laughed out loud. The girl directed her big blue eyes at him and in true Runyanese popped up with "leave us not laugh out loud," immediately turning away again.

People who read over shoulders—brrrrr!!!

There's always the student who inhabits the library by the hour and does nothing but write poetry about those of higher intellect—who CAN copy someone else's notes. We have here a noteworthy example of the work of such a one.

I saw a real bright student
A-settin', studiyin' hard,
He had worked and slaved
Went mad and raved,
—Now he's under guard.

Then there was the other version:
I saw a real bright student
A-settin', studiyin' hard,
He sat and sat,
And finally got callouses...

Ah, yes, can't you just picture the enthusiastic co-ed rushing towards the Library entrance waving fond adieu to her battalion of male escorts—just to land flat on her face when her feet hit the steps.

OH, WELL, DIDN'T WANT THAT FACE, ANYWAY!!!

$70.00 For A Bath

... in China. "Rather do without!" you will probably say. But what if you had to pay $6 for a cup of tea, $2,000 for a winter coat, $20 for a bowl of noodles, or $7,000 to save you from dying of typhus...?

These figures are absolutely true. Students in China, who are living under such conditions, need help desperately. The greatest, though still desperately small, support that has reached them has come through the I.S.S., from the dollars you have provided. They still need books, food and clothing.

We can all help by sparing every dollar possible.

Mysterious Novelty Highlight of Ball

"This year's Bar and Business Ball will feature a terrific novelty—never before attempted at a University dance," said Gordon Stulberg of the committee. "The keynote of it is audience participation but the actual details are being kept secret."

The I.S.S. will receive the proceeds and students from all faculties are welcome at the Ball next Tuesday night at Casa Loma. Ellis McIndock and his orchestra will provide the music. Entertainment is under the direction of A. Siegel, B. Orenstein and G. Stulberg. They have arranged several entrances in addition to the mystery number.

Massey Hall

The San Carlo Opera made its seasonal debut yesterday with Verdi's Aida before a house three-quarters empty. Members of the cast, however, did not appear much concerned over this, for they showed their usual pep and good spirits, with about half of their number singing remarkably well.

First honours go to Elda Ercole in the title role, which she put over with persuasiveness and a good deal of emotion. Mostyn Thomas as Amnastro appeared to be surest among the male singers, especially in his main scene in Both, however, considerably overdid their mimics and the gestural part of the action. Ramfis, high priest, sung with restraint by Harold Kravitz, fitted well into his dignified role, whilst Marie Powers, as Amneris, though artistically quite sound, was constantly drowned by the orchestra and other singers.

Tandy MacKenzie as Rhamnes sounded rather awful. A few notes off-key, sung with a bit of warmth and stimulus would have pleased us a great deal more than the lukewarm correctness with which he failed to convince us of his affection for Aida.

The complete rendition, lacking integration in the first act, grew quite impressive towards the Triumphal Scene and provided a closing scene which pleasantly surprised us in dramatic effect of both the scenery and the duet.

This was especially so, after we observed the complete poverty of material, though not of phantasy, which have been evident in the rendition to the point of utter ridicule.

How a cast could have happily carried on amid a cardboard wind-swayed scenery totalling one set of columns, one of the Nile and one with sphinxes, is incomprehensible to us. A perfectly serious aria was undone when Rhamnes, fat as he looked, appeared in a sofa pillow-case.

Operatic stunts such as two-foot swaying fans and spear-aiming guards,

At last, Hollywood has seen the light. As they have realized that movie-goers are frankly getting bored with the everyday, garden-variety low affair. Instead "SUMMER STORM" of the old-fashioned eternal triangle, they have introduced a new element into Summer Storm... that of the eternal quadrangle, and, if anything, it adds to the interest.

Although it was probably not intended, the love-story itself took second place to another problem which was revealed in the actual setting, that of pre-Revolution Russia. This matter was summed up concisely by Magistrate Petrovitch, played by George Sanders, when he accused the entire Czarist regime as being the "result of years of in-breeding." Edward Everett Horton, who portrayed the count, successfully showed how weak-chinned and frivolous that particular class was, when it was allowed to exist at the turn of the century.

In short, the story deals with a young Russian peasant girl whose narrow ambition lie along the lines of social prestige and wealth. Not uncommon in many movies, this particular plot seems to have been handled more pleasingly, even though Linda Darnell was a bit too Americanized for this role.

To sum up, Summer Storm is definitely superior entertainment to that usually supplied by the movie industry but George Sanders, who is the real drawing card, is not his one-time dynamic self.

Physiotherapy Juniors reciprocated the party given them by their Seniors earlier in the year when they entertained at the Women's Union last night. School and Meds were well represented and a good time was had by all.

numerous even in the Verdi original, were applied to exhaustion.

The orchestra, conducted by Nicholas Rescigno, could hardly be criticized for anything in particular, though it lacked enthusiasm. The ballet acts, however, were easily the most striking achievements of the production, both in dancing and make-up.

Summing up: Quite a worthwhile achievement for a rather poor-looking crowd.

Cody Conducts Services For Late Norman Wilks

Such a Combination of Artistic Temperament and Sound Judgment is Rare, Declares Chancellor at Service

WAS NOTED PIANIST

Our best memorial to Mr. Norman Wilks will be to try to carry on the work in which he was so deeply interested, said Dr. H. J. Cody, speaking at the funeral service of the late Principal of the Toronto Conservatory of Music, yesterday afternoon in Convocation Hall.

Dr. Cody expressed deep regret at the sudden and unexpected death of Mr. Wilks.

"Character and capacity," declared Dr. Cody, "are the only coins that ring true on the counter of this world and the next. No man of character and capacity who has devoted his gifts to society can fail to have left influence for good behind him." Mr. Wilks was a high priest of those things that are beautiful in life and art, he said.

He had a rare combination of artistic temperament and sound business administration, continued Dr. Cody, and was a man kindly and genial to all. The President said that, like great musicians, he had wide intellectual interests and was a brilliant pianist. In harmonizing differences of opinion and differences of temperament, Mr. Wilks succeeded wonderfully, he stated.

The service was concluded with a prayer by Dr. Cody and the singing of the hymn "O God, Our Help in Ages Past."

Active pallbearers were George Lambert, Ernest Seitz, W. K. Gibb, Dr. Charles Peaker, Elie Spivak, and Frederick Silvester. Honorary pallbearers were H. H. Bishop, Floyd Chalmers, Lieut.-Col. H. L. Edmonds, Sir Ernest MacMillan, F. R. MacKelcan, F. K. Morrow, Walter Murdoch, W. D. Plant, G. D. Atkinson, Frank Blachford and Viggo Kihl. Lieut.-Comm. E. C. MacIntosh, Major Howard Morwick and Sqdn.-Ldr. George Duthie represented the Navy, Army and Air Force respectively.

U.N.B. Starts Club For Returned Veterans

Fredericton — (CUP) — A Veterans' Club has been started on the University of New Brunswick campus for the purpose of making rehabilitation easier for the university's ex-servicemen. Eleven students have enrolled to date.

The association plans to keep in close contact with the Canadian Legion, but at the same time to keep in touch with campus life and to guard against becoming an isolated and exclusive body.

This organization is similar to one recently founded at McGill University.

'44 School Nite Comes Dec. 1st

The annual "School Nite," put on by the "Engineers of S.P.S.," is scheduled to take place this year on Friday, Dec. 1, in Hart House, under the guidance of Jim Pickard, chairman of the committee.

The "School Nite Revue" is under the direction of Bob Sheppard, with Sally MacDonald assisting him. When asked about the show, Shep just grinned and dug deeper into his script.

Tickets for the Revue usually "sell out" to Schoolmen, so therefore it is unlikely that members of other faculties will be able to see the stage show. However, plans are being laid for the entertainment of those who will not succeed in obtaining these tickets.

All other students are invited to join in the dancing at School Nite and other features will include the Mermaids, movies, and a caricaturist.

Dr. L. G. Kilborn Discusses China

Dr. Leslie G. Kilborn, Director of the College of Medicine and Dentistry, and Professor of Physiology and Pharmacology, West China Union University, Chengtu, will speak on "The Ancient and the New in Chinese Medicine" before the Royal Canadian Institute tomorrow evening at 8:15 p.m. The lecture will be illustrated by lantern slides.

Born in China, Dr. Kilborn, the son of Canadian medical missionaries, was educated in Toronto, receiving his M.A., M.D., and Ph.D. from the University of Toronto.

In his lecture he will show how the old Chinese idea of disease was related to the Chinese concept of the universe. Their theories were mostly speculative as practically no dissection has been carried on.

Christian missionaries introduced scientific medicine into China a little more than one hundred years ago. In 1928 the Chinese government created the National Health Administration and adopted state medicine as the official programme of national health.

"We Wuz Robbed---Dirty Arts" Moaned Jessie O'Toole Sadly

Miss O'Toole, from Skule, was found huddled in a corner of the University Stadium yesterday afternoon about 4:30. She was sobbing pitifully as she gazed her fortieth bottle of milk. "No more beer for me," she told The Varsity as she looked towards the gridiron. Grouped around her was a forlorn group of Engineers who had had hopes of being the proud owners of the Mulock Cup again.

But that was at the end of the game. The first part started out with everybody in the gayest of spirits. The Artsmen, for instance, had gathered in the Junior Common Room at U.C., lured by a secluded public address system. At two o'clock the entire assembly moved up to the Arena.

Meanwhile, down at S.P.S., a crowd of energetic engineers snaked-danced to the bleachers behind the three girls and two lads who were to be their cheer leaders.

Screaming, laughing, cheering, shouting, singing, and wall-calling sailed from one end of the Stadium to the other. Mardi Harrison, Patsy Flynn, Ann Shepherd, Marilyn Duff, Betty Dowd, and Bea Thorkelson jumped to Appoint Spencer Victoria Chancellor

The appointment of Brigadier A. C. Spencer, C.B.E., of London, Ont., as the new Chancellor of Victoria University was announced last night. This is the first appointment under the new act by which the chancellor is not a member of the staff of the University.

At present, Brig. Spencer is Vice-Adjutant General of the Canadian Army at Defence Headquarters at Ottawa. The new chancellor graduated from S.P.S. in 1907 and is an engineer by profession.

Dr. W. T. Brown, LL.D., whom Brig. Spencer succeeds as chancellor, has held the position of president and vice-chancellor of Victoria University since July 1, under the new act.

Exams Close Lecture Series

The Artificial Respiration Course, offered by the University Health Service with the co-operation of the Athletic Association to all male students and staff of the University, ended yesterday.

Lectures and demonstrations of the theory and practice of resuscitation were given on Monday and Tuesday, and a practical examination and true-false theory test were held on Wednesday and Thursday.

Dr. R. W. I. Urquhart lectured on the anatomy of the human body and Mr. Mike Griffiths and Mr. Mac McCutcheon supervised the demonstration and practice. The lecturers emphasized the fact that in artificial respiration, seconds count.

Approximately 250 men attended the lectures and tried the examinations. As sufficient accommodation was not available, another examination will be held in the near future.

The Artificial Respiration Course is held during the fourth week of November in the fall term and in the fourth week in February during the spring term. Interim cards will be issued to successful candidates and these may be exchanged either for the crest or metal-coat badge.

the fore to lead the U.C. cheering section.

The teams trotted on to the field, a roar reverberated against the rafters, and down on the south end of the field rushed Sherry Reynolds, Norma Wilson and Margaret Yorick, with their "escorts," Jim Pickard and Bill Tamblin. Very pert they were, these visiting dental nurses, as they jumped and gestured, dressed in blue skirts and School sweaters and knee boots festooned with gold and blue ribbons.

In the S.P.S. section could be seen two Arts girls, doing their own little bit of cheering. "I want a touchdown," said the little blonde. "Yea, U.C.!" screeched the brunette. Trespassing into the Arts section were two Engineers who managed to get a grip on the U.C. microphone.

One pretty P. & H.E. freshe leaped forlornly across the front rail on the U.C. side and said, "Oh, yes, the game is certainly good, but we had better seats before." When asked what was wrong with the present seats, she sat up and said, "Oh, nothing, except we were over in the S.P.S. section before and they kicked us out."

Artsmen Win Rugby Title From Favored S.P.S. Team

Last Year's Verdict Reversed in Today's Epic Mulock Cup Final. Cheering Students Saw Highly-Touted Senior School Squad Go Down to Defeat Before a Light but Hard-driving U.C. Aggregation

NO MAJOR SCORES

By Al Cowan

U.C. surprised everyone, including themselves, by nosing out the favoured Sr. S.P.S. team by a 3-1 score in the final Mulock Cup game yesterday. There was a goodly crowd on hand to watch the classic which must have startled the players as they have had almost complete privacy for their games during the season. However, they quickly recovered to put on the most thrilling and best-played display of the season. The great hordes of Skulemen, emerging from the depths of Hart House and the King Cole Room to make with the cheers, easily walked off with the vocal honours. U.C.'s cheer leaderettes are always tops and this year's crop was no exception, beguiling many a School-mannish eye from the more serious business at hand.

The game was as close as the score indicates. Neither team was able to put across a major score. School had a tough break when Booth scored a touch in the second quarter only to have it called back because of illegal interference. Both teams made one placement attempt and both were blocked. The reputedly weak U.C. line held up remarkably well for the whole game. S.P.S. lost considerable yardage by roughing and holding penalties, and U.C. made several fumbles in the first half which School recovered to help their cause considerably.

The gold and blue started off with a rush in the first quarter and it looked for a while as if they were going to have another easy game. Sparked by Clare and Evans, they made yards four times in a row. However, Staley of U.C. broke up the drive by intercepting a pass at his own 25. Saltzman caught a pass and carried play into School territory. An S.P.S. offside and a Cranham plunge made yards and carried play in close enough for Staley to kick the first U.C. point of the game.

Early in the second quarter, School recovered a U.C. fumble on the U.C. 15-yard line. Evans and Clare made a first down and on the next play Booth went over only to have it called back for illegal interference. Later, U.C. had a close call when Clare unleashed a sixty-yard punt to Saltzman at the U.C. three-yard line. However, U.C. were able to hang onto the ball until half-time.

The feature play of the game came in the third quarter, when Staley tossed a thirty-five yard picture pass to big Bill Wade. The red and white team then attempted a placement which was blocked. U.C. recovered and on the next down kicked for a point to make the score 2-0 in their favour. Later in the same period Staley again kicked to Clare behind the line for the third U.C. single.

In the last stanza, School got in close enough to attempt to tie up with a placement only to have it blocked and Cranham, of U.C., recover on his 45. In the final minutes, School tried a few desperate pass plays but Cranham intercepted one with only a minute left, and U.C. held the ball until the final whistle.

Mlle Riese Speaker On Paris at Night

Mlle. L. Riese gave her impressions of "Paris à Nuit" at the second meeting of the Victoria College French Club last night. She began by describing the happenings in ordinary homes at eleven o'clock. At this hour many people were coming out of theatres and into cabarets, she said.

One of these cabarets, "Des Deux Anes," featured take-offs on government ministers, she explained. At another, "Le Lapin Agile," a picture of a rabbit was sketched for each patron. Upon examination the rabbit was found to have a remarkable resemblance to the patron, she said. A third cabaret, "Le Chat Noir," was frequented by writers who read out their unpublished works, stated Mlle. Riese.

In Conclusion

Yesterday there appeared in the editorial columns of The Varsity a very sound letter from Professor Cass-Beggs in which he referred to an earlier editorial on "Control of Education." The major problem which we raised, viz., the status of universities under a C.C.F. government has provoked widespread and vigorous debate.

Both The Varsity and Professor Cass-Beggs recognize the necessity of preserving the liberty to teach the truth as understood by the individual professor rather than as dictated by outside compulsion. In our editorial we were primarily deservicing the possibility of the abuse of state controlled university administration.

We cannot agree with our correspondent's suggestion that we made an "entirely unwarrantable deduction as to C.C.F. policy" from Mr. Coldwell's statement. We stated that the C.C.F. party "proposes to use its financial aid to exercise a control on the internal functioning of educational institutions." When Professor Cass-Beggs states: "It should be the duty of the state to insist upon it by whatever means are at its disposal, for example by withdrawing the funds which it gives to the University for the trust which is being abused," it is evident that he is upholding the very policy whose possibility we were deprecating. From both statements the same policy emerges, viz., that the state will use money to control the universities.

For the purpose of clarity we wish to restate briefly the two propositions put forward in our earlier editorial. These were:

1. The C.C.F. government will interfere with the internal functioning of universities and use such measures as removing aid to enforce policy.

2. There are possible dangers attached to such a policy.

Professor Cass-Beggs confirms our first proposition and devotes the remainder of his letter to showing that such a policy is not dangerous. When he says that "the state can tell Professor A that he must teach student B" we assume that he means that university administration will be controlled at least to the extent of allowing all students to enter. But no assurance has been given as to the precise limitation of state interference. No line of demarcation has been set to determine what is to separate public from private concern. Professor Cass-Beggs admits the need of "adequate safeguards" and he extolls the wisdom of our present independent Senate and Board of Governors. Those bodies of which he approves function freely only when there is no state interference.

According to yesterday's letter, university expansion with public funds does not involve "vested interests." It would seem, however, that no government is without vested interests. The most apparent desire of any government is to remain in power, and this very desire constitutes a strong vested interest itself. Would a C.C.F. government allow professors to advocate pure capitalism when its acceptance by the students might in future mean the demise of a government welded to one economic doctrine?

In the future many students will be enlisting their aid to public services, which will involve training in the social sciences and political economy. Professor Cass-Beggs has made a very valid distinction between the subject matter and personnel of the university. Our main fear has been that this distinction will not always be maintained in a university dependent on a state which exerts its control by such financial threats. The students entering into public life must be ensured of instruction based on academic freedom rather than state dictation.

It is feasible that some arrangement can be made whereby universities can receive state aid and open their doors to all, regardless of race or creed without casting their traditional freedoms into jeopardy. This is, however, the hard process of democracy to which our country has subscribed and will in the long run prove more satisfactory than an effort to legislate people, including universities, into tolerance.

Time For Decision

With the recent number of Air Force men, released from Active Service training in Canada, to carry on with their higher education at the University, we cannot help but sense the difficulties which will exist next fall when it is expected that hundreds will return. Authorities have hinted at figures which escape the imagination and one is left wondering what provision can be made to accommodate all the anticipated first-year students.

If it is considered that more will apply than can be accepted, would it be a possibility to refuse entrance to the secondary school students who will be matriculating this spring? Such an action would be a departure from the usual procedure but would largely solve the matter of facilities, at the same time forcing the high school student to "get out into the world" for a year or more before coming to university.

The idea, far from being fantastic, has its merits and might possibly lead to a more industrious and appreciative type of student entering the university.

How many have said, having spent a year or more "out" before entering college, "I would not have missed it for the world"? How often, when seeking advice on this very point, have Senior matriculants been told by their superiors, "Spend a year out by all means; it would be the best thing that you could do"?

Very few people have a concrete idea of what they want from life and in what capacity they want to serve, at the age of seventeen. Many are still wondering at twenty-seven. It would seem that a first-hand exposure to the social and economic influences of life, at the age of seventeen, does a great deal towards moulding sound judgment and rational character. Many feel that maturity may be achieved sooner and more successfully while working in the "field," rather than by following some course of study which may not be appealing but at least makes the recipient a college student.

It is a good question and one which could quite possibly be decided for the high school student by the educational authorities, leaving them no recourse but to retire in favour of the returning Armies.

Voice and Viol

Eaton Auditorium

No longer the dashing Don Jose of yesteryear, Richard Crooks has still the voice that brought him fame fifteen years ago. In a well-balanced programme he and William Primrose held a full-house audience spellbound at Eaton Auditorium last night.

Crooks sang two pieces before he captured his audience with a light composition by Handel, Silent Worship, and another Handel work, Love Sounds

SKUNK SKULE SKEME

Theft of the Skule cannon in the second quarter of yesterday's Mulock Cup final turned the tables on the Engineers' long-concocted plan to win the game with a fiendishly-conceived secret weapon. The Varsity is informed by neutral sources.

According to the scheme concocted last Monday in the Engineering Board of Strategy's secret hideout on a floating island in the Taddle, Skule's star booter was to send the ball towards the sidelines late in the third quarter on a trajectory delicately contrived to land it plop in the mouth of the waiting cannon.

At this moment three artillerymen, disguised as S.P.S. cheer-leaders, were to aim the weapon into the heavens and catapult the ball towards a passing U.A.S. training plane. It was to be the task of the crew of this plane to drop the ball behind the U.C. goal-line, to be fallen upon by a waiting Schoolman for a touchdown.

"It is difficult to see how they could have failed," stated George Huppenpuff, U.C. manager. "I have been taking the matter up with the Athletic Committee, and they can find nothing in the rule-books to invalidate such a procedure. School would have had to start the second half two men short, and those two men would be in the plane, properly uniformed. There is no rule stating that players must stick to the ground."

Later investigations disclosed that lightning calculators equipped with double-barreled slide-rules were stationed at microphones to shout wind deflection, gravitational coefficients, and other information over the loud-speakers to the plane crew.

"The scheme began to crack up when J. Doberman Pincher, University policeman, saw through the disguise of the artillerymen." The Varsity was told. "They were heavily rouged and their skirts went below their knees, evidently to conceal an inconsistent hairiness."

Dragged off to the dressing-rooms at half-time and subjected to alternate hot and cold showers, one of the conspirators finally broke down and produced a detailed outline of the whole operation from beneath "her" garter-belt.

Striking at the key-point of the nefarious operation, U.C. operatives then absconded with the cannon.

Promptly at the appointed time a camouflaged mystery plane circled over the gridiron, but eventually flew away in disgust when no ball was blasted up from below. The plane was believed to have been launched from the Engineering Department's wind-tunnel, but late last night evidence was insufficient to convict faculty members in that department of complicity in the plot.

Secrecy meanwhile shrouds the whereabouts of the cannon. It is rumoured that a special committee of the S.A.C. has appropriated it to fire the Most Typical Co-ed to safety over the heads of a date-hungry mob following the indelible at the forthcoming War Services Drive.

An investigation is in progress.

Meds Firsts Defeat Vic To Take Arts Soccer Cup

Two Periods Overtime Necessary to Break Tie: Winning Goal Scored in Last Ten Minutes

HARRISON STARS

The final soccer match for the Arts Faculty Cup was won by Meds yesterday over Vic, in a game that was played to the limit. It was tied 1-1 at the end of regular playing time, and during the second period of overtime Harrison took advantage of a break near the Vic goal to put the game, and the trophy, on ice for the medics.

Meds played like champions throughout the game, and it was mainly due to the starry goalkeeping of Elliott for Vic that the match was extended the twenty minutes. Vic opened strong in the first half with Seemungal, Waithe and Roberts providing the action against a slightly more potent Meds line-up, featuring Antoni Chang and Shinobu. Shots on goal were few, but late in the half Shinobu broke through the Vic defence and beat Elliott for the opener.

Through most of the second half Meds kept the play in the Vic end, but they were unable to score, even on some of the most open goal-mouth passes seen this year. With three minutes to play, Hassanali and Seemungal broke away and Hassanali slid the ball past Feverer to keep the game red-hot.

In the first period of overtime neither team scored, but early in the first half of the final extra ten minutes, Harrison notched the winning goal for Meds.

Meds—Antoni, Spooner, Fyfe, Wilford, Chang, Feverer, Stranks, Gibson, Harrison, Nikaido, Shinobu, Bell-Irving. Vic—Elliott, Hoeniger, Howlett, Seunarine, Hassanali, Aird, Wainsley, Roberts, Waithe, Hikichi, Seemungal, Cockburn, Horning.

the Alarm, from Acis and Galatea. The lieder group of four compositions was the highlight of the Richard Crooks part of the programme. Crooks has deserved lieder for some years, and his return to these art-songs is very welcome. Three works of this group were from The Maid of the Mill by Schubert. In the second of these songs, Mine, he handled the difficult German and technical demands especially well. In a few spots the German pronunciation had a tendency to be muffled as he slurred over difficult phrases, but on the whole, this was the best thing he did in the evening.

In the English group there were two pieces, which brought great applause, but which would have been better left off the programme, the old and hackneyed Sea-Fever, set to music by Ireland, and There Is No Death by O'Hara. This last was, in view of the world situation today, and the possible effect on the audience, in rather doubtful taste.

A tenor is always in danger of being overpowered by a heavy-handed pianist, and this unfortunately happened last night. Although he has had the same accompanist for some years, Crooks was at a disadvantage in that the pianist has only one volume, loud, and only one rhythm, thumping.

The real brilliancy of the programme was given by William Primrose, violinist. One of the first and finest exponents of this instrument on the concert stage, Primrose has a mastery of a

HONOURS TO U.C.

Well, U.C. certainly provided the unexpected yesterday when they defeated Sr. S.P.S. 3-1 to win the Mulock Cup. Very few around the campus, one of which, perhaps, was George Hougham, manager of U.C., gave them even fifty-fifty chance of upsetting their powerful finalist rivals. Hougham maintained that his team was going to take the Schoolmen all along, sticking to his belief in the face of big odds among those who were supposed to know Intramural intricacies well enough to predict the eventual winner.

Whether this was true confidence in his material or just a process of trying to talk himself into the fact that they might have a remote possibility of taking the Cup will never be known now that it's theirs. We were fooled, but pleasantly so, the same as the rest of you.

U.C. didn't beat Sr. S.P.S. They just held their own with them and stood aside, restraining tempers that tried hard to flare up, to watch School beat themselves by means of many and varied yardage penalties for off-sides, rough play, holding, and such. The great possible scores they cost them were needless ones, and among other things they cost them a touchdown, enough margin to win handily. U.C. turned in their best effort of the season as every man went out there and did his particular job well. The line, the backfield, and the subs all played an excellent brand of rugby.

Sr. S.P.S. and their supporters seemed stunned to see this highly-rated team go down to defeat. Lusty "Toke Oke" is at the start of the game fell down to mere whispers towards the end as the loss gradually became a real certainty to them. We thought Gus Campbell turned in a marvellous display at snap. He received a head injury towards the end of the game and was forced to leave the field, amid hearty applause from the stands.

Vern Booth played very well at half throughout the game, sparking the Schoolmen in nearly all of their downfield drives. Charlie Evans was another outstanding man for them at the quarterback spot. Outside of these three and possibly Ross Clare and a few others, there was entirely too much rough play from School to warrant anyone else's even being mentioned.

Others of U.C. who deserve credit are Cranham, for his offensive efforts in plunging and broken-field running, Staley for his tackling from tertiary position and all round effective playing, Goldberg for his play at middle and Currah at inside. U.C. certainly outdid themselves in walking off with their first Mulock Cup in many years.

Varsity Hockey . . .

A squad of about thirty players turned up at the Arena yesterday to give Ace Bailey plenty of material to work with at his second practice of the year. By running them in games against each other, using shifts of ten at a time, every man got in lots of skating. He said that he expected to see the team round into shape within the next three weeks to a month, and particularly liked about ten or twelve of the men he had seen so far. He expressed regret that Kossiak could not play for the team, due to his obligations to Tip Tops and Statfords. Bailey was also anxious to get practices for the team during the Christmas holidays if he could round up enough of the players who would come out then.

May Cancel Program After First Performance

Kingston — (CUP — Rumours at Queen's University are to the effect that the performance of the Drama Guild Radio Workshop may be cancelled permanently after the production of The Key on Saturday. The Key, formerly scheduled for 11:30 p.m. last Sunday, was cancelled by Principal R. C. Wallace on the grounds that the University does not permit dramas on Sunday. It was further maintained that the time was too late for those living in residence. As no other regular time for the broadcast can be obtained, it is feared that the Workshop may have to be cancelled indefinitely.

OFF WITH HER HEAD . . .

We have no doubt but that will be the cry, uttered in a loud fiendish voice about 10:30 this morning, when the teams aspiring for the basketball crown read this. Anyway, we are doing as we promised and forecasting the winners of each league. Peggy did this to a point yesterday, but made a slip-up in saying U.C. Jr. instead of U.C. II as she meant to. Anyway, the Women's Sports Department puts out its neck and invites all and sundry to bring along the axes. You can use them, if you can catch us.

League A.—The much-publicized Vic A team.

League B.—U.C. II, the hottest team in their league.

League C.—Meds-S.P.S., as yet unbeaten, along with the others in this list.

League D.—P.H.E. Freshies, our bet to provide surprises, and lots of them. In the finals, P.H.E. Freshies stand a very good chance of pulling out of the semi-finals ahead of all the rest to be beaten by Vic A, the ultimate champions. At this rate we haven't left ourselves even one escape route to get out of all these wild statements. However, we hope we won't need such a route.

THE DAILY BUGLE . . .

Look, fellows! Couldn't cha get together and arrange some method of relaying scores down to the Varsity office. Last night we were unable to get around to getting scores till nearly the wee sma' hours. Then it was pretty late, or so some woman told us when we called up a certain campus residence, and got the wrong number. Was she mad! The worst was that we hadn't dialed this number, but were only on the receiving line when she answered the phone.

All we could find out was that St. Hilda's Jr. and U.C. Jr. battled it out to a 12 all tie, and that the St. Hilda Freshies defeated Meds-S.P.S. Freshies 10-5. The person who finally did answer the phone at "the certain campus residence" told us that she thought Vic A had defeated Vic B, and we heard vague rumours to the effect that P.H.E. Fr. had defeated Dental Nurses. In both these cases we will not state definitely. If either of the above losers should have won, we will reprint our estimates of the winning teams in each league tomorrow. This is called getting out of a tough situation gracefully, we hope.

GOLDSTEIN'S PERIQUE MIXTURE

The Same Old Formula Since 1883

A high-grade blend of Turkish, Perique, Virginia and Latakia Tobacco, approximating those excellent imported brands made in Scotland and England.

Every user of it is an ardent advocate of its merits.

Its popularity is growing fast. You cannot pay less and get as good; you cannot buy better if you pay more.

For the present it is packed in a heavy waxed bag, in a cardboard container. It keeps in excellent condition.

It is put up in half pounds and sells at $1.50, plus tax; and also in a pocket package containing 1/10 lb. at 30 cents, plus tax.

with frank rasky

Don't sneer at The Varsity's drama critics. The downtown press pull their horns, too. For instance, the drama critic of a Toronto evening paper--not the Telegram--did a fine, stirring review of Thunder Rock which opened at Hart House yesterday.

The reviewer's adjectival praises gushed forth... "brilliant"... "unique"... "Orson Welles couldn't have done better"... And then you read finally the critic's obscure comment that the performance had been executed by the Players' Guild of Upper Canada College. A MAN MUST SERVE HIS TIME TO EVERY TRADE. SAVE CENSORS. CRITICS ALL ARE READY MADE.

Don't you know there's a war on dept.:

The faces of two students are still burning as a consequence of a small incident that took place the other day in a certain Bloor Street sweetery.

It was after C.O.T.C. drill, so, naturally, these two students rushed to this sweetery to get some coffee as a reviving stimulant. But you know how sweeteries are these days. The boys waited around for 20 minutes to get a table, and when they finally did get one, they had to wait on tenterhooks (whatever tenterhooks are) until they finally got the eye of the waitress.

Then, to their perplexity, they discovered that there was no sugar with their coffee. So one of them bawled out somewhat rudely: "How about our sugar, Sugar?"

"I'm sorry, but we're right out of sugar," the waitress replied, ignoring the overdone quip.

"I demand that we have sugar," one student insisted.

"I'm sorry."

"T'll tell you what, honey," came the impatient jester's response, "you put your little finger into the coffee and I'm sure that'll sweeten it up."

While the two astonished scholars looked on, the waitress smiled tenderly. She put one little finger into the coffee.

She dipped another finger in. Then she let her whole hand dive into the java. Then she turned and walked off, an evil smile curling her lips.

As one of our former Varsity editors once said, women appal us. Not only that--they have no originality at all, at all.

This conviction dawned on us a few weeks ago, the day after The Varsity printed on its front page the picture of a certain pretty babe, taken by a certain well-known photographer whose first name is Pasquale.

Just out of curiosity, we were determined to find the reaction of co-eds to this startling event, and so we took a little Gallup poll. The reactions, in case you're interested you sociologists, showed how deeply rooted we are in imitative social patterns, or something.

It went this way: (a) the girl would study the photo deeply for a minute; (b) she would look envious for a minute; (c) she would exclaim: "Oh, that photographer could glamourize anybody. She probably doesn't look like that at all!"; (d) she would start up suddenly, eyes gleaming; (e) with a sigh she would exclaim, "I wonder if the photographer could do the same for me?"

S.A.C. Backs Drive For War Funds

Contest for Typical Co-ed Again Will be the Feature Attraction; All Faculties Encouraged to Enter

WILL HOLD STREET DANCE

The Students' Administrative Council is sponsoring a War Services Drive, to be held on Wednesday, Dec. 6, for the purpose of raising funds for the Canadian Red Cross and the Salvation Army War Funds.

The programme will be such that all faculties will be able to enter into the functions of the day with their entries in the parade and "Typical Co-ed Contest" which are to be features of the noon hour. As an additional attraction, Warden Bickerteth has consented to be present to choose the best-dressed man.

Co-eds will sell blue tags and a public address system will be used throughout the Drive to make announcements and play records. A street dance will be held in front of Convocation Hall, weather permitting; a Salvation Army Mobile Canteen will be on hand to sell coffee and doughnuts.

All faculties are urged to support the Drive to the utmost in order to ensure its success.

Bishop Describes Old Tomb Tiles

Bishop W. C. White, Director of the School of Chinese Studies, lectured on "Tomb Tile Pictures" at the Museum Friday afternoon.

The rectangular tomb tile pictures were found in tombs in a mountain range near Old Loyang, thirteen miles from the present town of Loyang. They were first noticed between the years 1925 and 1932 by Belgian engineers who wandered among these old tombs.

Describing the tiles, Bishop White stated that they were made in wooden moulds and lifted off carefully before they were completely dry. Then water was used to soften the surface and wooden blocks, with designs in relief, were pressed against the tiles with the result that designs were incised on both sides of the tiles.

When they had been dried sufficiently, they were burned evenly in kilns, and colours were sometimes used on them. They were from four to six feet long, from one and a half feet wide, and five or six inches thick.

The tile pictures, which are a part of the collection of the Royal Ontario Museum, exemplify both the stylistic and naturalistic styles of drawing, asserted Bishop White. They probably belong to the latter part of the Classical Age, in the third century B.C., and contain hunting scenes and pictures of soldiers, animals and birds. Since the same personal style was used throughout these pictures, they were obviously drawn by one person, stated Bishop White.

Green Issue Deadline Set For December 8th

Contributions for the green issue of The Varsity—the issue annually dedicated to University literature, must be submitted before December 8, it was announced today.

Prizes, as in other years, will be presented for the best short stories, the best essays, poetry, and pieces of art.

Contributions will be judged by the editor of The Varsity and members of the faculty, whose names will be announced later.

All entries must be brought to The Varsity office, Room 42A, University College by Dec. 8. The green issue will be off the press on Dec. 13.

Record Hour

The record programme, held daily from 3:45 to 5:00 in the Women's Common Room at U.C., is open to the men and women of every college and faculty.

HOLD MORE VIC DEBATES

The ever-increasing interest in the Victoria College Debating Parliament forced John Speers, Prime Minister, to create a new portfolio in his government. Jim Younger, III Pass, who has been entrusted with the new job, will become Minister of Education.

The extension of debating activity is taking the form of Monday afternoon debates, held in Alumni Hall, at 3:45. In an interview with The Varsity, Jim Younger said: "The afternoon debates are intended to be more informal than the evening ones in order to encourage speaking from the floor after the main addresses. We hope to provoke a spirited discussion and anyone who is interested in debating is more than welcome."

The first of these Monday afternoon series is taking place today when the subject of the debate will be: "Resolved that the Salsberg anti-discrimination bill is an unwarranted infringement of personal liberty."

Harding Vowles and Joan Thompson will support the motion, while Les Picking and Kay Morrison will be the speakers for the opposition.

Changes Upheld By Pharmacy

"The Council of the College has approved on principle all the suggested changes in the course in Pharmacy," said Dean R. O. Hurst of the Faculty of Pharmacy.

"However," he went on to say, "final adoption rests on two things. First, the Ontario Pharmacy Act must be amended, and secondly, our building facilities must be enlarged."

The Pharmacy Act was passed in 1871 and calls for a course to be taught in two terms. It can be changed only by a Provincial Government ruling.

At present, as outlined in an earlier issue of The Varsity, the Faculty of Pharmacy feel that a longer course in Pharmacy is necessary to teach subjects in keeping with modern requirements in this field. They also hold that school training, in view of recent trends, is more desirable than apprenticeship.

Introduction in the new course would require greater laboratory facilities than there are at present, and this, plus an expected increase in enrolment, make a building programme necessary. The College feels that wartime restrictions preclude any possibility of this for some time.

Some thought must also be given to men now in the services who started their course under the present system. Arrangements must be made to allow them to complete their course under present requirements.

EDITORIAL

Our Concern

According to a recent survey of civilian opinion, there is a growing cynicism among Canadian youth regarding the future. National questionnaires evidence the increased lack of faith in the present status of education or employment, citizenship or religion.

Prevalent scepticism signifies not only a distrust of the past but also denotes an instability that bodes ill for our present generation. This predominant tendency possibly arises from the fact that we are passing through a period of transition from an individualistic to a more co-operative way of life.

For centuries, youth has assumed that society owes it a debt without realizing that the individual and society are interdependent. World expansion and the broadening of frontiers brought with it a spirit of individualism. Concomitant with this individualism came the one-sided attitude asserting society's debt to us. Now that expansion has been superseded by consolidation, individualism must accordingly give way to increased harmony among the members of society.

It is in the midst of this transition (broadly speaking) that youth has been showing violent symptoms of insecurity. In the last fifty years the foundations of individualism have been undermined. The reaction has manifested itself in various schemes from fascism to democracy. At the end of the last war in many parts of Europe, youth became the slave of dictatorship. The idea of a more co-operative way of life appears to have been just as novel in the 20's and 30's as it is now.

Canadian youth is speedily losing any access which it has to stability by facing the future with a sceptical mind. A critical attitude is essential to original thinking as long as it does not degenerate into cynicism. The adherents of the latter are prone to overlook the reciprocal action of society and the individual. Perhaps the one example illustrating this interdependence is that of a university student. Society presents him with educational facilities but his products are, nevertheless, available to the whole of that society.

Such education, then, appears to be our sole link towards the establishment of a better-balanced civilization. Those attending The University are participating in a mutual responsibility. It is a fact which must be comprehended fully if we are to avoid the present trend of our generation. Those who tend to shy away from "contributing," a talent with which they are adequately equipped cannot objectively view the double aspect of the problem of the relation of the microcosm and macrocosm.

art, music and drama

Grand Opera

Faust

Faust, as performed Saturday afternoon in Massey Hall by the San Carlo Opera Company, might have been an effective production, but for the amateurish work of Virginia Pemberton in the role of Marguerite.

The gigantic figure of Harold Kravitt as Mephistopheles towered above the other members of the cast. His singing and acting was powerfully dramatic. Mario Palermo as Faust and the supporting cast had their moments. Especially fine were Valentine's aria Avant de quitter ces lieux. The choruses were enthusiastic and vigorous and the ballet danced with gay abandon.

J.D.

Il Trovatore

If all the principals had acted and sung like Margery Mayer, the San Carlo Opera Company's closing performance would have been beyond cavil. As the gypsy Azucena she held the audience with every gesture, acting superbly and displaying true intonation at every note.

Beside her the other characters acted like puppets and sang with almost memorable insipidity; indeed, the Count (Stephen Ballarín) deserves special mention for his intriguing habit of singing rustily beneath his beard, as though to himself.

Scenery and lighting achieved adequate effects throughout eight changes, with nothing more than canvas backdrops; nor should the Anvil Chorus be forgotten, lustily rendered with anvils flashing flinty blue sparks around the campfire on the darkened stage.

Student Talent

Wynilwood Musicals

A musical interesting in its variety and contrasts was presented last night by four talented young musicians.

Fred Milne, violinist, opened the programme with two well-known compositions by Fritz Kreisler, both played with a delicate lilting touch. The brilliant Cordoba by Montini as a fitting contrast to the soulful Meditation from Massenet's Thais.

Come and Trip It, by Handel, was the opening number of the second section, sung by Miss Margaret Kerfoot, mezzo-soprano. Two beautiful songs by Greig and the contrasting English song, Sweet Chatter That Led My Steps Abroad, rounded out a well-chosen and exquisitely sung group.

Miss Jacqueline Doherty, 'cellist, continued the programme with two movements from the Marcello Sonata in F major. These were followed by two numbers arranged by Miss Doherty's teacher and accompanist, Professor Leo Smith, Willow, an Elizabethan air, and Top of the Cork Road. Miss Doherty played with a vigour and tone not common among 'cellists.

The evening was brought to a successful close by the playing of two Chopin Etudes and the ponderous Liszt Hungarian Rhapsody, by James Macdonald, pianist. The limitations of the Wynilwood piano seemed to melt under Mr. Macdonald's flawless technique.

touching the vocal and dramatic splendour achieved by the Columbia Opera Company which played here a few weeks ago, the present company, playing in Macgavill's Cavalleria Rusticana and Leoncavallo's Pagliacci Friday evening, was singularly below scratch.

There were only two redeeming features: Mary Henderson, whose vibrant portrayal of Nedda surpassed even that of Ethel Barrymore-Colt who reproduced that role here with the same company three years ago, and the musical accompaniment of Nicholas Rescigno.

THE LABOUR TO C.C.F.

The resolution that "the best interests of Labour demand an alliance with the C.C.F. party" was passed by a large majority at the second session of the U.C. Parliament, held on Friday in the Junior common room.

Tracing the history of Labour, the Rt. Hon. Dennis Wrong, leader of the government, claimed that trade unions are not a substitute but a supplement for political action, and declared that the bourgeoisie cannot decide what Labour should do. He added that there was no essential difference between the views of Labour and the C.C.F. party.

The Rt. Hon. R. W. Bell, leader of the opposition, contended that Labour must not unite with the same party all the time, but should ally itself with that party whose policy would benefit Labour the most. The C.C.F. party draws its strength from the industrial East and the rural West—two masses of votes. "How can they be welded into a successful machine?" he asked.

The Rt. Hon. Roy Clarke declared that Sweden, Australia and New Zealand have shown that Labour has every reason to affiliate with Socialist parties. He referred to the Canadian Congress of Labour convention held in September, when the president stated that Labour was tired of begging favours from the political factions.

The Hon. John Harbison drew attention to the article in Time magazine which claimed that the C.C.F. government in Saskatchewan had accomplished no more than any other government. The C.C.F. party believes in nationalization. "Agitation for nationalization begins with each group wanting preferential treatment," he said. "The elements of Labour would be as well off under another party."

During the business portion of the session Betsy Mosbaugh was elected leader of the opposition, on the resignation of the Rt. Hon. Mr. B. Bell, and Ben Orenstein was elected permanent Speaker of the House.

To Hold Panel Discussion On Modern Education

"Education in the Modern World" will be the subject of a symposium to be held on Thursday, Nov. 30, by the U.C.-Trinity Classical Association. A panel of eight students representing various courses will discuss their views on the values and important aspects of education. Following this the meeting will open for questions and rebuttals in the manner of an open forum.

Monie Bean will represent Sociology IV; Gordon Cameron, Medical Interns; Douglas Currie, IV S.P.S.; Bill Fairley, III General; Martin Oswald, IV Classics; Catherine Sygne, IV M. and P.; and Vera Wilson, IV Household Economics. The meeting, which is open to members of all faculties, will be held in St. Hilda's Common Room.

Sunday Concert

Cornelius Ysselstyn, 'cellist, will give the concert in the Great Hall of Hart House at 9 p.m. on Sunday next, 3rd December. Frances Marr will play the accompaniment. Representatives of the various colleges and faculties are asked to call at the Warden's office today for their allotment of tickets for this concert. The programme will be given later in the week.

Chinese Medicine Described

Ancient Chinese Medical Ideas Resembled Those of Greeks, Doctor Tells Royal Canadian Institute

STATE MEDICINE NOW

The medicine of China like that of Europe, before the scientific era, was determined by the beliefs of her ancients, said Doctor Leslie Kilbourne, M.D., M.A., Ph.D., in his address to the Royal Canadian Institute in Convocation Hall Saturday evening. Doctor Kilbourne's subject was "The Ancient and the New in Chinese Medicine."

Like the Greeks, the Chinese believed that health was a question of perfect balance in the body of the four humors, which in turn are affected by climate and season. Doctor Kilbourne described some of the more amusing beliefs which the ancient Chinese held, including the theories that the circulatory system had its beginning in the feet, and that the capacity of the human stomach was twenty-eight quarts.

In the old Chinese anatomy books the brain was classed with bone matter and the condition of the pulse was thought to be indicative of the state of various internal organs, many of which as yet remain undiscovered by modern anatomists.

According to Doctor Kilbourne, modern Chinese medicine began with the advent of European and American missionaries in the eighteen-thirties into China.

The crusade to modernize Chinese medicine, Doctor Kilbourne continued, has resolved itself into the problems of building up a medical literature in a language which has no medical nomenclature, and of organizing the members of the native medical profession in order to maintain Western standards.

In conclusion, Dr. Kilbourne said that in spite of the scarcity of doctors, nurses and dentists in China, and the difficulties which follow in the wake of famine, drought and war, the Chinese Medical Association, formed in 1932, has already built up a system of state medicine which in the future will provide adequate medical care for China's 400 million people.

Students Favor Return of Japanese

Vancouver—(CUP)—The University of British Columbia reports that 60 per cent of the student body are in favour of allowing Canadian-born Japanese to return to the University after the war.

On a recent poll conducted by Ubysee, the campus newspaper, 365 students were interviewed to determine their attitude on the matter. Sixty per cent of them stated that Japanese students should be excluded during the present conflict, but should be allowed to return after Japan had been defeated. They specified that this privilege be extended only to Canadian-born Japanese.

Thirty-six per cent of the students interviewed are against allowing any Japanese to enter the University whether Canadian-born or otherwise, and a small minority preferred to give no opinion.

Cake Fight Precedes Trinity Athletic Dance

Trinity College held their annual Athletic Dance at Strachan Hall last night.

The dance was preceded by the traditional sophi-frosh cake fight, which took place on the back campus. In this fight the freshmen attempt to carry a heavily iced cake through a line of sophs to a goal amid a shower of rotten eggs, tomatoes, and additional garbage. Many hits were scored on the freshmen, who arrived at the dance rather late as a result. The remainder of the cake was served later with a buffet supper.

There were several elimination and spot dances during the evening and many prizes were given out.

June-Bug and Alf the Elf went roller-skating Friday night. Because of their rather dubious connection with The Varsity they got in on Annie Oakleys... (Annie was too tired to go). After a twenty-minute argument as to what size was his foot, Alf got his skates on and was ready to start.

The pair knew that their adventure would have to appear somewhere in the columns of Ye Olde Varsity, but they didn't know quite where.

"I guess it's Art, Music and Drama," the Elf said, trying to look profound. "Must be Art... we're sure paintin' the town red tonight," June-Bug chortled happily.

Alf was sure it was Music, when the birds started to sing as he was carried off the floor. But in truth this was Drama, Shark Drama.

"We'll put it in the sports page," said June-Bug. "Wonderful sport but too many referees blowing whistles." "Can't go on the sports page," cried Alf sadly. "The Directorate would never approve... too much travelling."

Suddenly Alf looked at June-Bug gravely. "Why do little ducks walk softly, June-Bug?"

"I dunno. Why do they?" "Because they can't walk, hardly. Yak, yak, yak," and Alf the Elf went into hysterics.

June-Bug, muttering to himself,
